Carranza fell because the people thought he had sold out to the same Wall Street that he had so long resisted. He also fell because of the support that personal enemies, bandits and some bourgeois politicians gave his opponents. But the primary cause was the general feeling that Bonillas, the government choice for President, was Wall Street's man, and that the story of the $1,000,000 campaign fund furnished by New York bankers, was true.

The masses flocked to Obregon because they thought he was the champion of the common people. They liked his brusque, unostentatious manner. They admired him more then ever on May 9 when he rode on horseback into Mexico City and, in his shirt-sleeves, his face unshaven for at least a couple of weeks, he made a speech from the balcony of the plain, old-fashioned St. Francis Hotel. They still admire him and they are willing to give him time to accomplish what they want—if he will. But if he doesn't—and it will be practically impossible for him to, even if he tries—they will throw him overboard even as they discarded Carranza.

Wall St. Planned Long Civil War—and Intervention.

There is some reason to think that American finance-capital is putting up the money for the election of Bonillas and in urging Carranza to send troops to Sonora to force Obregon's people to vote against their favorite son, deliberately sought to precipitate civil war. It is also likely that my original statement that guns were furnished the Sonorans from the United States, was true, and that American Big Business coldbloodedly played one side against the other. I am certain that I was right in saying that Wall Street expected a long-drawn out civil war which would make intervention inevitable, and result in a repetition of the Texas incident of 1848.

But developments were different than Wall Street anticipated. The people had supported Carranza as long as they considered him the enemy of Wall Street when he thrust Bonillas on them, they revolted. Their revolt was genuine and almost spontaneous. The fact that the revolution was bloodless and met practically no opposition, proves this. The people were a unit or nearly so.

Seeing the immense popularity of Obregon, Wall Street changed its tactics. Seeing how unanimous was the backing of the people, it realized that thre could be no civili war—all the fighters would be on one side. So it made overtures to Obregon. And meanwhile Obregon, fearful of interference from above the Rio Grande, was making overtures to American Big Business to protect himself. Thus the two parties to the contract came together—the one because to subsidize a revolutionary government would be cheaper than to finance a counter-revolution or wage a war against it, the other because afraid of being attacked and overthrown.

Indirect Control of Mexico.

So, there will be no armed intervention. No annexation. No repetition of the Texas case or the Panama affair. None of these things will be necessary. Obregon has compromised sufficiently satisfactorily.

American finance-capital will get what it wants—or most of it. It is very probable that Obregon wil linsist on a better enforcement of labor alws, on better wages and better working conditions generally in return for the friendly manner in which he will deal with American capitalists here, but the fact remains that he will not undertake anything radical.

"Soviet Mexico" is still some distance away. Instead of a proletarian dictatorship, Mexico is cheduled to have a form of Liberalism like, perhaps, what William Jennings Bryan might initiate if he were President of the United States.

A big business boom is already anticipated by merchants, miners and oil men. The worries of those Americans who remembered Obregon's vigorous tactics of a few yars ago, have disappeared with the authoritative assurance that there will be "no rough stuff." Stores are painting their buildings. Business men are buying more stock. Credit facilities which grew pinched in the last few weeks, are stretching out again. The Y. M. C. A. is planning considerable extension of its work having just received a donation of $1,000 from the munitions department and a pledge of a steady bonus of $100 a month from the government-owned railroad. These remembrances were promised by the outgoing regime in the days when Carranza thought he was going to elect Ambassador Ygnacio Bonillas and was lavishly spending money alleged to have come from Wall Street. The Y. M. C. A. people were fearful that the new administration might not respect the promise, but their fears have just been set at ease. The $1,000 has already been paid. The railroad money will be paid shortly, the officials explaining that they must wait a week or so as Director General Fontes of the Carranza government, took all the funds away with him when he fled. However, the money is a sure thing, and confidence has been restored in the "Y" as well as elsewhere.

Bidding for Popularity.

The Obregonistas made themselves popular with newspapers at the outset by cutting down the mailing rates on second class matter to 4 centavos a kilo. The rate had been 6 centavos and the Carranza postmaster general had raised it to 10 just a few weeks ago.

The national mint is busy coining a new supply of 5, 10 and 20 centavo pieces to relieve the wretched shortage of small change, due to speculation in silver and bronze, that had caused vast inconvenience and even sufferring during the past few months and at different other periods in the Carranza administration.

An amnesty has been promptly declared for all former exiles who left Mexico under Carranza as well as for adherents of Carranza who opposed the Obregon revolution, providing, of course, that they lay down arms. Political exiles in Mexico who came here from the United States and other countries to avoid participation in the war or to escape persecution, will be protected, it is expected. When I interviewed Obregon in February, he told me that no political fugitive here would be extradited back to this own country.

Efforts will be made to put the educational system of the country on a respectable basis, it is also claimed, and there is certainly need enough of it. At present the City of Mexico maintains only 95 primary schools with an attendance of 35,491 pupils, less than half the number of two years before. Steadily the money that should have gone to schools has been cut down to permit bigger graft for generals and politicians under Carranza. The big teachers' strike of a year ago was the result of the non-payment of salaries to the teachers of the Federal District for several months. In 1910, at the time of the last census, there were 42,400 children over 6 years of age who could not read and write and in the whole Federal District an illiterate population of about a quarter of a million souls. The figures would be no less today. Obviously, there is opportunity for useful work if the new administration undertakes it honestly.

While there is reason to believe that the new regime will be in many respects an improvement over the preceding one, it must not be forgotten that it will be so deeply obliged to American Big Business that it will be able to do very little that conflicts with the profits on foreign investments. Insofar as it can improve conditions without touching those profits, it will be free to do so, but the minute incomes are hit, it will have to compromise or face the old, old threat of intervention. Obregon is too wise to throw away the political prize that he wanted, by blindly defying Wall Street. In all probability, he will yield as gracefully as he can whenever mooted points come up.

Placating American Big Business

Every possible effort has been made by the leaders of the revolution to make American interests friendly and to pave the way for recognition by the government in Washington. In an exclusive interview with the Associated Press in Tacubaya, a town in the suburbs of Mexico City, on May 8, General Obregon declared:

"What strengthens the United States strengthens Mexico. What weakens the United States weakens Mexico. My ideal for the relations between Mexico and the United States is to make the international border like the Canadian boundary, withdrawing troops, axcept customs officials. Carranza's interpretation of the Monroe doctrine was a mistake, although I believe Carranza was perfectly sincere in his belief that his policy was best for Mexico."

Governor de la Huerta of Sonora, Provisional President of Mexico, told a United Press correspondent: "I have a great, strong desire to see Mexico a field for safe investment, for honest and legitimate investment in accord with the spirit of the world..... The revolutionary government promises stabilization of the Tampico oil question. As we feel that the real interests of the government and the oil companies are the same, we will meet at the proper point. We promise a satisfactory and sensible arrangement." "You do not feel your government can be called Socialistic?" he was asked. "Absolutely not," was de la Huerta's answer. "It is entirely directed to democracy and seeking the betterment of the poorer classes by orderly means."

Robert V. Pesqueria, financial agent of the revolutionary government, has stated that "the revolution proposes to consolidate all the elements of the country for united peace and progress and to respect foreigners and their interests, with which we aim to maintain the most cordial relations."

Ralph H. Turner, Mexico City correspondent for the United Press, told me the other night that he "guessed Obregon would be good, all right, and cooperate with American Big Business."

A dispatch in the Kansas City Post of May 12, said: "It was learned that an agent of General Obregon, leader of Mexico's revolutionary armies, visited New York last week for a series of conferences with big business interests. The Obregon aide, General Ramon de Negri, carried Obregon's pledge to protect American citizens and American property rights in Mexico."

The Wall Street Journal remarked a short time ago that petroleum companies need not be disturbed over the increase of the export duty on petroleum from 30 cents to 54 cents a ton, scheduled to go into effect May 25, for "from all appearances Carranza will not be in Mexico on the date when the increase is scheduled to go into effect."

An extra of "El Heraldo de Mexico", the Mexico City daily owned by ex-Governor Alvarado of Yucatan, erstwhile "Socialist" (?) and now slated for Secretary of the Treasury according to reports, carried an account of a banquet in New York attended by E. L. Doheny, Secretary of the Interior Lane and representatives of the Standard Oil Co., the Continental Rubber Co., the Texas Oil Co., the Southern Oil Transport Co., Island Oil Co., United Fruit Co., Continental Oil Co. In this banquet, according to "El Heraldo," Obregon was acclaimed as "the men that Mexico needed" and great satisfaction was expressed with the termination of the revolution.

The attitude of a prominent official in the Texas Oil Co. is of interest as revealing the change of mind that he experienced. In the first few days of the Obregon uprising he told certain persons confidentially that the situation looked very bad. "Obregon is as bad as a Bolshevist," he asserted. Some days after Obregon had entered Mexico City, however, he told these same persons that he was satified that "the new government is going to do the right thing and Obregon won't repeat any of his radical business of a few years ago." He had previously declared that "Bonillas would be a much better man for American interests. He was plainly for Bonillas would be a much better man for American interests." He was plainly for Bonillas in the first place but later received assurance that the new administration would do nothing antagonistic.

Tampico correspondents assure me that the "Socialist Party" in that city held a convention that endorsed Obregon almost unanimously, but which appears to have been organized by Obregonistas as a campaign auxiliary, having no previous existence, is practically a bourgeois organization. At the convention the subject of Russia was not mentioned, the word Bolshevism was taboo, and the principal speakers for Obregon asserted that he would "enforce labor laws already existing." That this had not been done heretofore, is true enough, and if the promise is kept, the workers will benefit materially yet this can hardly be confused with Socialism.

The status of labor in Tampico has been especially wretched for although high wages are paid in many cases by the petroleum companies, the prices are outrageous and far out of proportion to the wages. It is practically impossible to get for less than $1. American money, a dinner that costs the equivalent of 30 or 35 cents, American money, in Mexico City. Colonel Orozco, a Carranza appointee and friend, was head of the police department during the old regime, and his brutality in dealing with the labor unions was notorious. Both I. W. W. unions were forced to suspend meetings, their halls shut up and their members beaten and jailed as autocratically as in the United States. Although the Carranza officials constantly fought the American corporations and tried to force them to pay higher—and quite justifiable—taxes, they were in turn grafting and spending public funds with shaneful extravagance, and anybody who dared expose their rottenness, was browbeaten, bullied or bribed into silence.

Writing from Tampico, a friend says, "The Labor situation is quiet here at present but may develop strikes at any time, as wages while higher than the average in Mexico, are far from equalling the terrific cost of living. I am continually astounded by prices of food and clothes."

C. F. Bertelli, Universal Service staff correspondent, in a Paris dispatch to the American press, says that the Obregon revolution was planned and financed by a group of wealthy Mexican exiles in the French capital. He names Francisco Iturbe, millionaire backer of General Angeles, whose revolution of a little over a year ago ended abruptly when he was captured and executed; Jose Diaz, Mexican rubber king, cousin of Porfirio Diaz, whose estates in Yucatan and Tehuantepec were confiscated by Carranza; Ramon Garcia, adviser to the late Victoriano Huerta; Jesus Ignacio Hiramas, millionaire Diaz follower; Juan Estrada, Mexican song writer living in Madrid; Hiraldo Cabreras, colonel under Madero, and J. Y. Limantour, minister of finance in the Diaz regime, as the abettors of the scheme. Josse Diaz, he says, is now going to London as head of the English branch of the revolutionary junta, the object of which, according to his information, is to replace the "scientificos" and restore the iron reign of the days of Porfirio Diaz.

Such a story is by no means improbable and Bertelli is too dependable a news correspondent to send it out without a strong belief in its reliability. It is notorious fact that Obegon has utilized the services of any and all classes in his uprising against Carranza, and it would not be surprising if he had the financial backing of the old Diaz leaders who have been exiled since Carranze came into power.

Obregon's Compromise Means New Revolt.

It is probably incorrect that Obregon was directly financed by American interests as I and many others believed originally. Inasmuch as these interests were really trying to elect Bonillas President and Carranza hed "flopped" and joined hands with them, it seems that the Obregon revolt was the real protest of the Mexican people generally against the attempt to put a semi-American, alleged to be Wall street's choice, in the presidential chair. The spontaneity and unanimity of the support Obregon received, while due part-

"For three years," Olive said to herself, "I have just paged thru a library, and developed conceit." She smiled at her self analysis. Why did she have to see all the imperfections in life anyway, that was the thought that troubled her. She leaned back and looked out thru the window. It was fast growing dark. A few stars shown out from among grey black clouds. She noticed neither the stars nor the clouds, but visualized the image of Jack Thurston, care—free in the woods of the mountain wilderness. Why should he play such a powerful tho unconscious roll in her existence. She did not reason on the subject. When the human mind is attached to an object of affection it does not reason. If it really does reason the attachment is imperfect. All she knew, was that he was different from other men she knew. His views of life were different. When he was abused, he did not retaliate in kind, but endeavored to explain. He even tried to exonerate the judge who had unjustly imprisoned him. "To know all things means to forgive all things," he had said. It was a bigger truth than Frank Cartwright was capable of. In fact, at the time he had spoken it, Olive had not grasped it. but her consequent study of the thought modes of teachers, editors, merchants preachers and politicians had caused her to realize that mankind enmasse do what they feel they must do, under the pressure of environment, so that if you could know all the circumstances there was bound to be an excuse for every act.

To her, Jack had been an example of what she conceived real christianity ought to be. He had not mistaken the cross for the Christ. But tonight she saw deeper as Jack had spoken deeper than she had been able to understand. She realized that christianity urges forgiveness, which is a form of condoning by those who consider themselves superior, the acts of those who they consider inferior. The very act of forgiving makes the forgiver holier in his own eyes, than the forgiven. It was only another way in which the type struggle, and thru it the class struggle manifested itself in human society. Jack, on the other hand had told her, that he did not forgive or ask to be forgives. He only tried to understand, and endeavored to make himself understood. "To forgive is Christlike, but to explain is justice," had been his words.

The more she thot of those things, the more wonderful became her vision of the boy she had first seen in the murky light of a prison cell. Each moment in that short acquaintance she treasured as a jewel.

She tried his philosophy on herself. Could she explain why Frank Cartwright should call this boy whom he had never seen, "a nameless bum." Simply because an unworthy judge had sent him to an undeserved cell. Frank knew that the judge had been exposed and had been made the scape goat for the whole ring of grafters of which he was but a part. A ertain sense of pride surged through Olive's blood at the thot of this. It had been her work that started the agitation which put the judge out of office The fact that very little had been gained by it, of course was not apparent to her at that time. But aside from that she succeeded in explaining Frank Cartwright's attitude. It was after all not difficult. He was jealous, and jealousy is a ghoul, which digs into the mental tombs of the past, awakening the emotions that thrived in the jungle and the cave.

Frank Cartwright was aware of the fact, that Jack's words had placed Olive beyond his reach. It had wounded his pride to think that this son of the working class, unshaven, unwashed and well jailed, should have thwarted him in his desire. The thot maddenod him. Yes, she could understand. But the fact that she could understand, did not help her to forget Jack neither did it cause her to love Frank. She reread Jack's notes for the fifth time and became convinced that between her and Frank no bond could endure.

She felt certain, that unless Jack should come into her life again she would have to resolve to face the world alone "Poor Frank," she sighed as she threw herself on the bed and consciously watched the subconscious struggle between her instincts and tranny. She decided to answer his letter. It was no small task. Thoughts fairly crackled in her brain. Heart, brain and hand vied with each other for expression. It was the woman at work but no sooner had she begaun to write, than the lady, the product of church and school, got busy. She told her not to write or to write just a card of acknowledgement, that was the nice thing to do. But the woman proved to her that the card was too small, she must at least write a note. So she sat down to write or rather to waste paper. "My Dear Mr. Thurston: No, that was too familiar. "Mr. J. Thurston: Dear Sir." suggested the lady. "Never," retorted the woman. "Dear Jack," Oh horror, that would never do. How she would like to write the way she felt, "Society forces us to be hypocrites against our will." Jack had said. How true it was. Well for once I'll be natural be the results what they may," she said to herself.

"My Dear Boy," she wrote and then she looked at it. Surely this was imprudent. What would he think of it, but she let it stand. She had made her decision, and as usual it went. "I've had many presents in my day but the one that MR. E. C., whoever he may be, sent me was easily the best present I have ever received. Surely, I thought that in the enjoyment of your liberty you would have forgotten this little "gray mouse". I had not hoped to leave an impression on your busy and interesting life, for I felt then, as I feel now, that you are not mere common clay. You are living in a great school of things as they are and hence get glimpses of things as they ought to be.

This summer I'll graduate from high school. Yes, then I'll be graduated like a thermometer, and from then on my value will depend upon my performance.

I have thot of you often. Oh, so often, and of the wonderful things you told me. You cannot conceive of the way your remarks influenced my life. The ideas you implanted in my mind, have made for me so new friends and perhaps a few enemies. But when I review the work I have been able to do in this little town, I know that life is worth living, and I am really proud of the enemies I have made. I wish you would come back to Anamoose, so we could talk, but if you cannot do that write and tell me all the news about yourself.

Sincerely yours,

OLIVE ANDERSON.

She sealed the letter and addressed it to the post office Collins had indicated and alternately prayed that it would, and would not reach him.

The train for Minot was nearly due; if her letter went out on it, Jack would have it in two days. She therefore resolved to loose no time in getting this letter on its way.

While she was on this errand her mother entered her roome and spied the several sheets of paper on which her daughter had started her unsuccessfull letters. This made her curious, and caused her to investigate further, but there was nothing further to be found than the letters addressed to Thurston. Jack's notes were securely hid about the person of her daughter. Mrs. Anderson was indeed puzzled who this man Thurston might be, to whom her daughter was trying to write.

As was her custom when in any kind of doubt or trouble, real or imaginary Mrs. Anderson immediately called up Mrs. Nellie Cartwright, her life long friend, and Frank Cartwright's mother and asked her if she knew any one by the name of Thurston. And when Mrs. Cartwright answered in the negative, Mrs. Anderson informed her that he was a man to whom Olive was writing or trying to write. This last remark made the proposition clear to Mrs. Cartwright. Her son had told her of Olive's attitude the night before, and it was, that which gave her a clew to the mystery. "Oh, yes Mrs. Anderson, coming to think of it I do know who that man is. Frank told me last night. He is that hobo they had in jail last fall. Frank says, he is all she thinks about."

Of course this was more than Mrs. Anderson would believe. In fact, she told Mrs. Cartwright, that it could not be true. But Mrs. Cartwright insisted, that she knew it to be true, and advised Olive's mother to be careful. "That fellow was a bad one." I hope you have not forgotten the trouble he stirred up when he was here."

Mrs. Anderson answered with the old bromide, that it was hard to raise children decently these days, and after a few more irrevelant remarks she hung up the receiver. After which Jack and Olive were under fire on both ends of the line.

The Soo Overland had stopped but a moment at Anamoose and Olive had deposited the letter in the mail box, thus the die was cast.

As she walked toward home she suddenly remembered the waste paper she had left on the table and fearing lest her mother should enter her room and find it, she walked as rapidly as she could. Frank passed her and tipped his hat. She nodded but did not stop. He groaned and inwardly cursed the nameless tramp whom he considered the cause of his misery. But his emotions were little deeper than his brain. In fact less than ten minutes later he met Tillie Duffy and the two went to a vaudeville show which happened to be in town that night. When Olive reached the house Mrs. Anderson confronted her, as if she were guilty of some beinous crime. "Who is that young man you are writing to," she asked premptorialy.

"Mr. Thurston," Olive replied with a saucy toss of her head.

"Who is he? I asked," the mother snapped.

"He is a man," Olvie retorted.

"How long have you been corresponding with him? "I never corresponded with him. A friend of his sent me some notes, he had written while out in the woods and I wrote him a letter of thanks. That is all."

"Why did you make so many beginnings before you finally wrote?

"Perhaps, it is my high school education does not teach me how to write to a man without making a hypocrite of myself. I wanted to write just the way I felt and I did."

"Olive!" The mother fairly shouted. You don't mean that you care for him? Who is he?"

"I did not say that I cared for him," Olive answered quitly. "And when you ask me who he is, I can only say that I don't know. All that I do know is that he is the boy, who was in jail here last fall."

"Do you still think of that hobo?" gasped the mother trying to feign surprise.

"If I were homeless, and penniless, in a strange town, what would I be?" Olive snapped. "I would be worse in the eyes of the civilized savages you call decent people, than was he."

"But Olive, think of who we are! Think of your father's standing in the community. Think of what the neighbors would say if they knew that you were writing to a tramp. Why Mrs. Cartwright knows about it already."

"Knows what?" asked the girl as she gathered the attempted letters and tore them up and threw them in the waste basket.

"Why she knows that you care for him. She thinks that you are crazy. Think of Frank Cartwright? He is a good boy and his father has valuable property. You've gone with him almost a year. Why Olive dear just think what the neighbors would say."

Olive dropped into a chair and leaned back wearily. "If I loved that stranger I would not care what people would say, I might be foolish, I might be wrong, I would not care. All they could say would be that I loved a man who had gathered the grain from our fields and suffered privations that we might have comfort. All they could say would

AUTLINE FOR CHAPTER ELEVEN.

Beginning	Invention of the steam engine.
Tools and Weapons	Hand tools, steam and power-driven machinery.
Transportation	Greatly improved fire arms and other ordinance. On land, railroads with steam power. On water, steam and improved sailing vessels.
Subsistence	Cooked and preserved foods of great variety.
Shelter	Buildings of brick, stone, power-sawed lumber. Beginning of use of concrete with steel frames.
Clothing	Machine made fabrics of wool, cotton, silk, flax and other fibre.
Environment	Advanced machine agriculture. Center of industry transferred from home to factory Cities connected by railroad and steamship lines. Man's control over natural environment enabled him to inhabit all climates.
Organization	Monarchical and representative political government, with armies, navies and police. Serfdom and feudalism supplanted by a fuller development of the wages-system. Greater development of trade and labor unions based upon craft and skill. Beginning of the separation of church and state.
Arts and Institutions	Beginning of wire communication. Postal service. Public school system. Concentration in the ownership of industry.

CHAPTER ELEVEN.

Civilization. Middle or Machine Age.

The middle age of civilization began with the appearance of the steam engine, invented by James Watt in 1763. A. D.*)

The invention of the steam engine gave a mighty impetus to the development of power-driven machinery and this machinery in turn substantially modified the entire plan of our industrial and social relations. The hand tools of a former age here gave way to the power-driven machines of the new era.

The difference between a tool and a machine consists in the method of the application of power. If the power is directly applied, the implement is a tool. If the application of power is indirect, then the implement is a machine. A scythe in the hands of the reaper is a tool. The modern selfbinder is a machine.

Steam engines and power-driven machinery did not develop by chance, but were the natural result of the economic urge of the age. The multiplication of the race in excess of the sources of local food supply made increased speed in the methods of production and transportation imperative.

The rapid development of the Western Continent along agricultural and industrial lines, made necessary the concentration of vast masses of people in cities in order to supply the necessary tools and machinery with which to carry on the settlement of a continent. This gave an impetus to manufacture and transportation.)

The commerce between the cities of the coast and the rapidly developing inetrior made the old hand-tool methods of production and ox-cart methods of transportation totally inadequate, with the result that power-driven machinery and transportation was an econmic necessity. Power machinery forced out the shop of the artisan and instituted the modern factory system.

In every age of human evolution, the methods of destruction have kept even pace with the methods of production, hence in the machinery age we find guns of monstrous power, range and destructivity.

The machine age witnessed the application of steam power to every branch of industry, especially to transportation on both land and sea.

The subsistence of this age was similar to the age preceding it, with the addition of the canning factory and the further development of the art of chemical preservation of food.

Concrete and steel frame structures were a further evolution of the building art of this age.

Homespun garments gave way in this age to factory made clothing, thereby greatly modifying domestic economy.

The machine age transferred industry from the home to the factory. It took from the home such industries as spinning, weaving, dyeing, knitting, tailoring, soap-making, tanning, boot, shoe and harness-making, laundering, baking, canning, fruit-drying, candle-making etc.

The machine age worked a revolution in the home, transforming it from an industrial to a social unit.

Factory production with its social labor led to a great concentration of wealth. The perfection and extension of the wages-system led to the clearer division of society along class lines.

The concentration of wealth with the resultant investment of capital in foreign lands, made necessary the extension of naval and military power for the protection of these investments. Concentrated capital now invaded the halls of representative government, transforming those organizations from bodies representative committees for the dominant class. The tightening of the class lines forced the development of labor unions. based upon craft and skill.

Electricity was first applied to the systems of communication in the machine age. The telegraph and telephone systems came into existence in response to the economic needs of a commercial age. The postal system is also an outgrowth of these same forces. The operation of the machines and the necessity for keeping records, made the arts of reading and writing an industrial requirement. It was in response to this economic necessity that the public school came into existence, championed by organized labor and fought by the church. The church has ever and everywhere been the foe to progress.

The duration of this age was less than one hundred years.

*) The steam engine in its primitive state was known as early as 130 B. C. In the "Pneumatica" of Alexandria is mentioned the aeolipile, but it was not until the decate following its invention by Watt that it became a commercial possibility.

QUESTIONS FOR CHAPTER ELEVEN.

Middle Civilization.

1. What invention marks the beginning of the machine age?
2. What was the effect of power-driven machinery upon the social structure?
3. Explain the difference between a tool and a machine?
4. Name the underlying economic causes for the substitution of machines for tools?
5. Name some of the changes in home life induced by the factory system.
6. What was the economic advantage of the railroad? The steamship? and home.
7. Explain the difference in division of labor between the factory
8. What was the result of the factory system upon subsistence?
9. Were "skyscrapers" possible before concrete and steel?
10. Explain the difference between homespun and factory-made garmets.
11. What is meant by the term 'social unit'?
12. Which is more productive, individual or social labor?
13. What is social labor?
14. Explain the effect of concentrated capital upon representative government.
15. Why do foreign investments require an army and navy?
16. Explain the origin of the public school system.
17. When was electricity first applied to communication?
18. Did economic necessity have anything to do with the extension of postal system?
19. What has been the attitude of the church towards progressive measures?

War Profits of American Profiteers

— By BASIL M. MANLY. —

When the coal controversy was at its height, former Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo startled the nation by declaring that in 1917 the mine owners made shocking and indefensible profits on bituminous coal. He stated that their income tax returns revealed that they were making earnings on their capital stock ranging from 15 to 2,000 per cent and that earnings of from 100 to 300 per cent on capital stock were not uncommon. Mr. McAdoo drew his facts regarding the profits of coal operators from Senate Document No. 259, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury in response to a Senate resolution requesting all facts in possession of the Treasury Department relative to profiteering. Great objection to the printing of this report was made by reactionary Senators, who wanted to conceal these facts from the people; and only after a hard fight by Senators Borah and La Follette was an agreement finally secured to print a small edition. As the result of this partial suppression, this important report, which should have been made available to every American citizen, has been obtainable only with the greatest difficulty. In this article are presented the startling facts which it contains.

In the publication of this report every effort was apparently made to conceal from the reader all facts which would reveal the profiteering of the great corporations and trusts. The report contain 388 pages. In the first 360 pages you will find not a single corporation with more than $10,000,000 capitalization, and very few with more than a few hundred thousand; but beginning on page 361 you will find all the big trusts for which reports are given lumped indiscriminately with little corporations with capital stock as small as $1,000. An inconspicuous note on page 5 states that the tables beginning at page 361 relate to returns on which computation had not been completed when the preceding tables were sent to the printer. Was it an accident that all the big corporations were held back while the data on more than 30.000 small companies were compiled and sent to the printer. Whatever the reason may be, the fact is that any ordinary citizen examining this report would be led to believe that all the profiteering was done by the small companies. Some question might also be raised by inquiring citizens as to why this report does not include the big copper companies which in 1916 and 1917 made such stupendous profits, and why other notorious prefiteers were omitted. But putting aside all such defects, the report still contains an enormous mass of information of the greatest vadue to the American people.

Profits in Coal

An examination of the report shows that Secretary McAdoo was entirely too conservative when he stated that the profits of the coal operators ranged as high as 2,000 per cent. He should have said that the profits ranged as high as 7,856 per cent. He stated that profits as high as 100 per cent on capital stock were not uncommon. The fact is that nearly half the coal companies (185 out of 404) actually earned profits on their capital stock ranging from 100 per cent to 7,856 per cent. In other words, the prices paid by the American people for their coal in 1917 were so high that nearly half the mines reported were paid profits equal to their entire capital stock, and at least one of the mines was paid profits equal to 78 times its capitalization.

It is a notorious fact that in many of the mining corporations the greater part of the capital stock represented nothing but water. The stock was given as bonuses to the buyers of bonds, and nobody expected that the stock certificates would ever be worth more than a faw cents on the dollar. Nevertheless we find that in 1917 the net income of the 404 coal companies reported was $78.000,000 or nearly 45 per cent of their total capital stock of $175.000.000. This net income is after the deduction of interests on bonds and all the over-generous allowances for depreciation and depletion provided for in the excess profits tax law. Furthermore, these figures are based on the original returns of the companies, and take no account whatever of millions of dollars of tax evasions which were revealed by the Internal Revenue Bureau in auditing the returns.

With these facts before us, and making due allowance for smaller profits in 1918 and 1919, it is absolutely certain that it would have been cheaper for the American people to have bought the coal mines outright when we entered the war, so that coal could have been sold to the people at a low cost, than to have paid the enormous profits of the last three years. To put the matter in a different way, in the last three years the American people have paid in net oprfits every dollar's worth of stock of the coal companies.

Some Other Profiteers

The coal operators are not the only ones who were profiteering while this nation was at war and every loyal citizen was paring his expenditures to the bone in order to buy Liberty Bonds and provide for the necessities of our soldires and sailors. While the coal operators were making profits ranging as high as 7.356 per cent on their capital stock, the meat packers were making profits ranging as high as 4,244 per cent, canners of fruits and vegetables 2,033 per cent, woolen mills 1,770 per cent, furniture manufacturers 2,395 per cent, clothing and dry good stores 9,826 per cent, and to cap the climax, steel mills as high as 290,999 per cent.

A profit of 290,999 per cent seems incredible, but here are the facts. This steel company (page 367 of the Treasury report) had a capital stock of $5,000; in 1917 it reported to the Treasury Department a net income of $14.549,952. After paying its excess profits tax, its net income still amounted to 212,584 per cent on its capital stock. This corporation did not make any report of its invested capital. Owing to the secrecy which shrouds the income and excess profits tax reports, nobody except the officials of the Treasury and of the company itself knows what company this was. No explanation of these sensational facts can therefore be given. It may have been a case of getting a fat contract from this government or some foreign government and selling the right to another corporation for some $15.000.000. The company may have been formed by the inside officials and financiers of some big corporation as a means of concealing profits and plundering the other stockholders. Nobody knows; but this corporation did make this unbelievable profit of 290,999 per cent while this nation was at war; and so far as I have been able to discover neither the Attorney General nor any committee of Congress has ever made any attempt to ascertain who this king of profiteers was. This steel company did not stand entirely alone, for there is another corporation reported on the same page as earning 20,180 per cent on its capital stock.

What Did the Steel Trust Make?

What profits did the Steel Corporation, which has denied its workers the right to organize, report to the Treasury in 1917? I tried to find out. On page 367 I found a steel company with a capital stock of $868,582,600. There is only one corporation in the world with that amount of capital stock — the United States Steel Corporation. I thought I had found it. I looked to see what net income it had reported to the Treasury Department in 1917 and I found the amount recorded as $155,854,365 before the deduction of income and excess profits taxes. This seemed incredible, as the net income before the deduction of taxes reported by the corporation in its published report was $478,204,342. It appeared as though $322,000.000 of the Steel Corporation's income was being concealed from Uncle Sam. It did not seem possible, so I went to the Secretary of the Treasury and asked permission to see the return of the United States Steel Corporation in order to verify the facts. Section 5 of Treasury Decision No. 2016 states that the Secretary of the Treasury shall permit the inspection of the return of any corporation listed on the stock exchange. I was told by an official of the Treasury Department that this decision was now in force and covered the inspection of returns Yet access to the return of the Steel Corporation was denied me, and after a day's delay I received a long memorandum, three pages of which were taken up with telling me that althought this was the only decision on the subject, it was not now in force, having been modified by one of the later revenue acts. The last page of the memorandum, while refusing to state whether the facts which I had quoted from the report of the Treasury Department applied to the United States Steel Corporation or not, set up a hypothetical case to explain how this apparent discrepancy of $322.000.000 might have occurred. It was stated that in the case of a holding company reports of the subsidiaries were made separately, and the only income reported by the holding company was that accruing directly to it. I believe that this statement is corrected and that the Steel Corporation reported its income correctly to the Treasury Department, but neither I nor any other American citizen has any means of knowing positively what the facts are. So far as the income and excess profits taxes are concerned the Treasury Department is an impenetrable veil through which no citizen is permitted to see.

For this reason the net income of the Steel Corporation cannot be stated on the basis of the Treasury Department's figures; but on the basis if its own published report, its net profits in the two years 1916 and 1917, after the payment [illegible] interest on bonds and after allowance for all charges growing out of the installation of special war facilities, amounted to $888,931.511. This is $20.000.000 more than the total capital stock of the Steel Corporation. In other words, in 1916 and 1917 every dollar of the capital stock of the Steel Corporation was paid for in net profits. In this connection it should be remembered that when the Steel Corporation was formed its entire $500.000.000 worth of common stock represented nothing but water.

I have tabulated the returns of industries engaged in manufacturing and selling the principal necessaries of life. There is not a single one of these branches of industry and trade in which there was not at least one establishment making 100 per cent or more on its capital stock. Out of 506 flour mills, 84 reported net profits of over 100 per cent on their capital stock. and one company reported 2,828 per cent. The bread and bakery companies were not quite so fortunate, but out of 217 of them, 34, or more than one-seventh, made more than 100 per cent on their capital stock, and 153, or more than two-third, made over 20 per cent on their invested capital.

The Story of the Packers.

The newspapers have carried advertisements costing millions of dollars telling how little profit is made by the meat packers. The Treasury Department's reports show that out of 122 meat packers, 30, or one out of every four, made more than 100 per cent profit on their capital stock. One of these companies, not one of the "Big Five," made the nice litle profit of 4,244 per cent on its capital stock in 1917. In this connection I discovered one interesting and significant thing while examining this report of the Treasury Department. On page 365 I found a meat packing corporation with a capital stock of $100.000.000 in 1917. There were only two meat packing corporations with capital stock of $100,000,000 in 1917 — Armour & Company and Swift & Company. The corporation that is mentioned above reported to the Treasury Department a net income in 1917 of $49.139,147; after the payment of income and excess profits taxes it still had a net income of $43,810,984. Looking at the published reports of Armour and Swift I find that Armour reported to the public profits of only $30,628,157 in 1917, and Swift reported profits of only $34,650.000. I do not know which of these companies is represented in the Treasury Department's report, but I do know that whichever one it is concealed from the public either $9.000.000 or $13,000,000 net income which it reported to the Treasury Department. In other words, the Treasury Department's report reveals beyond question that one of these companies has falsified its report to the public and to its stockholders. If the public had the access to the tax reports to which it is entitled by every rule of justice and by every precedent of the American government, there would be no difficulty in ascertaining which of these companies was guilty of this offense. As it is both of them must lie under suspicion.

While the war was at its height and the federal government was bending every energy to sell Liberty Bonds to pay the heavy cost the Federal Trade Commission, in connection with its investigation of the packers, called upon Armour & Company to furnish a sworn statement of their subsidiary South American beef companies. No reply was received from Armour & Company; but one morning Federal Trade Commissioner J. Franklin Fort former governor of New Jersey, received a visit from a noted Chicago corporation lawyer. He said that he was there representing Armour & Company and wanted Governor Fort to use his influence with the other Federal Trade Commissioners to recall their demand for a sworn statement of the profits of Armour & Company's South American subsidiaries. He stated that if they were obliged to make a truthful and accurate statement of such profits and if these reports were made public by the commission it would result in a great increase in the taxes, which the companies would have to pay in South America, and further that it would reveal unreported income amounting to millions on which Armour & Company would have to pay income and excess profits taxes here. Commissioner Fort indignantly spurned this attempt to use him as a tool of Armour & Company, and ordered the lawyer to leave his office. The facts were reported to the Treasury Department, but so far as I have been able to ascertain no successful attempt has yet been made to punish J. Ogden Armour or any other official of Armour & Company for this confessed attempt to defraud the United States Treasury of taxes or for this bare-faced effort to induce government officials to defeat the ends of justice. A written statement signed by Governor Fort detailing every circumstance of this transaction is on file with the Senate Committee on Agriculture, where it is effectively buried under a wagonload of documents obtained from the Federal Trade Commission at the same time, which serve effectively to conceal it from the knowledge of the public.

The Treasury Department reports give the returns of 45 woolen and worsted mills, one of which earned 1,770 per cent on its capital stock. Out of the forty-five, seventeen reported profits of more than 100 per cent on their capital stock. Among the woolen mills we also have a case similar to that of the meat packers, of concealment of income from the eyes of the public. On page 380 of the Treasury report is shown the income of a woolen company capitalized at $60,000,000. So far as I have been able to ascertain, there is only one woolen company in the United States capitalized at that amount—the American Woolen Company. The Treasury Department's report shows that in 1917 this sixty-million-dollar woolen company reported a net income of $28,560,342. The annual report of the American Woolen Company for 1917 shows a net income before taxes were deducted of only $13,383,155. If this sixty-million-dollar woolen company is in fact the American Woolen Company—and the evidence seems to be conclusive—it is clear that the American Woolen Company in 1917 concealed from its stockholders and from the public profits of nearly $15,000,000. In other words, the actual profits of the American Woolen Company in 1917 appear from this comparison to have been more than twice as great as the company acknowledged in its annual report and in its statements to the American Woolen Company have every reason to demand an accounting from the officers of that corporation to ascertain whether or not $15,000,000 of profits were actually concealed, as those facts seem to indicate, and if so what disposition was made of that enormous sum of money.

It must not be imagined that manufacturers were the only ones who reaped enormous profits while the nation was at war. The report of the Treasury Department shows 2,068 clothing and dry goods stores, one of which earned 9,826 per cent on its capital stock and nearly 10 per cent of the entire number earned more than 100 per cent on their capital stock. Out of 313 department stores, one earned 757 per cent on its capital stock, and 26 earned more than 100 per cent. There are 577 furniture stores reported, of which seventy-eight, or nearly 15 percent, earned 781 per cent. We have heard a great deal about the high cost of building in the last few years. In nearly every case an attempt is made to attribute the high cost to the wages paid building labor, but this report shows that out of 809 contractors and construction companies, 134, or more than 15 per cent, earned profits of over 100 per cent on their capital stock, and one of them earned 1,390 per cent, or nearly fourteen times its capital in a single year.

War Profits Equal Capital Stock.

In a recent speech before the Senate, Senator Capper of Kansas made the statement that during the war the American people paid for the coal mines, the steel mills, the textile factories, and every other essential branch of industry. Senator Capper did not give the facts upon which his statement rested, and I doubt if he knew how literally true that sensational statement was, but the fact is—and this report of the Treasury Department proves it beyond any doubt—that the American people during the war did pay in net profits for the entire capital stock of the corporations in the essential lines of industry and trade.

In other words, it is clear that if the national government at the beginning of the war had taken over the essential lines of industry, and the American people had been required to pay the prices which private manufacturers and merchants have charged them, there would have been sufficient profit to pay for every dollar's worth of capital stock, and leave the nation today in possession and control of practically all its manufacturing plants.

If this had been done, and the manufacturing officials and employes had performed their duties as efficiently for the government as for the private corporations—and every citizen has a right to assume that neither the manufacturing officials nor the other employes would deliberately sabotage their government—we should have today, instead of a debt of $26,000,000,000, a large part of which went to pay for the products of these industries a debt of only the billions necessary to cover the expenses of our government, the pay of our soldiers, and the loans to our allies. In addition we should have vested in the federal government the ownership of billions of dollars worth of manufacturing and commercial property. This opportunity now seems to be lost, but the picture of American profiteering revealed by this official document of the Treasury Department should be indelibly fixed in the mind of every American citizen.

THE LAND POLICY OF SOVIET RUSSIA

By WILLIAM W. [illegible]

The solution of the land question is of primary importance to Soviet Russia. Before the Revolution the land privileges then existing, embodied in the vast landed possessions of the nobility, appanage, monasteries, and churches, dominated economically the rural population. The masses of the peasants, who make up a large majority of the Russian nation and without whose support no Russian government can survive, demanded the expropriation of the great landed property and the increase of their land allotments. On the other hand, the socialist regime required for its success the gradual socialization of agriculture—a process quite contrary to the private husbandry of the peasants. The soviet regime, therefore, had before it three main tasks in the land question: to abolish entirely the land privileges of the great landowners, to satisfy the individualistic demands of the peasants, and to start and carry on the socialization of agriculture.

Accordingly, the earlies soviet land decrees, of November 7, 1917, and of January 27, 1918, ordered the expropriation of the estates of the nobility, appanage monasteries, and churches, thus establishing in 1918 a National Land Reserve of 15,800,000 dessiatines, of which 12,800,000 were distributed for the private use of the peasants though the ownership remained with the state. The prerevolutionary land allotments of the peasants remained in their possesion. The Soviet Government had left at its disposal 3,000,000 dessiatines, mainly the large modern holdings of the former landlords, the estates utilized for technical agricultural enterprises, and the lands with mineral deposits.

After this first stage of the agrarian revolution the Soviet Government in the first half of 1918 made the first attempts at agricultural socialization. From the very beginning this work fell in two main divisions: the organization of soviet estates and the promotion of agricultural communes and of other collective agricultural enterprises not under state control. In August, 1918, the Peoples Commissariat of Agriculture published some principles and by-laws on the organization of communes, and on November 2, of the same year the Government by a decree created a fund of one billion rubles for loans to collective agricultural enterprises.

In 1918 this work was still in a state of confusion. The unique policy of socialist land organization was established early in 1919 by several important land decrees, of which the fundamental one is the land law promulgated on February 14, 1919. This law declares once more that all land is the property of the state, administered by the Peoples Commissariat of Agriculture, provincial and county land departments, and other government bodies. The peasants' land remains in their use, all the undistributed land of the land reserve is excluded from private use and placed at the disposal of the state. The soviet estates are operated by the state, producing exclusively for its needs and employing only state laborers, preferably organized workers from the cities. The administrative and technical affairs of each estate are conducted by a specialist or a board appointed by the government authorities, a labor committee having the right of controlling the economic and sanitary life of the laborers.

The estates are supposed to be scientifically arranged model agrucultural enterprises of the highest possible productivity; undertaking such agricultural and industrial activities as dairies, stock-farms, vineyards, wine presses, tea, tobacco, and beet plantations; and equipped with experimental fields, agricultural schools and exhibitions, libraries and museums. The purpose of the scheme is to make the soviet estates serve as large agricultural centers for the benefit and instruction of the peasants.

The agricultural communes are collective enterprises voluntarily organized by a group of producers from their individual land allotments and the equipments of their households, or from lands and inventories placed at their disposal by the soviet authorities; the communes are operated primarily for the needs of their participants on the basis of an equal collective application of their labor and communal consumption of the products.

Collective cultivation of land means, in the law, collective tillage, manuring, sowing, and harvesting of lands by a whole village community or a part of its members who for that purpose combine in partnerships, sharing in the collective work with their own labor, inventories, and working animals, or with an inventory owned solely by the partnership. Village lands not allotted to individual households are marked out for collective cultivation as well as private plots whose holders are not able to till them and lands assigned for that purpose by the soviet authorities from the land reserve.

Both the communes and the partnerships of collective cultivation are to be managed by committees elected by the group however, they have to submit themselves to certain definite plans of work prescribed by the land departments, in order that a proper use of the means of production granted them by the Government may be insured.

From the annual yield of the communes or of the partnerships their own collective needs are first satisfied, and in the case of the partnerships a certain amount is distributed for the individual use of the partners. The surplus must be delivered to the soviet food-suply authorites in exchange for money loans and other things received from the Government for the operation of the enterprises, or in payment of taxes and other public duties. The Peoples Commissariat of Agriculture is urged by the same law to provide for the communes and in general for the collective agricultural association money loans, seeds, inventories, agronomic aid, and every possible assistance.

A supplementary soviet decree of February 23, 1919, makes definite regulations regarding the award of the loans from the billion ruble fund mentioned above. The administration of the fund is to be in the hands of a special central committee under the authority of the Commissariat of Agriculture, and of local committees with the land departments. The loans are awarded in money, agricultural implements, artificial manure, and other supplies, and are repayable in products without any accrued interest charges, except in cases when for a delay in the repayment a fine of one per cent a month is charged. The receivers of the loans must obey in the operation of their enterprises definite rules worked out by the land departments and intended as a guaranty of a productive application of the aid received.

The soviet authorities and economists ascribe great importance to each form of collective agriculture. The soviet estates are conceived as the basis of a complete socialization of agriculture on a national scale. The communes are also supposed in the course of time to become nationalized enterprises; while the collective cultivation of land is regarded as a means of training the peasents in agricultural collectivism and of paving the way for ultimate combination in communes. In this conception both the communes and the partnerships for collective cultivation constitute only temporary, transitory ecoonmic organizations leading finally to the complete nationalization of agriculture.

It was inevitable that the efforts of the Soviet Government to socialize agriculture together with the nationalization of education should have led to the nationalization of agronomic instruction and of the labor of agricultural specialists, whose knowledge was greatly needed by the soviet estates and other collective agricultural enterprises. The agricultural educational institutions were already nationalized in 1918 and were free to all. By a decree of February 12, 1919, the agricultural experiment stations were taken over by the state. On January 30, 1919, the Soviet Government ordered a state-wide registration of all kinds of agricultural specialists and on March 20 of the same year called them from twelve soviet provinces of the state.

It is important to note that the Soviet Government in its efforts to collectivize the private enterprises of the peasants has not adopted or employed compulsory methods. The first agricultural communes, in 1918, were started quite voluntarily by groups of the poorest peasants to help themselves by cooperation to survive the economic crisis and the scarcity of agricultural implements. Likewise the fundamental land law outlined here conceives the communes and agricultural partnerships as voluntary organizations. There are other conspicious evidences to the same effect. Kurnev, a prominent member of the Commissariat of Agriculture, at a government conference on socialist land organization in March, 1919, asserts: 'We must influence the peasants by example, conviction; but in the work of the collectivization of agriculture by no means resort to force.'' And Lenin, the head of the Soviet Government, at the eighth congress of the Communist Party of Russia, made the following statements: ''There is no greater stupidity than the mere thought of compulsion in the field of the economic relations of the middle peasants..... We must convince the peasants, and convince them by example. It is necessary, first of all, to prove that such a collectivization is better, that it is profitable.'' To the same effect the congress demanded in a comprehensive agrarian resolution a mild policy in collecting taxes from the poorer peasants; a system artificial manure, improved breeds of cattle; the of distributing to them agricultural machinery, seeds, establishment of a rural credit system; the promotion of home industries; and a number of other conomic measures. This resolution embodies the real soviet policy in this question, as the Communist Party has been the determining political factor in the work of the Soviet Government.

This conciliatory attitude is due mainly to two circumstances. First, in matters of agricultural socialization the application of any compulsion to the peasants—the majority of the people—would be ineffective and ridiculous. Second, the soviet authorities hold to the view that collective agriculture is, in respect of efficiency and productivity, superior to the small individual agricultural homesteads of the peasants and that the practical demonstration of the superiority of the soviet estates and communes before the eyes of the peasants will stimulate them to combine gradually in partnerships of collective cultivation of land.

In pursuance of the principles and methods outlined in the foregoing, the Soviet Government during 1919 has organized many new soviet estates and promoted the organization of agricultural communes. The cultivated territory of the estates, numbering 2,524, comprised a little short of 1,000,000 dessiatines, of which the whole annual produce, estimated in money amounted to 843,000,000 rulbes; it is intended to increase this territory in 1920 to 2,000,000 dessiatines. Some inference as to the growth of the communes may be drawn from the respective data available for the provinces of Petrograd, Novgorod, Vitebsk, Mobilev, Tula, Kaluga and Orel, where in the middle of 1919 there were in existence 1,360 communes with a land area of 179,000 dessiatines.

In view of the vast agricultural area of Soviet Russia, these results, no doubt, are not extensive. Yet this comparatively slow process by no means indicates a failure of the methods employed. The war created some extremely unfavorable conditions which temporarily have handicapped a more rapid socialization of Russian agriculture. The material resources of the Soviet Republic had to be devoted to the prosecution of the war forced upon the country. On that account, and on account of the blockade, the worn out agricultural implements, particularly agricultural machinery, could not be repaired in sufficient quantity or replaced by new ones. The live stock was largely reduced in number for the needs of the war. Hundreds of thousands of the most skilled laborers were withdrawn from agriculture to serve in the army. Under such conditions the Soviet Government was able to realize only to a very limited extent its plans for the socialization of agriculture, since the essential prerequisite for an efficient operation of the soviet estates and agricultural communes is a plentiful supply of labor and of live stock, and the possibility of applying modern technical methods.

The end of the war and the resumption of normal commercial relations between Russia and the outside world, removing most of those handicaps, will presumably enable the Soviet Government to proceed with the socialization of agriculture on a larger scale.

Reasons aplenty for dismisal of veniremen.

A great variety of reasons are given by the veniremen why they would not make fair jurymen in these cases. While many admit prejudice against the defendents about one fourth of those so far examined state frankly their sympathy with the defendents. One prosjective juryman, a non-union carpenter in employ of the Standard Oil Co., was promptly discarded by the defense when he stated that he was a Catholic and that it was against his religion to give a socialist a fair trial. Class lines were drawn in two cases. One gave as his reasons why he could not serve as an unprejudiced juryman, because he was an employer of labor. A workingman frankly told the prosecution that he would not convict the defendants no matter what evidence the prosecution brought against them as a matter of principle. The prosecution takes particular pains to see that no striking switchmen or railroaders get on the jury. One switchman examined stated that he had been on the job for 30 years and denied he was on strike when challenged by the prosecution, stating that he was ''taking a vacation.''

Radicals claim that the extreme persecution carried on against radicals by the capitalist press for the past six months is responsible for the difficulty in securing a jury in these cases. In the meantime, the defendants amuse themselves by watching the play of social forces in the selection of the jury that will have in its hands the first test of the Illinois state criminal syndicalism law and the biggest legal case of the communists of the United States.

IDOL WORSHIP.

A missionary from the United States had spent many years among the heathen natives of East India. He had christianized many of the natives. One of the great western virtues he was in the habit of teaching and emphasizing consisted of the statement that the people of his native country did not worship idols. He pointed out that his countrymen were a great people with a great nation.—That they were great because of their christianity and the absence of idols worship.

One of the native children he had taught from infancy grew up into a bright young man of twenty who was well advanced in his preparation for the ministry. He was also a student of English and other European languages. The aged missionary was very proud of his pupil and desired very much to have him see America and its people.

When the young native finally accompanied the missionary on a trip to New York the old man possessed a great passion to show his pupil the great sights of the western world. When the ship they were on came in sight of the land of America the missionary began to explain to the interesting places. When the ship neared the great statue the young native asked:

''What did you say that statue was?''

''That's the Statue of Liberty. It holds the torch for all who seek to enter the land of liberty. 'Liberty enlightening the world' '', explained the missionary.

''I am puzzled,'' observed the young native of India. ''Did the people of your country accept that statue and believe in it?''

''Yes, they are very proud of that statue, but why are you puzzled?'' rejoined the missionary.

''I can understand that your people love liberty as I also do, but I always thought that your people did not worship idols contributed.''

At last reports the idol is still worshiped tho the liberty has long since deported. Ed.

be that in a choice between soul and sot, I had chosen the soul.'' Then after a moments thought she added ''Mother, I only saw that boy twice, both times under unfavorable circumstances, and neither time, did he speak of himself, nor did he berate others. He always spoke of the great problems of life; of those deeper things of which I love to dream. But of which you and daddy never seem to think.'' She drew the notes Jack had written from somewhere about her person and read their contents to the mother.

''Foxes have holes, and the birds of the heavens have nests, but the son of man has no where to lay his head,'' she quoted with a whimsical smile. ''If Christ came to Anamoose you would call him a tramp and if I associated with him your friends would call me a Magdalene. But mother dear don't worry, I have my life to live; I have my work to do. NO ''MEXICAN SOVIET'' YET—OBREGON AN OTHER KERENSKY.

ly to his popularity was due more largely to the public desire to show resentment against political dictation, especially dictation supposed to proceed from the United States. The plot to buy the election for Bonillas proved a fizzle, and the popular outburst, getting beyond all possibility of control, was allowed to run its course. Then American Big Business set about it to make friends with the man who was swept into power on this wave of wrath. Evidently it is going to succeed.

..American capitalism may not know it, but by subsidizing the new revolutionary government and diverting the natural fruits of the revolution away from the Mexican people, it is kindling the flames of another uprising not many years ehnce.

And Mexico's next revolution will be a Bolshevist Revolution!

From Our Petrograd Correspondent

The Toiler publishes this week the first communication received from our own correspondent in Petrograd. Our readers may expect these to appear at intervals of every two weeks or thereabouts as long as the comrade remains there.

The comrade who will send these messages to you is on a special mission to Russia and since his letters must be sent out thru the blockaded Russian boundaries, surreptitiously, they will not arrive regularly nor contain all that we would wish, but they will contain much interesting matter relative to the conditions in Socialist Russia, likewise they will be absolutely authentic.

Petrograd, Russia, April 1st 1920.

I am home. Russia has changed fundamentally and thoroughly. When you come over you will notice this great change. Of bread we have not any too much, but still enough. Industry is not in a very favorable state; one thing that prevents us from applying our hands to actual production, is the lack of the means of transportation, the shortage of machinery and of skilled factory workers. Immense mumbers of these latter were drawn into the army to combat the counterrevolution. An army of three to four million men is not a joke, but a serious economic factor in a crisis such as we are confronted with. We are beginning to liquidate the front and transfer the army from the battle field to industry. We hope to revive entirely within a couple of years. It took us two years to defeat imperialism in the military sense, and will take about as long to defeat it economically.

The international proletariat will of course, have to take the same active part in this struggle as it took protesting against military intervention, the question as to economics must be put in the same way.

So, you see we have to fight yet quite a bit. From the stand point of food we are quite short, but intellectually we are the highest working class section of the world. I have already gotten acquainted with a few of the leading personalities of the new Soviet government and know how they are provided with life's necessities. For a long time we have not seen white bread, real coffee and tea, but nevertheless we have something to eat. Germany and Austria would be happy if they had half as much as we have in Petrograd.

In a week I will go to Moscow to attend the conference of the Bureau of the Third Internationale. Have already met some of my old acquaintences in Petrograd and expect to see more in Moscow. American Communists should unite at all costs, otherwise they will lose respect before their European [illegible]les.

With hearty greetings to all my friends and comrades in America!

Yours
A. B. C.

Financial Free-booters to Batter Workers into Submission with Unemployment

— By Paul Hanna,
Staff Correspondent
The Federated Press.

WASHINGTON.—Immediately after the big party conventions at Chicago and San Francisco tens of hundreds of thousands of workmen will be laid off by the basic industries, according to persistent reports circulating at Washington.

This enforced idleness may be long or brief, depending upon the adjustment of a number of factors operating to bring it about. These factors are three in number, the first two being of almost equal importance in the minds of industrial captains. They are:

(1) A desire to shatter the morale of labor and bring down wages by giving a taste of unemployment to the working class.

(2) Inability of the railroads to move a growing accumulation of commodities from the point of production, and the consequent need to reduce the output temporarily.

(3) A desire on the part of the bigger capitalists to squeeze out the smaller lot of speculators in manufacture and merchandizing, who are being pinched between the restriction of bank credit and the decreased purchasing power of the public.

While this attempt at partial "re-adjustment" may easily lead into the major post-war panic which all experts anticipate, careful judges of the situation, declare this coming spell of hard times is intended to last only for a few months — just long enough for really big capital to consolidate its position still further and "dig in" to resist the world-wide plague of bankruptcy, unemployment and famine, which is expected to come a year or two later.

Both for election purposes and to insure against unruly protests from the mob when the big disaster arrives, a preliminary lesson in humility is to be taught the working class.

The oil, steel and automobile industries it is said, will take the lead in laying off a big proportion of their men after the Republicans and Democrats have nominated their candidates for president. Detroit is mentioned as an automobile center that has been most thoroughly organized to this end.

Capitalists blame the general prosperity now preaviling for the success which has attended the so-called outlaw railroad strike. Their reports tell them that railroad men no longer willing to endure the low wages and neglect of their old employment have been readily absorbed by other industries. It has been a perfect example of the embarassment that is always felt by employers when there is no reserve army of idle workers to drive down or keep down the wages of the employed.

This railroad strike has proved the axiom of employers that there can be no "discipline" in industry if the workers are free to choose their own employment. To restore that lost "discipline" the partial shut-down in the oil, steel, automobile and other industries is being planned.

At the same time the unemployment birch is applied to labor elsewhere, an increase in pay totalling some 40 per cent is being arranged for the railroad men. Trains must be kept moving, and the partial paralysis of transportation now prevailing causes alarm in high places. Unemployment in other industries, coupled with a timely wage increase on the railroads, in expected to bring the truant "vacationists" scampering back to the transportation system, sorry that they ever left and in a mood to stick in future.

Incidentally, that wage increase will add a billion dollars to the expenses of the roads, and they must have another billion for themselves under private operation. Where the two billions are to come from is a separate matter, and one that railroad financiers cannot think about without getting a headache.

MOSCOW— (By Mail)— The first Congress of Trade and Technical Education was opened by Lunacharsky, commissar of education, on April 28th. Lunacharsky emphasized the necessity of technical schools. Strenuous agitation must be undertaken, he said, to create agricultural-technical schools in the rural districts.

The central committee for technical education outlined a plan for technical education with cooperation of trade unions and the Supreme Council of National Economy.

Let Your Dollars Bespeak Your Loyalty.

There's an old saying that "you never know your friends until trouble overhelms you." And there is a world of truth in that old saw and it applys to The Toiler as well as to any individual. The Toiler is just now learning who and how many are its friends—friends who regard it as no sacrifice to dig up an extra dollar for its preservation and if they have to dig deeply for it, it comes forth with just as willing a hand.

And we are beginning to wonder just how many there will be of the "loyal" ones—those who are going to respond to the Toiler's call for help in the crisis which confronts it. We know hundreds are going to be recorded in The Toiler's Dollar Campaign for Paper Stock. Possibly, there will be many more who will not feel able to give the dollar they want to give. But in the end we firmly believe that there will be very few who will find it absolutely necessary to stay outside the big circle of Dollar Contributors.

The dollars ore comming fast now. Every mail brings a shower of one, two and five dollar bills which have been sent hastily to meet the crisis and stay the hand of death from The Toiler. We read the letters which acompany them and we marvel at the faith and comradeship expressed in them. Each and every one breathes of the spirit of our Great Cause, all declare the necessity of keeping The Toiler in the field for workinglass education and organization. We read the letters and then we begin to know why we cannot fail, why we must and will keep in the fight at all costs no matter how great the sacrifice may be. For every letter is a testimony to the resolution and determination of our readers to do their full share in securing the necessary paper supply to keep The Toiler in the field.

The amounts received are gratifying indeed and if the dollar bills just keep coming in at their present rate until July 1st, the needed amount, $2,500 will be raised. We believe they will keep coming because our readers are made of the kind of stuff that DO things and—they have to keep coming if we are to visit you each week for the coming months.

We are using our wts and our credit (backed up by the prospects of your expected help) in getting this issue printed. We have "borrowed" enough paper for this issue. But you know the saying that "he who borrowing goes sorrowing". Some truth in that too. In this case the sorrow consists in the fact that the paper must be returned—and we have to get it before it can be. Far better to buy it first and that is why we must urge immediate action on your part. If you are going to send a dollar to The Toiler—send it now. If you are NOT going to send a dollar—sit down and think; think hard, try, if you can, to think of ANYTHING that would do more for the cause of Socialism RIGHT NOW than that one dollar bill in your pocket!

We don't want and we can't if we did, acquire the habit of borrowing paper weekly. That little game is very short lived these days—especially if you are a Communist Toiler. We much prefer to buy our paper and we will have to too. We know where there are 300 reams of newsprint—and we are going to have that paper. We are going to buy it on the very best security—the belief and knowledge that there are hundreds and hundreds of Toiler Boosters who will guarantee the account—who are going to make our word good with their dollar bills.

And then we must prepare for future months. We must prepare NOW. We must lay in a supply for months ahead and never allow it to dwindle—for the newsprint situation is not going to materially improve. Every month the price is a little higher. We must make the Toiler as safe as is possible to do. The one thing needful NOW is that each reader whose interest in socialism and the workingclass is more than 'skin deep' is to make it known by remitting his dollar—or more—immediately.

British Parleys May Open Trade

LONDON.—That the parleys between Premier David Lloyd George and Gregory Krassin, Russian soviet minister of trade and commerce, are leading to the conclusion of peace between soviet Russia and England is the conviction of those in close touch with the situation here. According to the political correspondent of The London Daily Herald, Krassin is putting up very bluntly the choice between war and no trade, or peace with trade.

"It is certain," says the correspondent, "that discussions have been more of a political than of a commercial nature, in spite of press reports to the contrary. Russia is giving the British permier the first opportunity to realize that all trade negotiations are futile unless the basis is one of genuine peace, and the abandonment by Great Pritain of all plots against the soviet republic. There can be no doubt that Krassin put this point quite firmly.

"Lloyd George's reaction may be judged from the fact that Krasin went straight from Dowing Street to rent offices for his delegation. That is an omen of coming peace. American traders will need to get busy if they want to be left on the map."

In an interview secured by the Herald's Copenhagen correspondent with Maxim Litvinoff, it was stated that Litvinoff is in constant cable communication with Krassin as the parley progresses.

The fact that Premier Millerand has refused to allow Jules Cambon, French ambassador at London to be present at the parley is regarded as a ruse on her part to throw the responsibility for peace on Lloyd George and evade breaking her vow that she would never deal politically with soviet Russia. Government papers emphasize the fact that the British premier is not acting in the name of the allies.

The French papers are full of the negotiations. In a leading editorial in the Echo de Paris, Petinax, who often speaks for the French government, declares that it is the pressure of the English workers which is forcing Lloyd George to consider peace with soviet Russia.

"For eighteen months," says the editorial, "Lloyd George has been working to get in touch with Moscow."

"The French government intends to leave to Lloyd George complete responsibility for his conduct....."We have never been fooled concerning the real meaning which the British Ministry attacked to decisions of the Supreme Council relative to the exchange of products with the Russian cooperatives. Now we stand on those decisions, however."

MOSCOW— The peasants along the coast of the Black Sea have sent the catch of one day's fishing to the starving children in the cities. It consisted of 4.000 poods. The workers in the same district have decided to give up a weeks pay for the same cause.

VARDO, Norway.—A Scandinavian labor delegation reached Murmansk, in Soviet Russia, on May 2. The delegation was received by Soviet representatives, among them M. Begi, who arriver directly from Moscow to welcome the delegation on behalf of the Soviet government.

Begi explained the hope that the visit of the delegation would bring friendly relations between the Russian and Scandinavian workers. Langseth replied on behalf of the Norwegian workers and Karlsson on behalf of the Swedish.

MOSCOW.—During the "work month" coal production in the district of Tjeljabinsk came up to 1,300,000 poods as compared with 900,000 poods estimated in advance.

During April the production was about 106,000 poods per day as compared to 65,000 poods per day in March. All old mines have been opened and new mines put under work.

Communists Bring Legion Post into Court for Damages

CINCINNATI, June 7th.—The policy of members of the American Legion in breaking into labor union and radical headquarters and destroying property has been brought into the courts here by the suit of the Communist Labor Party against the local post of the American Legion and certain members of the order. Lotta Burke for the communists asks for $450 property damages and $5,000 punitive damages. The case is now on trial in the Superior Court of Hamilton County. Jos. W. Sharts of Dayton is counsel for the defendants.

The action on which the suit is based took place last November when following a night meeting of the Legion post a crowd of the members broke into the joint headquarters of the machinists union and the socialists, threw the literature, furniture and other property out of the windows and burned it on the street. There were no officials of either organization present and no personal attacks were made. Members of the local police were present but made no effort to stop the marauders. They counselled them from time to time to be careful not to break any windows or doors lest they might lay themselves open to the charge of "destroying property." The ring leader of the mob, who afterward boasted in the newspapers of his part in the affair, was a sergeant in the Ordinance Department of the government.

One of the local socialists, a member of the Legion, was present at the meeting and has made affidavit to many of the vital points upon which the suit was based.

JOHN REED GIVEN TRIAL IN FINLAND

ABO, Finland—(By Mail)—The city court of Abo on April 26th concluded the case of John Reed, American newspaper man and leader in the Communist Labor Party, who was arrested on a charge of smuggling. The court decided that it was proven that on March 13 John Reed "had tried to smuggle out of the country 102 diamonds and money." The court imposed a fine of 5,000 marks and besides Reed lost the diamonds to the Finish government. According to the press reports, the diamonds were worth 266,000 Finnish marks ($1—19 marks).

John Reed, noted newspaper man and author was born in Portland, Oregon, his father being at one time chief of police there. He became prominent in newspaper work during the Mexican revolution against Diaz.

He spent several months in Russia during the critical days of the rise of the Bolsheviki to power and wittnessed their victory. His book, Ten Days That Shook the World, is considered one of the most exact and authoritative books that have been written of the revolution.

Returning to America about a year ago, he became active in the organization of the Left Wing of the Socialist Movement here and was instrumental in forming the Communist Labor Party out of Left Wing elements that were expelled from the more conservative Socialist Party. He was one among 39 members of this Party who have been indicted on charges of violating the criminal syndicalism law of Illinois in the formation of this Party and would be among the number now on trial at Chicago had he been apprehended.

Reed returned to Russia several months ago and visited former friends, officials of the Soviet government. His reported capture and imprisonment in Abo, Finland was the first information reaching friends here that he had left Russia. It is presumed that he has returned to Russia after gaining his freedom from the White Guard government of Finland.

Agent Provocateur Attempts to Organize Switchmen into "Violence Squads"

IS REPUDIATED.

MAN CLAIMED BY RADICALS TO BE IN GOVERNMENT EMPLOY STATES HE HAS $20,000 FOR ORGANIZATION OF DESTRUCTIVE WORK AGAINST RAILROADS.

Strikers are warned by cool heads to avoid violence.

Failure of the railroad and the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce to break the ranks of the striking railroad workers of this vicinity has made them desperate. It is the conviction of alert strikers and radicals of the city that they have now resorted to the time honored methods of instituting violence thru agents in government employ who have gained the confidence of the strikers, hoping thereby to clear the way for government action and persecution against the strikrs.

A certain individual who has been notoriously active among the radicals of the city for months has approached leaders of the strikers and urged the organization of "strong arm" squads from among their ranks for the purpose of instituting a reign of violence against the railroads. This individual claims to be wealthy and openly says he is an anarchist. Twenty thousand dollars is at his disposal he states for the furtherance of this scheme which is to be led by revolutionists who have volunteered to take a leading part.

Investigation is made by strikers.

Leaders among the strikers whose judgement and integrity are relied upon by the rank and file at once proceeded to inquire into the character of the proponent of the scheme. Because he had been known to associate with certain of the Communist and Communist Labor Party members who have the unqualified confidence of the strikers, it was believed at first that whatever merit was contained in his proposal it came at least from honest motives.

Investigaton opened the eyes of the strikers to the duplicity of the purpose that is believed to lay behind this nefarious scheme which was planned solely for the purpose of wrecking the organized strikers upon the rock of a governmental frame-up. The strikers learned that the individual in question has been declared an agent provocateur in the employ of the goverment secret service by the communists of Cleveland and elsewhere. A membership in both the Communist and Communist Labor Parties, certain activities which point unmistakably to his connection with governmental agencies were set before the strikers by communists as proof of his character as a government agent for the purpose of violence and unlawful measures.

Communists whose suspicious have been aroused, by questionable activities of this individual recently made an investigation of him covering a number of years in many localities in this country. Their findings were the basis of the information furnishing the strikers. The strikers were emphatically warned by the communists to beware of any proposal he might make to them as they would surely become entangled in snares which could lead only to prison and the breaking up of their organization.

Cleveland railroad strikers have made a valiant fight for their organzation. Their ranks are unbroken and they have uniformly advocated and practiced orderly and lawful measures to win their demands. They are now alert to weed out such destructionists as the principal in this case and will maintain a careful watch that no more of this ilk obtain influence in their ranks.

KATE O'HARE IS FREE

Kate O'Hare, militant labor unionist and socialist was released from Jefferson City Mo., prison June 1st. Her sentence of five years was commuted by President Wilson to expire at that time.

Mrs. O'Hare was sentenced 14 months ago to serve five years for alleged violation of the espionage law in statements made in a speech at Bowman, N. D.

Government officials deny that this is to be taken as an indication that there is to ensue a general amnesty for political prisoners, or that it will mean that Eugene V. Debs, who is serving a sentence of 10 years at Atlanta Ga., on a similar charge, will be released.

Thousands of friends scattered all over the American Continent are made happy over her release. She has spent many years on the socialist platform and in socialist work.

Mrs. O'Hare became a close friend of Emma Goldman while at Jefferson City Prison, Miss Goldman being a prisoner there up to the time of her deportation to Russia a few months ago.

WHEN IN CHICAGO VISIT HERE.

The Walden bookshop, operating here under the Chicago Co-operative Bookstores Company, which also owns the Radical bookshop, has just opened its doors to the public. The name Walden was given the store in memory of the home of Thoreau, an early advocate of free speech.

The windows of the shop was designed and decorated by William J. Beauly of New York and Fred S. Foster of Chicago. Inside the books are conveniently arranged alphabetically and in divisions of economics, fiction, drama and poetry. There is a long table with an artistic reading lamp and comfortable chairs where one can sit down and thumb over interesting titles without being pursued by an avaricious clerk.

MOSCOW— Arrangements have been made to dispatch five oil trains daily to Moscow. The Second Labor Army has started the construction of a railroad from Saratoff to Emba for the oil trade.

Skygac's Column

(Written especially for The Toiler.)

Deceit is deception even if the war-makers did excuse it with the polite name of camouflage. It is a characteristic of savagery and a capitalist class necessity. "Business is business my boy!"

Capitalism has made deception an art. Black art as it were.

Always think and act in the interest of those who rule and rob you and you will always be spoken of by those who rule and rob you as a good, loyal, patriotic godfearing citizen. But what a price to pay for praise!

Every conceivable way (except the ONE and ONLY way) to achieve the solidarity of the working class. The one and only method is by and through the spread of correct scientific information—Scientific Socialism.

There are no short cuts to science.

How can a few exploit the many and not allow the many to find out how it is done? Ask the modern school-ma'am. She ought to know—but alas, in nine cases out of ten she don't. It is the deceit of the modern educational system.

Plute Press idiot-orials are now telling us all about starving Russia. How she has plenty of raw materials and plenty of man power, yet starves. Then they tell us it is because of the wrong teachings of sovietism. More deceit. What the P. P. fails to tell is the fact that you can not work up raw materials without machinery and the Allied blockade keeps Russia from getting the necessary tools. The P. P. has told so many lies that a few more or less really makes little difference. In the mean time the soviet idea has spread to the four corners of the biblical earth and worried the exploiters of mankind muchly.

The difference between the value of laboring power and the value of labor's product is the bone of contention between the workers and the master-class. Every clash of the classes is over this difference or other minor matters which arise out of this condition. The problem of the master-class is to find some manner or method whereby the clash of the classes may be avoided and yet allow the master class to keep the difference between the value of labor power and the value of labor's product. A leather medal (made of imitation—in conformity with the spirit of the times) containing a replica of the famous fourteen pointless points will be given to the first person who can accurately foretell just when the master-class will give up their fruitless search.

Our struggle to live drives us forward. Our master-class training holds us back. Wherin lies our free-moral-agency?

Social production has grown too large for capitalist-class ownership. Social ownership must follow.

"President releases political prisoner"—press headline. Mrs. Kate Richards O'Hare pardoned by the president after two years imprisonment. Thus gradually do we elarn that there really ARE political prisoners in this used-to-be-land of the free.

Form a card of thanks published in the local paper we learn of the influence of modern industrialism upon everything—including funerals. "We wish to thank our friends and neighbors and also employees of—Machine company, (where she worked) and—Motor Company (where he worked) for the kindness and sympathy shown us during the illness and at the death of our wife and mother,—C. B. and children."

All the political parties of the master class should vie with each other for the rights to the populer song," I'm forever blowing bubbles, pretty bubbles in the air." But the worker who chases those pretty bubbles is a Dubb of the tribe of Henry.

Next time you get a gold back bill take it to the nearest bank and insist on getting a gold piece for it. You'll have some fun listening to the banker's explanations. The gold back bills carry a promise that they will be redeemed in gold. They are a government promise. Ask your banker first if the promises of the government are of any value. When he answers "yes" then spring the bill. Both of you will probably learn something by what will follow.

We had a street meeting in our town. A National organizer for the S. P. spoke on the main stem, oh about the plum plan and every thing (except the class-struggle). She said the city manager had told her she could not speak and the prosecuting attorney had told her she could. Who said we couldn't have free speech in this country if we ask for it real pretty?

The extravagant workers are now paying 16c for a (what-used-to-be) 5c loaf of bread. The lure of the loaf will lead the people into bolshevism yet.

From a recent pronouncement of the G. A. R. one learns that they have given up the ideals of Lincoln. Lincoln cherished the hope that America might have a "government of, for and by the people." The G. A. R., or rather the commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. in a message published in the American Legion Weekly says the G. A. R. stands firmly against Bolshevism and soviet rule." Soviet rule is rule for, of and by the people.

Congress impertinently expressed itself about Home Rule for Ireland the other day. Wonder when it will express itself about home rule for US?

PALMER AND DEPT. OF JUSTICE CONDEMNED

WASHINGTON—Forgery, perjury and assault have been committed by agents of Attorney General Palmer in the course of "continued violation of the Constitution and breaking of laws by the Department of Justice", according to a damning indictment, backed by affidavits and photographs, made public here by a committee fo distinguished members of the American bar.

This sensational allegation of persistent criminality among the highest law officers of the government is addressed "To The American People" and is called a "Report Upon Illegal Practices by The United States Department of Justice." It is a report to the National Popular Government League and is signed by the following lawyers:

Z. Chafee, Jr., Cambridge, Mass.
Professor of Law, Harward Law School.
Felix Frankfurter, New York,
Harvard Law School.
Prof. Ernst Freund, Chicago, Ill.
Prof. of Jurisprudence and Public Law, Unive. of Chicago,—Author of "Standards of American Legislation," etc.
Swinburne Hale, New York.
Attorney-at-Law. Late Captain Military Intelligence Division, General Staff, U. S. S.
Alfred Niles, Baltimore, Md.
Late Judge of the District Court. Attorney-at-Law.
Jackson H. Ralston, Washington, D. C.—Attorney-at-Law. Member American Bar Association.
Roscoe Pound, Boston, Mass.
Dean of the Law School, Harvard University.
David Wallerstein, Philadelphia, Pa.
Attorney-at-Law; Member American Bar Association.
Frank P. Walsh, New York and Kansas City.—Attorney-at-Law.
Tyrell Williams, St. Louis, Mo.
Dean of the Law School, Washington University.
Francis Fisher Kane, Philadelphia, Pa.
Attorney-at-Law, U. S. District Attorney, resigned.

Preliminary to more than fifty printed pages of exhibits to prove their charge, the lawyers made the following statement:

"TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE:

For more than six months we, the undersigned lawyers, whose sworn duty it is to uphold the Constitution and Laws of the United States, have seen with growing apprehension the continued violation of that Constitution and breaking of those Laws by the Department of Justice of the United States government.

"Under the guise of a campaign for the supression of radical activities, the office of the Attorney General, acting by its local agents throughout the country, and giving express instructions from Washington, has committed continual illegal acts. Wholesale arrests both of aliens and citizens have been made without warrant or any process of law; men and women have been jailed and held incomunicado without access of friends or counsel; homes have been entered without search-warrant and property seized and removed; other property has been wantonly destroyed; workingmen and workingwomen suspected of radical views have been shamefully abused and maltreated. Agents of the Department of Justice have been introduced into radical organizations for the purpose of informing upon their members or inciting them to activities; these agents have been instructed from Washington to arrange meetings upon certain dates fo rthe express object of facilitating wholesale raids and arrests. In support of these illegal acts, and to create sentiment in its favor, the Department of Justice has also constituted itself a propaganda bureau, and has sent to newspapers and magazines of this country quantities of material designed to excite public opinion against radicals, all at the expense of the government and outside the scope of the Attorney General's duties.

"We make no argument in favor of any radical doctrine as such, whether Socialist, Communist or Anarchist. No one of us belongs to any of these schools of thought. Nor do we now raise any question as to the Constitutional protection of free speech and a free press. We are concerned solely with bringing to the attention of the American people the utterly illegal acts which have been committed by those charged with the highest duty of enforcing the laws — acts which have caused widespread suffering and unrest, have struck at the foundation of American free institutions, and have brought the name of our country into disrepute.

"The Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

"Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.'

"Punishments of the utmost cruelty, and heretofore unthinkable in America, have become usual. Great numbers of persons arrested, both aliens and citizens, have been threatened, beaten with blackjacks, struck with fists, jailed under abominable conditions, or actually tortured. Exhibits are in our possessions and affidavits and evidence of these practices.

The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution provides:

"'The right of the people to be secure in their persons, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.'

"Many hundreds of citizens and aliens alike have been arrested in wholesale raids, without warrants or pretense of warrants. They have then either been released, or have been detained in police stations or jails for indefinite lengths of time while warrants were being applied for. It has been established in open court before Judge Anderson in Boston, Mass., that warrants of arrest were dispensed with pursuant to express written instructions from the Department of Justice at Washington. The cases are far too numerous to catalogue, but typical instances may be found in Exhibits. The secret instructions of the Department also appear as Exhibits.

In countless cases agents of the Department of Justice have entered the homes, offices or gathering places of persons suspected of radical affiliations, and, without pretense of any search warrant, have seized and removed property belonging to them for use by the Department of Justice. In many of these raids property which could not be removed or was not useful to the Department, was intentionally smashed and destroyed. One Exhibit is a photograph of the interior of a house raided by the Department of Justice. Other Exhibits give a recent opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court in a non-radical case, condemning seizure without warrant by the Department of Justice, and the opinion of the U. S. Circuit Court in Montana in a more flagrant case.

"We do not question the right of the Department of Justice to use its agents in the Bureau of Investigation to ascertain when the law is being violated. But the American people has never tolerated the use of under-cover provocative or "agents provocateurs," such as have been familiar in old Russia or Spain. Such agents have been introduced by the Department of Justice into the radical movements, have reached positions of influence therein, have occupied themselves with informing upon or instigating acts which might be declared criminal, and at the express direction of Washington have brought about meetings of radicals in order to make possible wholesale arrests at such meetings.

The Fifth Amendment provides as follows:

"'No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.'

It has been the practice of the Department of Justice and its agents, after making illegal arrests without warrant, to question the accused person and to force admissions from him by terrorism, which admissions where subsequently to be used against him in deportation proceedings. Instances of this sort appear in various Exhibits. Attention is also called to the Cannone case, in which Department agents committed assault, forgery and perjury.

"The legal functions of the Attorney General are: to advise the Government on questions of law, and to prosecute persons who have violated federal statutes. For the Attorney General to go into the field of propaganda against radicals is a deliberate misuse of his office and a deliberate squandering of funds entrusted to him by Congress. One Exhibit is a copy of a form letter sent out by the Attorney General under date of January 27, 1920, to many magazines and editors throughout the country, deliberately intended to prejudice them in favor of his actions. Another Exhibit is a description of an illustrated page offered free to country newspapers at the expense of the Department of Justice, patently designed to affect public opinion in advance of court decision and prepared in the manner of an advertising campaign in favor of repression. These documents speak for themselves.

"The Exhibits are only a small part of the evidence which may be presented of the continued violation of law by the Attorney General's Department. These Exhibits are, to the best of our knowledge and belief (based upon careful investigation) truthful both in substance and detail. Drawn mainly from the four centers of New York City, Boston, Mass., Detroit, Mich., and Hartford, Conn., we knew them to be typical of conditions which have prevailed in many parts of the country.

Since these illegal acts have been committed by the highest legal powers in the United States, these is no final appeal from them except to the conscience and condemnation of the American people. American institutions have not in fact been protected by the Attorney General's ruthless suppression. On the contrary these institutions have been seriously undermined, and revolutionary unrest has been vastly intensified. No organizations of radicals acting through propaganda over the last six months could have created as much revolutionary sentiment in America as has been created by the acts of the Department of Justice itself.

"Even were one to admit that there existed any serious "Red menace" before the Attorney General started his "unflinching war" against it, his campaign has been singularly frutiless. Out of the many thousands suspected by the Attorney General (he had already listed 60,000 by name and history on Nov. 14, 1919, aliens and citizens) what do the figures show of net result? Prior to January 1, 1920, there were actually deported 263 persons. Since January 1 there have been actually deported 18 persons. Since January 1 there have been ordered deported an additional 529 persons. The Attorney General has consequently got rid of 810 alien suspects, and, since we know of no successful "Red" prosecutions of citizens by him, he has, on his own showing, at least 59,190 left to cope with.

"It has always been the proud boast of America that this is a government of laws and of men. Our Constitution and laws have been based on the simple elements of human nature. Free men cannot be driven and repressed; they must be led. Free men respect justice and follow truth, but arbitrary power they will oppose until the end of time. There is no danger of revolution so great as that greated by suppression, ruthlessness, and by deliberate violation of the simple rules of American law and American decency.

"It is a fallacy to suppose that, any more than in the past, any servant of the people can safely constitute himself their ruler. Any such contention is a denial of the fundamental American theory of the consent of the governed."

Court Frees -- then Enslaves

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Nine members of the Industrial Workers of the World who were induced to enter a plea of technical guilt in criminal syndicalism cases here are bitterly resentful against those who caused them to make that plea.

They declare now that they didn't understand just what it would lead them into — for in making their pleas they inadvertently swore away so many liberties that though out of jail they feel they are no longer free beings.

These defendants fear, too, that their own comrades will look upon them as betrayers. In making the compromise sought by the state authorities "to save expense to the state", the nine industrialists declared thus: "We believe we are not guilty of any crime; but if simply being a member of the I. W. W. is a crime, then we are willing to admit that we are members."

Commending the American Legion for its raids on halls occupied by radical labor organizations, Superior Judge Frank R. Willis sentenced the defendants to serve from one to 14 years in prison, then suspended the sentences and placed the men on probation for five years.

Under the terms of this probation, the nine men are bound by the following rules:

They must not sell nor circulate copies of Upton Sinclair's book, "The Brass Check", nor any other literature dealing with the class struggle.

They must not visit the rooms of the Shelley Club, a conservative Socialist organization.

They must not visit the office of James H. Ryckman, labor lawyer and president of the Los Angeles unit of the Intercollegiate Socialist Society.

They must not enter any restaurant bearing the designation "cafe".

They must not visit skating rinks.

They must not be on the public streets at "late or unusual hours of the night."

They must report at the probation office on the first Sunday morning of each month until 1925.

Although Judge Willis for bade the industrialists from associating with Socialists, whose whole program is based on lawful, orderly, political action, the court told them they were free to be members of the American Federation of Labor "because it is in favor of securing all the rights due to working men by legislation."

"That is not what is termed a radical organization," declared Judge Willis. This comment aroused broad smiles in the courtroom, for before this very judge, in the Stein and Steelink I. W. W. trials recently, evidence had shown that vastly more violence had been employed in A. F. of L. strikes than had ever developed in strikes fostered by the I. W. W.

HELSINGFORS, Finland.—Edvard Valpas, editor and leader of the Finnish Socialist party and of the Finnish revolution in 1918, has been sentenced to prison for life. He was tried on the charge of high treason.

Chapter XXXIV.

The Father's View.

When Gustave Anderson came home from the office that evening, his wife informed him, of their daughter's new departure from the straight and narrow path, in which she ought to walk. She told him, that Olive had received, and answered a letter from 'that man', and also that she had broken with poor Frank Cartwright. This was the unkindest cut of all. For it was Mrs. Anderson's fond ambition, to see every thing between Olive and Frank go well. She looked upon Frank as an ideal young man, principally because he went to church when Olive went, and because he was physically and mentally to weak to be wicked. It must be said to the credit of Olive that she had tolerated the boy's attention, practically for no other reason than that it pleased her mother. This it was that caused Mrs. Anderson to storm and rave about the girl's action.

As usual, however, Gus. Anderson refused to become excited. Nothing his wife ever said or did either, surprised or excited him. He had always made his living by his wits, and he had learned from experience that wits are dulled by excitement. "A man does not do his best thinking when all up in the air," he was wont to say. "He generally gets himself into trouble, and trouble don't pay." Anderson did not like trouble when it affected him or his. He did not mind making trouble for, other people, if by so doing, his ends were served. He was a typical Teuton. He loved to carry the war into the other fellows territory whenever he found it necessary to carry on war.

At home he frankly admitted that he had surrendered to his daughter and that he had accepted his wife, as an unavoidable visitation. Tonight he listened to her story with his usual nonckalange, while he made himself comfortable in his old arm chair in front of the fire place. He reached over and took his tobacco box from the center table and methodically filled his pipe, springling little grains of tobacco over his well proportioned, and not too immaculate abdomen. Next he laboriously hoisted his right foot upon his left knee and struck a match on the sole of his shoe. He now lighted his pipe, drew in the smoke with great deliberation, as he held the match before him and watched it burn out. Next he blew a series of tiny ringlets of smoke into the air, and leaned back lazily as he watched them dissolve away, all the while listening to Mrs. Anderson's prophecies and lamentations.

When she had finished, or perhaps only paused for breath her husband remarked quietly. "That was a queer lad, that hobo, you ought to have seen him. I'll be damned if I don't believe he wasn't a hobo at all. He sure didn't act like them. Generally, they are cowards or tough necks. He was neither. He sure got Ollie started——."

"Yes," broke in the mother, "that is what comes of sending innocent girls into jails to try and reform hardened criminals. That man has been on her mind ever since."

Gus. Anderson looked at his wife, amusement written on his face. Mrs. Anderson was a fanatical church woman. It was she who inculcated the idea that it was God's will that we visit those in prison, into her daughter. Personally Anderson professed no religion. In fact he looked upon church and church work, as a social fad and famenine pastime. He never let an opportunity pass to point out its inconsistences to his wife. Especially since Olive had met that boy in jail and started on a rampage about official iniquity. It amused him to hear his wife say the very same things he had said a few months before. So he remarked that it seemed to him, that God should keep an eye on those who served Him. "He is father to the orphans and husband to the widows," he chafed. He took a certain delight in punching holes in his wife's christinnity.

Returning to the subject of the boy, he asked Mrs. Anderson how she knew that he was a hardened criminal. Holding his pipe between two fingers before him and looking at her through a bluish cloud of smoke he said, "He may be a good boy for all you know."

"He was a jail bird, that's enough. No decent man ever goes to jail. And to think that my daughter should write to him. I have always been a good woman, why must this happen to me."

"I can't see that anything is happening to you, or for that matter to Ollie either that is not just now. And what is more if there is any thing to your religion at all, then it preaches morals, justice and other things, which have no place in a business world. If that hobo is all that you say he is, then you must still give him credit for putting life in your daughters religion. That is more than your penny grabbing sky pilot ever accomplished. She surely got the people stirred up and the bunch exposed. If your religion is any more than a dress parade, or a gossip mill ;if it really aims to be a moral force then you should thank God that that boy was locked up. His being in jail was a God send, altho I admit Gods are generally expensive visitors. Just think of the fines, Duffy used to put on the bums. Why they nearly paid our city taxes and left us a handsome bunch of graft to decorate the church with. Then came along that bum, and he met our daughter or rather she found him, and she stirred up the old maids in skirts and pants, to a sentimentally moral consciousness, and now we have to pay the taxes and the pourent out of our own pockets. From a moral view point, her work was fine, and I am proud of it. But morals cost money. They have no place in business. It was an expensive clean up, and it cost us some powerful friends as well. It isn't good policy to pry into methods by which other people make their living. Specially not for people like us. Our methods in turn will not stand much prying. I wish Olive would never have started that racket. But dammit I admire her nerve. She was more sand than her old dad. But then, her dad, has to make the living."

"But Pa, think of her writing to a total stranger with, to say the least a bad repetation. The recklessness of it."

"That's her, bless her skinny little heart. I wish I could be like her. When she thinks she sees the right of a thing, she just naturally forgets herself and dives right in regardless of consequences. I feel that I'm a better man since I have been forced to defend her actions. Her conduct wasn't good business. It has cost us money but there is no dodging the issue she was right." Taking his pipe and blowing a fragrant cloud of smoke toward the ceiling, he continued, "and as for writing to a total stranger, let me tell you Ma, I don't believe that the human heart knows strangers. It is only as we compete to live that we grow shy, seared, and suspicious of one another. I did not know you when we were married and hang it I don't know you yet. Never will I reckon. But one thing is certain, that when you laid that little girl in my arms, nearly twenty years ago, right then I became pretty well convinced that we were tied pretty well together. And after that it did not make so much difference whether we understood each other or not, we knew that we were parents to that little chub, and that made us partners."

"But Pa do talk sense!" The mother demanded. "How are we going to save Olive from that man?"

"My advice would be that we send for him and give him a job in the office, or on a farm, then we can see what kind of a man he is. If he is the man for her, then there is no earthly use fussing about it, and if he is not she is the only one who can find it out. If you go and fight her, you will drive her to him just as sure as God made little apples."

"I'll not stand for any such foolishness. I'll order her to stop writing to him," his wife vociferated. "There is no sense in her throwing over a good boy like Frank Cartwright for a common jail bird, the idea!"

Anderson's pipe was now firmly between his lips at the corner of his mouth. It moved slowly from a half past four to a ten thirty position in front of his oval face. Finnally he said, "being in jail is no disgrace. All your Holy apostles were pinched off and on, even Jesus Christ was convicted as a criminal, at least so your sky pilots tell us. Personally I have never been in jail, but that is not saying that I had not ought to have been there. Just a little more justice and a little less law, and your hounrable and respected husband would be a striped canary today, and you, Ma, would be taking in washings instead of going to hen parties."

By this time Mrs. Anderson was more than indignant she fairly snapped at her imperturbable husband. "Pa, answer me, what are you going to do about it? It is terrible. You are beginning to talk just like Olive. I'm ashamed of both of you."

Anderson laughed good naturedly. "Now, Ma," said he, "I do not know as anything ought to be done about it. You haven't produced sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction. Just because she diteed that Cartwright kid, and answered the letter from another man, that is not saying that the wedding bells are all greased for ringing." Then after a pause "I'll have a talk with Ollie myself. It is true she is somewhat impracticable and I am sure she wants to do right. My advice to you is ma, that you be careful not to do wrong."

This fairly infuriated the mother. "You're a great father, you are. You should be ashamed to encourage your child in her waywardness. You should set your foot down, and order her to make up with Frank Cartwright. Use your authority as a father and stop this foolishness," she finished her voice acrid with anger.

"A father cannot be a judge," said Anderson, as he emptied his pipe in the the fire place. "You gave me that little girl Ma, and I have always been proud of her. I've done all the damned crooked things this side of the penitentiary to make you both comfortable. I would have liked to make you both happy, but as you find your happiness in heaven, and I find mine at the table, of course I realize that I have failed to some extent. Still it was for you and her, that I fooled myself into believing that wrong was right. Anything for your benefit as I saw it, but we all have different eyes. I may thank God, that she did not lose all respect for me when that kid in jail told her to look behind the curtains. And now you tell me that she is making a great decision and if it is true I want to hear her side of the story before giving any advice."

Mrs. Anderson saw that the battle was hopeless, and left the room just as Olive entered thru the portiers.

"Mother has been telling me the news. Now suppose you tell your old Dad what you know about it" Anderson said suavely.

Olive stood before him leaning on the back of a chair. She was as graceful as a willow bending in the summer breeze. "Yes, I received a letter from Mr. Thurston. I heard mother telling you about it."

"It worries your mother."

"The letter?"

"Yes."

"No, Frank Cartwright worries mother. She wants me to go with him just because she and his mother are friends. But it would be a crime for me to go with Frank. We are so hopelessly different."

"But he can give you a home and a respectable name," her mother hissed from the next room. "What can the hobo do for you."

The father waved his hand in annoyance, and nodded for the girl to go on, and Olive continued. "I know that I could never marry Frank, and what is the use to be shamming. I know nothing of the other man. I've only seen him twice, I may never see him again. Very likely not, but I owe him one thing which I can never repay. He found me sleeping in the house of lies. He awakened me and showed me the path of truth. I am not thinking of marriage with any one. I want to go out in the world and fight the battle of the opressed. I'll fight the same fight I have started here. And I will make others fight for the [illegible]

"Force and Violence"!

With an astonishing emulation and rapidity the capitalist nations of the world and the different states which make up the United States of America have for two years or more been passing laws against the use of "force and violence" by insurgent and dissatisfied elements of the population in seeking to bring about governmental changes.

Thousands have been arrested (unlawfully), followed by forcible deportation of hundreds. Thousands of private homes and workers' halls have been forcibly entered and raided. Hundreds have been beaten and slugged by the strong arm squad of a governmental department miscalled Department of Justice. Some have been murdered outright by the extreme cruelties and forcible measures used against them. Others have been driven insane.

All this was brought about by the use of force and violence. Unlawful and inhuman use of force and violence. Unlawful and inhuman use of force and violence by the government. This fact is now being admitted by some departments of the government. But its admittance is but a reflex or a prevailing sentiment of the great mass of the people thruout the country. And in so far as accomplishing the ends sought — a mere mouse has been brought forth. No threatening movement of the masses, admitting that such existed, against constituted authority has been averted nor brought under authority. And it is safe to assert that none with courageous convictions will nor can be by these methods.

While the capitalist governments, state and national, have hypocritically waged a war against the use of force and violence, they have continuously practiced its use and have created the very sentiment they sought to prevent.

Casting a backward glance over events of the past five years, we see a world blackened and in ruins with ten million graves as a result of the application to the world's problems of the use of force and violence by capitalistic agencies. After an orgy of such unprecedented slaughter, how hypocritical seem the protestations of Palmer and the henchmen of capitalism against the use of force and violence in the arena of politico-social affairs. Dripping with the blood of their fellow men, the capitalist conspirators profess their angelic, lily whiteness and proceed to accomplish more slaughter and violence if the profits of their masters are menaced.

Here are the latest figures upon the slaughter of Europe under the rule of make—believe advocates of "peace on earth, good will to man".

FINAL WAR FIGURES

The World War reduced the population of the earth 40,000,000. This is the estimate of the Society for the Study of the Social Consequences of the War, a Copenhagen organization. Its figures include war casualties, rise in deaths and decline in births.

On this basis, Russia was the heaviest sufferer, losing 13,000,000; Germany lost 6,300,000; Austria-Hungary, 5,800,000; France, 3,340,000, Italy, 2,280,00; Great Britain 1,850,000; Serbia, 1,650,00; Rumania, 570,00; Belgium, 375,000; Bulgaria, 275,000; America, 300,000.

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace places the direct cost of this slaughter at $186,000,000,000 and the indirect cost at $151,612,542,560.

All the wars between Napoleon's time and the World War showed a loss of life on the battlefield of only 4,450,000. The known dead of the World War battles total 9,998,771 and the missing 2,991,800.

This is the result of capitalism's control of life's necessities; the result of the control of all men's needs by a parasitic few whose profits come first and the welfare of the masses last or not at all.

This fact is the problem of today. It is especially the problem of the great suffering masses who pay the terrific cost in blood and treasure. No worker can evade this issue. It will pursue him relentlessly. Whether he recognizes it at present or not, ultimately it confronts him and demands his answer.

The world is moving swiftly toward the point where we must directly face the overthrow of the rule of capitalism, the profiteering rule of the parasites and substitute that of the masses, the producers. We are nearing that point even in America. Old methods of workers' organization, old political theories are being cast aside for new ones which have brought success to the workers in Europe. We must study the uses of these weapons under conditions prevailing here. Mass action, dictatorship of the proletariat, shop committees, these are tactics and organization methods we workers must learn the meaning and the use of.

We must prepare the groundwork upon which we are to erect a society wherein the use of "force and violence" will eventually become unnecessary. The masses only can accomplish this task.

DEBS ACCEPTS – A TRAGEDY

A matter that has been agitating the minds of thousands of radicals and socialists for some weeks has been set at rest by the acceptance by Eugene Victor Debs of the Socialist Party nomination for the Presidency.

The divisions within the ranks of the socialists, the ousting of the "Lefts", or revolutionary elements from the Party by the more conservative "Right wing", the formation of two Communist parties out of the Left group, the eventual split in the ranks of the Communist Party; the governmental repressions, deportations and persecutions especially of the Communists and Communists Laborites; the expulsion of the Socialist Assemblymen from the New York legislature the reactionary stand taken by the Socialist Party in its convention; together with the fact of Debs own imprisonment at Atlanta Federal penitentiary, all have focused socialist attention upon the matter of the position of the former standard bearer of the Socialist Movement toward his probable nomination for the fifth time of the highest office in the gift of the American workingclass.

In view of the fact that comrade Debs was shut away from participation in socialist activities and unable to receive but very little matter pertaining to Party affairs and developments in the movement, it was believed by most revolutionary elements in the movement that he would decline to accept the nomination. Previous to the Socialist Party convention Debs had sought to unite the Communist Labor Party and the Socialist Party for harmonious campaign work at least, stating that deeper differences might be adjusted later. In this Debs was undoubtedly [illegible] to prepare the way for a political protest by the [illegible] of [illegible] workers against the oppressions of capitalism. His project was repudiated by both Parties in the realization of the deep fundamental differences between them.

For years Debs and the revolutionary attitude he took upon matters of the working class struggle have been bitterly fought by the same individuals who now tender him the nomination. This fact is significant. It brings to the front a question to which there can be but one answer. The officialdom who now control the Socialist Party have not changed their moderate socialism into the revolutionary socialism of Debs. They like his position no less than formerly. Then why have they, in practically complete control of the convention, without a revolutionary following to force them to accept Debs, named him again the nominee of their Party? It is a question that is on the tongues of thousands who see at a glance the inconsistency in the situation. There is but one answer. The same political socialists who have fought Debs and his revolutionary attitude in the past now hope to garner a harvest of votes and a measure of prestige for their party by carrying his revered name at the head of their political ticket. This is the reason and there is no other. The Socialist Party is entering upon an entirely new phase of its life. It is now practically rid of all revolutionary elements and glories in that fact, it has repudiated the Third International. It has placed moderatism, political socialism, clearly above revolutionary mass action. It has swung so far to the Right that it almost meets itself coming back. It is seeking votes, not socialist votes so much as "labor" votes, votes of the merely discontented, Non artisan League votes, any and all kinds of votes that will give it political popularity.

Debs will not make his campaign. It will be made for him by the very ones he has opposed, upon a platform he has almost repudiated. It will not be Debs' campaign any more than it is a Debs platform, had he had the making of it. Debs' statement at the time of his acceptance of the nomination, in decrying the lack of stress in the adopted platform of the class struggle and of industrial unionism, that: "we can breathe the breath of revolution into any platform", is decidedly unsatisfactory. Undoubtedly Debs might perform a miracle of that sort had he an opportunity, but the opportunity is not his and those who have his campaign in hand will not breathe a revolutionary spirit into it for they do not possess it within themselves. His hopes in this respect are bound to meet with disappointment.

The statement has been freely made that should Debs be made fully acquainted with the situation in the Movement and the development of the Revolution all over the world, he would never accept this nomination. It was in this belief, and in the further desire to accomplish a comradely duty that an unofficial committee of the Communist Labor Party visited him at Atlanta prison. As best it could under the circumstances, this committee laid before him the entire situation including his own position in the world Revolutionary Movement. It cannot now be said that Debs did not know. The nomination has apparently been accepted in full possession of the facts. In accepting it Debs has definitely alligned himself with the moderates, the politicals, the vote chaser, the compromisers, with the Party that has repudiated the tried and proven principles and tactics that lead to workingclass victory.

What other thoughts were in Debs' mind as he paced his prison quarters no one can say. Doubtless the faces of many friends, comrades came before him, many hard fought battles came again to mind, many ties of friendship tugged at his heartstrings. All presenting claims which insistently demanded their share, and would not, could not be denied.

That comrade Debs has made an error in this critical moment is our conviction. That he had not done so—had at least have remained neutral for the while, is our wish. Circumstances have made him the plaything of forces stronger than he. They have made a tragedy of the life of America's most beloved.

OUTLINE FOR CHAPTER XII.

Beginning	Use of electrical power in industry.
Tools and Weapons	Steam, electric and gas-power machinery. Modern firearms and massive ordinance, submarines, aeroplanes, poison gas.
Transportation	On land, steam, electric and gas-propelled cars and vehicles. On water, steam, electric and gas-propelled vessels of great proportions. In air, gas-propelled aeroplanes and dirigible hydroplanes.
Subsistence	Same as in previous periods, plus package foods, imitations and adulterations.
Shelter	Buildings of brick, lumber, stone, concrete and steel.
Clothing	Same as previous periods with more adulteration, imitation furs, etc.
Environment	Greater scale agriculture, great industrial cities, rapid transit and communication. Tightening of class lines. Growth of the penal system.
Organization	Monarchical, representative political government. Vast armies and navies, police constabulary and detective systems. Development of industrial unions. Great newspaper syndicates, great libraries, schools, colleges, universities, churches, theatres and moving pictures, all controlled in the interest of the dominant class.
Arts and Institutions	Beginning of air transportation. Air warfare. Wireless telegraphy and telephony. Beginning of nationalization of great industries. Development of revolutionary groups, working for the abolition of the wages-system.
Duration	From the year 1868 to the present time.

CHAPTER TWELVE.

Civilization. (Modern Industry.)

The upper age of civilization, known as the age of modern industry, began with the appearance of the electric motor.

M. Faraday,, in 1831, discovered that an electrical conductor when moved in a magnetic field would generate an electro-motive force. It was this discovery which made commercial electricity as a source of motive force possible. The use of electricity as a motive-force was brought into commercial use about the year 1868.

The economic urge underlying the development of commercial electrical power is to be found in the concentration of people in vast indusrial establishments with the consequent need of quick, frequent and smokeless street and interurban transportation. The same economic urge forced the introduction of electro-motive force within the factories, chiefly in response to the speed-up system and the piece-work pay phase of the wages sysem.

The perfection of electrical devices made the gas engine possible. The gas engine made possible the automobile, aeroplane, hydroplane and other machines requiring localized power. Gas and electric power greatly reduced the time element in transportation and production and thereby again modified the social structure.

In warfare as well as production gas and electricity made their power felt. The tank, submarine, caterpillar guns and tractors are some of the later developments of modern warfare.

With the development of electricity came the art of electro-chemical anaylis and sythesis known as the electrolytic processes of industry.

Nickle plating is done by the electrolytic process, as is also the extraction of gases from the atmosphere, the welding of wire and other metals, and in fact all processes of industry based upon the separation of electro-positive and electro-negative elements.

The rapid development of the automobile industry together with the telephone, the rural free delivery and the parcels post brought city and country into closer relationship and drew tighter the lines of the class struggle in agricultural communities. The advent of the "flivver" marked the passing of the paternalistic relations of agriculture and removed the 'hired-man' from the fireside to the bunk-house.

Cold storage, imitation and adulterated foods now flood the market with a resultant general race deterioration. It is a medical fact that 90% of the American people are today in some way afflicted. The great prevalance of disease gave rise to the "breakfast food" and patent medicine industries.

Concentration of industry led to a greater concentration of wealth, and also the concentration of people into great industrial centers. This raised the land values and furnished the economic motive for the erection of the 'skyscraper' and the modern apartment house.

The concetration of people in the cities, the forcible separation of the worker from the soil, due to the operation of the wages system, and private property in land, thus separating vast masses of people from the source of food supply, greatly intensified class antagonisms, which in turn developed the public and private police and penal institution to proportions hitherto unheard of.

Modern concentrated industry seeks to dispose of its surplus values, which are the direct products of the wages system, among the less developed people of the world in the form of loans and credits. Thus armies and navies develop as an international police force for the purpose of collecting the interest and guaranteeing the principal of these loans. In other words the military resources of the nations having reached the stage of modern industry are used as collection agencies for the modern industrial capitalists.

The industrial proletariat developed along with modern concentrated industry. Centralized industry furnished the economic base for the class or industrial union. The passing of the craft form of industry marked the passing of the utility of the craft union. The development of the class or industrial union is due to a conscious recognition on the part of the industrial proletarian of his class position in modern society.

The class antagonism growing out of the development of modern industry transferred the class war from the domain of theorizers and parliamentarians to an ever increasing belligerency on the part of both classes involved. The weapons of this warfare are at first intellectual: on the part of the dominant class, great newspaper syndicates, endowed magazines, schools, colleges, universities, libraries, churches and Sunday-schools, theatres, moving pictures and lecture platforms are used to control the mental processes of the workers by a propaganda seeking to justify the continued existence of the dominant class.

Overuling economic necessity forces a recognition of the futility of purely intellectual propaganda, causing the dominant class to develop their forces of physical coercion, such as state constabulary, private detective agencies, hired thugs, state militia and other public and private coercive forces.

Intellectual propaganda on the part of the dominant class was met by propaganda in kind on the part of the working class. When the dominant class entered the field of coercive force they forced the development of industrial unionism with its propaganda of industrial solidarity.

The arts institutions of the present era are so intricately interwoven with the industrial process that it would require space far beyond the proportions of this volume to enumerate and differentiate them.

Wireless telegraphy and telephony and the experiments now being carried on in the transmission of wireless power together with the quest for the secret of inter-atomic energy, gives us a glimpse of a coming new order of society based upon the transmission of wireless power or the unlocking of inter-atomic energy.

The age of modern industry began in 1868 and still continues.

SUMMARY.

The epoch of civilization began with the invention of the phonetic alphabet and the adoption of the Solonic Law.

The middle age of civilzation began with the invention of the steam engine.

The upper age of civilization began with the appearance of the electric motor and still continues.

We have now traced the development of industry, and hence the racial history, from the club in the hands of the primitive savage on upward to the hand tool of the craft age and onward through the shop, factory, partnership, company, corporation, trust, and international syndicates. As industry developed the class antagonism become ever more pronounced, and the class lines clearer, and now we are at the parting of the ways ....

The question confronting us now is; shall industry develop along the lines desired by the class conscious element of the workers, into a socially controlled mechanism for the service of all mankind?

Upon the answer to this question depends the name of the coming epoch of history.

SOVIET [illegible] ENVOYS RECEIVED IN SWEDEN

GREETED AND ACCLAIMED BY THE TOILERS OF SWEDEN.

— By F. J-n.

A unique occurance, and one that is destined to be repeated in every capitalist country of the world, took place in Stockholm on March 31, when, what may be termed "The Girst Commercial Commission of the First Socialist Republic in the World" broke thru the cordon sanitaire of the imperialistic world and arrived in Sweden, where it was given royal welcome by the toilers of that country. "The Politiken" of April first carries the following interesting and vivid account of the event, which, tho late, will undoubtedly be read with interest in this country!

SOVIET RUSSIA'S FIRST COMMERCIAL COMMISSION.

A piece of world history was written yesterday. The blockade policy of the Entente and its vassal states against Soviet Russia has miscarried beyond redemption, and Sweden is the first country to be accorded the honor of receiving a Russian Commercial Commission. This delegation, whose arrival has been looked forward to with great anticipation, arrived in Stockholm at five o'clock yesterday afternoon on the steamer Oihonna. As early as three o'clock a considerable number of spectators and friends of Soviet Russia had assembled. Among those, who were present when the steamer landed were the representative in Sweden of the Soviet Government, Friedrik Strom; Wilhelm Hellberg, Socialist attorney; Zeth Hoglund and C. N. Carleson, editors of the Politiken; Carl Vinberg, member of parliament; and many other Left Wing Socialists. Local Stockholm of the Left Wing was represented by Einar Ljungberg, who carried an imposing wreath, decorated with red ribbon, intended for L. B. Krassin. In addition to these there were at the gangplank a half-score of young ladies loaded with flowers.

Among those who undoubtedly awaited the steamer with greatest anxiety was Mrs. Krassin and her children. Mrs. Krassin, it will be noted, has been living in Sweden for a few years and Mr. Krassin can therefore during his visit stay under his own roof—something that the other members of the commission cannot do. The few Russian friends of the Soviet Republic (Russians still remaining in Stockholm) were also represented thru Professor Smirnoff.

Late in the evening the Politiken succeeded in arranging an interview with Mr. Krassin, who in spite of the many hardships of the journey obligingly put himself at our disposal.

Regarding the chief aims of the commission. Kranssin pointed out that the commercial policy of Russia is based on the following principles:

The country is at present in need of a large amount of commodities, which may be divided into two categories. First, industrial products like shoes, clothes, etc., and, second. different kinds of machinery and tools, necessary for the reconstruction of industry. Tho commodities of the first class are keenly needed, Russia must for the present get along without them because her gold fund does not permit the purchase of mere articles of immediate consumption. The principal needs of Soviet Russia are locomotives and other railroad materials essential to the increase of the country's productive powers, and to obtain these is the foremost purpose of the commission.

There are in Russia, and especially in Siberia, enormous stocks of raw material, such as grain, leather, flax, fats and minerals especially graphite; but these cannot be moved until the war ceases since all available means of transportation must be used for war purposes.

In the course of the conversation Mr. Krassin releated that during the past 1½ years no less than 2,500 railroad bridges have been constructed or put in order. Among these is the important Syrenian bridge over the Volga. 5,000 kilometers of railroad track have also been laid. Besides this everything possible has been done to bring transportation back to normal.

Krassin emphasized that for these essential commodities, locomotives and other railroad materials, Russia is willing to pay in gold. In addition to her own gold resources Russia has, thru the defeat of Kolchak, come into possession of great masses of gold which this Czarist general had turned over to the Checho-Slovaks. With the needed locomotives in operation Russia will be in position to move grain to the cities and at the same time revive transportation of commodities and raw materials.

Mr. Krassin then referred to the commercial relations between Sweden and Russia, and in his capacity of industrial engineer praised the Swedish metal industry very highly and considered the Swedish constructors as the foremost in the world. Russia is anxious to buy locomotives immediately from Sweden and will pay cash in gold, and is willing to deliver, grain to Sweden later when, with the aid of these locomotives, transportation becomes normal.

The blockade was also touched upon in the conversation, and Krassin said that Russia has not as yet received official notification of its cessation. Thus, it is still in effect, and Russia does not want to send out any ships because of the risk of being captured.

One of the main conditions for negotiations with England and other countries is that there must be no demand for a change in the constitution of Soviet Russia, which is based on the dictatorship of the proletariat, the Soviet form of government, and the socialization of industry and other means of production. On the matter of the form of government Russia cannot permit foreign intervention. It is understood that this demand must be respected if the Entente powers sincerely intend to establish relations with Russia.

UNIONS GALORE

There are unions of every description and kind
For the halt and the sick and the deaf and the blind;
For butchers and bakers and candle-stick makers,
For the aged and poor and the feeble of mind.

There are unions for pressmen and feeders galore,
For printers, I'm told, there are several more;
For printers of letters and all kinds of type-setters
And unions for sweepers who clean up the floor.

There are unions for tailors and hatters and all,
For cutters and fitters for great and for small,
For teamsters and seamsters and teachers and preachers,
And unions for sportsmen who love to play ball.

There are unions for blowers of bottles — its true,
For bottles of red and for bottles of blue;
For blowers of glass and for glass cutters too,
But the beer bottle blowers, Oh, what will they do?

Now when one of these unions goes out on a strike
If the others went too, it would be something like.
But the boss doesn't worry, he don't cry or sob,
There are other scab unions to finish the job.

So now fellow-workers, there's nothing to do
But join ONE BIG UNION that's proved good and true;
Take in all who work with their hands and their brain
'N if you don't like the world, MAKE IT OVER AGAIN.

Balkis.

RUMINATIONS OF A REBEL

— By Tom Clifford. —

The European nations which participated in the World War are bankrupt. This is an admission made by no less a personage than Mark O. Prentiss, chairman of the board of directors of the Bankers' Foreign Clearing House. Here is a frank confession from one who ought to know that the enormous financial obligations of the Allies must, through necessity, be repudiated. These obligations to the United States government and its financiers alone amount to $18,000,000,000, Germany's total wealth is $50,000,000,00, against which stands an indebtedness of $55,000,000,000. France's only hope of recovery from absolute impoverishment is the collection of the indemnity levied upon Germany, which of course will never be paid. Austria has been reduced to a condition of absolute ruin. The financial status of Italy borders on insolvency. England is no better off, her expenditures at the present time being almost double her income. No wonder Mr. Prentiss declares: "The world is sitting on a volcano that may start its eruption at any time, with the result that the financial sructure of the world, as we have grown accustomed to it, will be totally destroyed." The beginning of the end has errived. The financial end of the capitalist system is rapidly approaching a state of chaos, and the money manipulators the world over, and especially in America, are panic stricken.

As a result of the convention that the loans made to Great Britain by this country will prove a total loss, a feeling of antagonism toward the former is developing. There is no disguising the fact that Anglo-American relations are becoming so tense as to couse anxiety. Attacks on England's integrity are becoming quite common in the United States Senate and uncomplimentary references to America have recently been made in the British House of Lords. This feeling of distrust must develop eventually into open warfare between the bourgeoisie of the two countries. A marked proof of this tate of tension is evidenced by the total absence from the columns of our capitalist press of the erstwhile reference to great Britain as "Our Noble Ally." They have likewise shelved the phrase "Blood is thicker than water," which was used so effectively during the war. Since "our English cousins" have gone on the rocks financially the relationship is no longer insisted upon. Economic determinism is the Alpha and Omega of bourgeois ethics. "Money talks" is their favorite aphorism, and since Great Britain has lost her voice in the matter of meeting her bills she is no longer entitled to respectful consideration. "When thieves fall out"—well, you know the rest.

It is with relief I contrast the present plight of the Allies with the development of Soviet Russia. Although still compelled to struggle with adverse conditions, the Russian workers are not encumbered with a gigantic debt such as curses the other nations of Europe. Day by day Soviet Russia is working out her salvation, and will soon be able to stand alone and defy the bourgeoisie of the world. The trade that has hitherto been denied to Russia will in the very near future be eagerly sought by the European Allies in the hope that it will save them from utter ruin. While they have a natural disinclination to acknowledge their failure to overthrow the working class government of Russia, indications show that they are getting ready to swallow their discomfiture and acknowledge defeat. The perplexing problem that confronts them is how they can open up trade with the Soviets and avoid the humiliation of recognition. They may, as a last resort, accept Wilson's theory of "self-determination, and grudgingly concede that Russia has the sort of government she desires. At any rate, they will have to "come across."

The one outstanding opponent among the Allies to Soviet recognition is France, due to the insistance that the Russian government recognize the loans made by France to Russia under the old regime. However, the announcement recently made by theBerlin government that a working trade agreement has been consummated with the Soviet government will bring France to her knees through fear that her perpetual enemy will thus secure an economic advantage to her consequent detriment. All along the line the opposition to recognition is weakening by very force of circumstances and necessity. Although it may be deferred for a short period, victory for the Soviet government is assured. The Allies have no other alternative and must accept the inevitable.

To the keen observer the present state of the public mind in these United States is portentious not to say propitious—portentious from the standpoint of social unrest and propitious of an upheaval that may eventuate in the estabilshment of economic justice. Discontent has reached the point where the mental attitude of the mass may be defined as "I don't care a damn." That the bourgeoisie are fully aware of this universal feeling and sense the threatened danger to their rule is made apparent by their frantic efforts to "regulate" industry with a view to molifying the workers. The matter, however, has gotten beyond their control. Their rotten system has so completely broken down that all efforts to patch it up will prove unavailing. Let us expectantly await its complete dissolution and prepare ourselves for the work of the immediate future—the reorganization of society.

THE WORKER AND THE MOVIES.

SEATTLE.—When a laboring man is shown on a movie screen he is nearly always depicted as married, J. Arthur Nelson, manager and producer of Federation Film Co., told an audience in the Workers' College forum. The Federation Film company is being organized by the unions to combat the movie propaganda flooding the country.

"The reason the laboring man is married," said Nelson, "is because he has a very weak wife whom he beats regularly, or a very strong wife who does the washing for the entire neighborhood and thus supports him."

Nelson further elaborated on the generally recognized picture of the working man as the film producers manufacture this character—unshaven, dirty, and the brutal head of a home consisting of one room, also dirty.

As part of his talk on "Poison on the Screen," Nelson explained that Federation Film expects to produce shortly its first picture. Its big drama will contain an economic undercurrent. Its labor news weekly will carry views of workers and well conducted labor enterprises from all parts of the country and eventually of the world. Its economic digest will show the forces of industry at work. Distribution will be made through the various state federations and the pictures will be shown in union halls and also in the regular picture houses.

Coal Barons' Private Gunmen Rule West Va. Coal Counties

WASHINGTON—A demand for immediate Federal intervention to restore constitutional liberty to the coal miners of West Virginia was filed with President Wilson by John L. Spivak, representing the United Mine Workers of West Virginia, the West Virginia State Federation of Labor and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Spivak's letter to the President, made public June 3, reads as follows:

"In response to Secretary Tumulty's request that I present you with a summary of conditions in West Virginia, and what the miners and all other crafts wish of you, I submit the following:

"There exist in certain sections of West Virginia, notably Logan, Mingo, Mercer and McDowell conties, conditions closely akin to peonage. These conditions, which have been tolerated, if not tacitly assisted, by the state officials, at two distinct periods, have threatened to throw the state into a civil war. At the present moment they have become so intolerable, and the utter indifference of the state officials to the enforcement of state and national laws so open, that it has become urgent that the President or Congress intervene and avert imminent open strife.

"For the purpose of brevity, Ishall take Logan county as an example. Briefly, the conditions there are as follows:

"This country, better known as the Guyan Valley, is practically outside the pale of American laws. The Constitution of the United States has never been enforced. The inalienable rights of all Americans to free speech and peaceable assemblage—are forbidden upon penalty of death. This penalty has been executed by private gunmen until a reign of black terror exists which is almost unbelieveble on the American continent, and which can no longer be suffered.

"Logan, the county seat of Logan county, cannot be entered by an American citizen. To enter Logan without a pass, endangers one's life. Even newspapermen cannot enter that town without passes and even then not without danger.

"There are hundreds of heavily armed gunmen, paid by the coal operators whose sole work is to guard the town against anyone who might even attempt to claim the rights of free speech or peaceable assemblage. Between twenty and twentyfive machine guns, 6,000 high powered rifles and two carloads of cartridges, approximately one million are kept by this private army to enforce their reign. These arms and munitions are stored in the Logan country court house, ready for instant use. In addition there are from 1,500 to 2,000 gallons of whiskey also stored in the court house. Illegal traffic in liquor is open and unchecked in this country, sales being made in the court house by these private guards.

"The attention of Governor John J. Cornwell, of West Virginia, has repeatedly been called to the existence of these conditions. The only thing he has ever done was to "deplore" them. Never was he made an effort to check assaults and murders. Killings accur with irregular regularity and no efforts are made to arrest the murderers.

"The roads leading into Logan are heavily guarded by machine guns and armed men on continuous patrol. In Logan there are about 150 gunmen always lounging about the railroad station and the town proper prepared to evict forcibly any citizen, who, in their opinion, is undesirable.

"In September, 1919 the beatings, brutality and murders to which miners were subjected, and the cold indifference of the governor, so enfuriated several thousand miners that they armed themselves and set out openly to invade Logan county and enforce the Constitution of the United States.

"Civil war was iminent, and the governor perceived that he had tolerated wrongs and injustice for too long a period. He and C. F. Keeney, president of Dist. No. 17, U. M. W. of A. intercepted the enraged miners as they neared Logan, and begged them to lay down their arms and return to their homes. The governor promised a thorought investigation and a speedy righting of wrongs.

"To go into details of this investigation would be fruitless, at this this moment; suffice it to say that admissions of all these charges were frankly made, and on December 20, 1919, placed in the governor's hands. He has never even taken the trouble to read it! It lies in his desk—300,000 words, containing sufficient evidence to cause his impeachment for tolerating so vicious a system. Yet murders go on unchecked, and the vicious private army remains unhampered.

"Only a few days ago, while the governor toured the country, telling citizens how to enforce law and order, twelve men were killed and others wounded in Matewan, Mingo county. Among those killed was the mayor of Matewan, who attempted to enforce the laws of the city, state and nation. These deaths are the result of the system tolerated by the governor.

"The attention of the attorney general, to the conditions existing in Matewan which resulted in the wholesale murder, was called before the battle took place. He took no steps to stop these conditions, and since then has again refused to interfere, stating that it was a matter for the state officials to cope with. Technically he is correct; but thousands of citizens are now confronted with the following situation:

"The Constitution of the United States, laws—state and national—are ignored and openly violated by private armies in the pay of coal operators. The governor either cannot or will not enforce the constitution, state and national laws. All appeals to him have been made in vain.

"On the other hand, the Federal Government states that, technically, it is unable to interfere.

"Surely there are exigencies which of pure technicalities. When bloodshed arise which call for the overlooking is imminent, when there is no recourse but the president and the Federal Government for the righting of wrongs and the reestablishment of the rights of citizens, there must be redress given by the president or the Federal Government to thousands of sitizens of a great state.

"On behalf of all the organized miners of West Virginia, the West Virginia State Federation of Labor, and the American Civil Liberties Union, I have been requested to secure a plain answer to the question whether the rights guaranteed by the constitution of the United States apply to the citizens of West Virginia. If they do, why are they not enforced?

"I earnestly appeal to you to end the reign of teror in the southern counties of West Virginia, and re-establish the Constitution of the United States in that region; that thousands of American citizens may be permitted to live in peace and tranquility.

"Respectfully,

JOHN L. SPIVAK

"Representing:
The West Virginia State Federation of Labor.
District No. 17, U. M. of A.
District No. 29, U. M. W. of A.
The American Civil Liberties Union.

When the Seattle Union Record was illegally closed by men in federal office, pictures of the closing of the plant were shown throughout the nation together with the information that a "seditious" newspaper had been suppressed.

When the labor newspaper was released from its illegal seizure on order of the U. S. courts, the movie weekly companies carefully refrained from taking any pictures of the reopening of the building. A labor news weekly would not have omitted this detail, enthusiasts for the new undertaking of organized labor here point out.

Some Interesting Statistics

340,000 ENGLISHMEN MADE RICH BY WAR.

LONDON.—Three hundred and forty thousand persons of the country made "fortunes" during the war, according to an inland revenue official, testifying at a meeting of the house of commons select committee on war fortunes which is debating whether this wealth should be especially taxed, and if so, how? The evidence thus far given indicates that the committee's task will be most complex and difficult.

SELECTIVE SERVICE STATISTICS.

Analysis of the records shows that 100,000 country boys would furnish for the military service 4700 more soldiers than would an aqual number of city boys: 100,000 whites would furnish 1240 more than the same number of colored draftees; 100,000 native-born citizens would furnish 3500 more than an equal number of forgeign-born.

LYNCHING STATISTICS.

Lynching statistics compiled for the 30-year period from 1889 to 1918 show that Georgia led the list with 386 victims, followed closely by Mississippi with 373, Texas with 335, Louisiana with 313, Alabama with 276, Arkansas with 214, Tennessee with 196, Florida with 178 and Kentucky 169 The statistics show that during the 30-year period the north had 219 lynchings, the south 2532 and the west 156.

1,023,000 ILLITERATE SOLDIERS.

WASHINGTON—Figures compiled by the statistics branch of the general staff on illiteracy in the emergency army show that probably 7.6 per cent. of the entire force was illiterate and 17.4 relatively illiterate.

The figures are based on a total of 4,000,00 men. Of this total 211,000 are classed as wholly illiterate and 712,000 as relatively illiterate, an aggregate of 1,023.000.

24.000 FEEBLE MINDED.

NEW YORK.—More than 24,000 candidates for military service in this country during the war were rejected on the ground that they were feeble minded, according to a paper written by Dr. Pearce Bailey, chairman of the New York state commission on mental defectives, and read at the closing session of the Societies for Mental Hygiene here.

Rejection for nervous and mental diseases, he asserted, ranked fourth on the list. The percentage of mental defectives averaged six to a thousand, he said, and ran especially high among the immigrant classes of New York.

Past records showed that 50,000 delinquents might have been expected in the American army, but that only 14.000 developed. He attributed this to the work of phychiatrists in weeding out potential cases.

TREND FROM FARMS.

WASHINGTON.—An indication of the extent to which farm population has declined, relative to urban population, is furnished by the first totals for rural communities announced by the Census Bureau.

Of 50 widely scattered rural counties, 34 show a decrease since 1910.

Ten years ago the population of the United States was 46.3 per cent urban and 53.7 per cent rural. The 1920 census probably will reveal the transition of the country from an agricultural to an industrial nation, with perhaps 65 per cent city dwellers.

SUPREME COURT DECISION.

Between 1790 and 1912 the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional 33 statutes of Congress, 223 state statutes, and 23 municipal ordinaces.

Industries of the country have been complaining that the dwindling of immigration during the war has left this country short 4.000,000 workmen.

MOSCOW.—Professor Timirjaseff, a world authority on national history, botany and Psychology, died in Moscow April 28. For many years he was an active worker in the Russian revolutionary movement taking part in practical work as well as writing articles to the "Communist Internationale". Recently he was elected to the Moscow soviet.

NEW YORK.—Proceedings against three of the Hindus, Bhagwan Singh, Gopal Singh, and Santokh Singh, held here for deportation have been dismissed by the Department of Labor, according to statements in California papers the British government spent enormous sums in working up the case.

The Hindus, all three of whom were workingmen in California, were political refugees who were convicted in the San Francisco conspiracy cases of 1915 for alleged violation of the neutrality laws. They were charged with having been among the 100 Hindus who had attempted to ship arms to revolutionists in India in an attempt to overthrow British rule.

A DINNERPAIL EPIC

— BY BILL LLOYD. —

Written for THE FEDERATED PRESS by C. A. Moseley.

Along about four years ago, when I was twenty-one or so, there were few rich men in our town and most folks had their up and down. Old Hopkins had a shambling mill that somehow met the family's bill. He was tightest man in town and as a miser had renown, he'd pinch a nickle with his thumb until the buffalo grew numb, and then to dodge his evil fate, he'd drop a small coin in the plate. He had two sons fit for the role of pounding sand into a hole; a daughter with some drugstore hair sold sundry notions at The Fair.

When Wilson sent out his decree that all except us should be free, it caught me at the courting age, because I'd never got a wage that made it safe for me to wed, though wife and kids ran in my head. And so they sopped me off to go and help put on the Pershing show. Old Hopkins' first son had a spine that suddenly went in decline. The younger boy, two years before, had been pushed through Dan Cupid's door, and tumbled into married lot before his brother took a shot. So Hopkins' sons stayed home, you see, while I was sent across the sea.

When the home papers strayed my way, I puzzled over them all day. According to the home report, old Hopkins was a reg'lar sport, almost a-throwing away his coin, because he was too old to join, a--laying down a reg'lar swag for one poor measly Red Cross tag. A German helmet went to him for buying bonds up with his tin. It made me almost sob and cry to think how very often I had set the poor old fossil down as just a money—making clown.

When I got home from licking Bill, I hardly knew old Hopkins' mill, for it had spread and scattered roun' until it hid most half the town. Old Hopkins had piled up great gains, by trying to make aeroplanes. The son that had so weak a spine was just a-tearing down the line, without a worry or a need, except to pay the fine for speed. The girl, who'd often sold me socks, was spending now her old man's rocks. I went to working at my trade, but, gosh all fish-hooks wasn't paid enough to keep up single life, not counting on a promised wife. Whenever better pay I seek, old Hopkins calls me Bolshevik!

cause until decency triumphs in the world, or I am dead."

"You'll be dead a long time little girl before your dream comes true. Better get a business education. Or catch a good husband, while you are yet young and pretty," suggested the father.

"Such a life would make me supremely miserable," his daughter retorted. "With my soul hungry for truth, to tie myself down to a life of shams and lies, is absolutely unthinkable. Besides I hate the people who live by their wits alone. Every dollar which they have, that they have not earned, means that somebody has earned a dollar that he did not get and I'll make it my business to tell the world about it."

This little speech made the father look uncomfortable. "Leave that to your friend Ollie," said he. "I don't want to see my little girl in jail. Men can do such things, but women—well they just naturally lose their standing. A woman is best off when she has a good husband to look after her wants. Don't you think so Ollie?" her father asked as he looked wistfully at his rebellious daughter.

"No I do not think so," Olive replied, as she seated herself in the chair on the back of which she had been leaning. "The sheltered woman reflects the mind of the sheltering man. It teaches her to defend her own slavery, and to kiss the cross upon which she is being crucified. Men are never going to give freedom to women, any more than you would take your hired help into your business as partners. There will never be any real happiness in the world until there is full equal freedom for all. There can be no real freedom as long as women are the slaves of men, and men are the slaves of greed."

Anderson laid his hands upon the most prominent part of his anatomy and laughed a mirthless laugh, saying, "So my little girl is going Pankhursting. Well when you get in jail a time or two, and get broke once or twice, and have men insult you when you ask for work, your enthusiasm for the cause of labor, and of suffrage, will suffer a decline. You are not familiar with the things of which you speak. It's just your youth, urging you on. Just go and try it Ollie, and remember what your old Dad told you. It is just your young, blood a romancing thru you, thats all." He coughed violently and spit into the fire place.

Olive leaned back and locked her hands behind her head, but made no reply to her father's statement. Anderson had succeeded in making his daughter think. "Well tell me what the kid had to say," he continued.

Olive produced the letter and handed it to her father. "You may read it," she said!

Anderson wiped his glasses carefully and read the notes. He then read them over a second time. "Extraordinary kid. You could not have received a better letter." Then in a low voice lest his wife should hear it, "I tell you Ollie, its my opinion that he'll turn out alright. Only of course be careful. Every body down town admired him, when he was here. He sure cost us money."

The Domination of Capitalism the Working - Class and the Poorer Peasantry

— By N. Bucharin —

In all countries, except Russia after the October Revolution, but until October in Russia too, the power and the authority has been in the possession of capital. Let us take any country at all—the half-autocratic Prussia, republican France or the so-called democratic United States of America—everywhere big capital has the whole power in its hands. A small group of people—big bankers, landlords and manufacturers—keep millions and millions of workers and poor peasants in slavery and in servitude, force them to exert their strength to the utmost and drive them into the street when they are no longer of any use, when they are exhausted by the strain of work, have lost their strength, and can no longer earn profits for Mr. Capitalist.

It is wealth which gives this terrible power over millions of the toilers to the bankers and the manufacturers. Why must the poor man die of hunger when he is driven out upon the streets? Because he possesses nothing but a pair of hands and feet which he can sell to the capitalist when he needs them. Why can the rich banker or manufacturer spend his days doing nothing and rake in a sure income, why can he live in superfluity—and, every hour, every day, every moment heap up fresh profits? Because he not only possesses a pair of hands and feet, but also the means of work with out which one cannot work: factories, machines, railrodas, mines, land, sailing and steam vessels, all possible apparatus and different instruments. This accumulated wealth belongs, the world over, with the exception of Russia, only to the capitailsts and the landlords, who have become capitalists also. In such a condition of affairs, it is no wonder that a small number of people who hold all the necessities in their possession, should rule the reminder who possess nothing. The poor man goes from the country to the city in order to seek work. From whom? From the propertyholder. From the possessor of a factory or a foundry. The owner can discipline or favor. When his faithful servants—the directors and the bookkeepers—calculate that it will be more profitable to take on new workmen than to keep the old, then he will "give work." If the calculation turns out otherwise, he says to the worker: Go your way! The capitalist is a God, a Kaiser in his own factory. Everyone is subject to him, everyone obeys his orders. The factory is extended or curtailed at his order. At his order, the management discharges or takes on workers. He decides how much the workers must work, how much wages they are to receive. And this is the case because the factory is his factory, the foundry, his foundry, it belongs to him, is his private property. This right of private possession of the means of production, is precisely the cause of this fearful power, which is in the hands of the capitalists.

The same thing happens in reference to land. Let us consider the most free and the most democratic country—the United States, which the bourgeoisie is always dinning into our ears. Thousands of workers there cultivate land that is not their own, the land which belongs to the biggest proprietors, capitalists. Everything is arranged on these farms as in an enormous factory: tens and hundreds of tractor plows,

BRUTALITY PROVEN AGAINST PALMER'S AGENTS

WASHINGTON, D. C.— While Attorney General Palmer is branding as "utterly false" the charges of Felix Frankfurter, Roscoe Pound, P. Walsh, Jackson H. Ralston, and eight other well-known lawyers, of gross misconduct in the Department of Justice, the committee of twelve continue to place before the American public facts and figures in substantiation of their contention.

How Russian workers in this country were treated by agents of Mr. Palmer appears from the following summary of the committee's findings on this point:

Affidavits by persons arrested in or about the Russian People's House, 133 East Fifteenth Street, New York, on Nov. 7, 1919, when a class-room was entered by Department of Justice agents, charge the use of clubs and black-jacks by the agents, who "beat up" every one in the place and broke all the furniture. Several hundred prisoners were taken to Department of Justice headquarters, 13 Park Row, where they were put through the third degree of a secret inquisition, and fourfifths of them then released for lack of evidence.

Affidavits charging unjust arrest and persecution, prison cruelties, denial of prison rights, denial of opportunities to prove innocence and refusal of right to communicate with relatives of friends, by persons in Detroit, New York, and Jersey City are included in the report.

An affidavit by Alexander Bukowetsky, Detroit, arrested Nov. 9, 1919, at a concert given by the Union of Russian Workers, says that he and ten others were confined incommunicado for ten days, then taken to the Department of Justice headquarters, remanded to jail, and held until January 21, 1920, taken to another prison, where there was no cell room, and slept on the floor for two months; sent to Fort Wayne prison, and later to Pontiac prison, where all the prisoners were robbed of their money and personal belongings, and still later returned to Fort Wayne. At Fort Wayne Bukowetsky said his wife and daughter, Violet, 12, and son, Robert, 4, came to see him with a permit. He was taken from his cell and as he was about to great his family he was intercepted by a guard, and his wife and children were pulled out of the room before his eyes. The guard struck his wife several times, and when Bukowetsky protested, she was thrown to the floor and the guards rushed at him, one with a rifle beating him over the head. He called to his fellow prisoners to help

Necessity for Trade Admitted -- War "Unthinkable"

LONDON, June 7.—Premier Lloyd George, after a second conference this afternoon with Gregory Krassin, Soviet envoy and minister of trade, delivered a speech in the House of Commons which clearly indicated that Great Britain intended to enter upon immediate trade relations with Soviet Russia.

He replied to the numerous criticisms which have been made against the policy of resuming trade. It was clear that the premier intends to carry the negotiations with the Russian representative through to a general declaration of peace.

He derided the notion of refusing to trade with Soviet Russia because of the British dislike of the Soviet form of government and the belief in "Bolshevist atrocities."

War is Alternative.

The premier warned the House that the only alternative to peace and trade relations with Soviet Russia was active military operations to overthrow the Soviet Government.

This, he said, would require the whole armed force of the British Empire and was "unthinkable" in view of the state of Britain's finances since the tremendous losses from the war with Germany.

"It appalls me to think of what might happen unless peace is restored", he declared.

The Premier's speech, needless to say, met a hostile reception on the part of the representatives of the banking interests and the fanatical irreconciables, but the Premier asserted that he was well aware that the great masses of the country were in favor of peace with Russia.

It was seen today that while opposition may be strong to the opening of trade relations, peace with Russia is certain.

"Beginning of End," Herald Says.

"It is the beginning of the end and Labor has won its big victory," said the London Herald today.

The conference with Krassin today met an organized opposition in foreign comment. Press dispatches from France were especially hostile. They were seen, however, as efforts on the part of French financiers to embarrass the conferences.

For the most part, they contained announcements of discoveries of the usual plots of Lenin and Trotzky to overthrow the governments of Europe.

Trade developments are sure to follow, however, the settlement of the political questions, chief among which are the Polish war and the Asiatic question.

Before the matters are settled, Krassin has declared that Russia must have the guarantee of the Allies that attacks on Soviet Russia will cease.

Among the assurances which England asks is that Russia will not invade Southern Asia.

The exchange of such guarantees are thought to be the first step toward peace and perhaps diplomatic relations. These are the chief questions of the preliminary debates.

GERMAN ELECTION VIEWS

BERLIN, June 7.—"Germany, as in the year 1918, is again faced by chaos." Such was the swift verdict of the Berliner Tageblatt while yet the German general election returns were coming in.

Though the final outcome may not perhaps completely justify such a depth of despair, it certainly looked as if the maintenance of stable government was being jeopardized. Two of the three coalition parties—namely, the Democratic and the Majority Socialist—have suffered defeats almost approaching a catastrophe, and as anticipated the consequent gains stand to the credit of the extremists at both ends. The Berlin workers have voted in the proportion of about three to one for the Independents as against the Majority Socialists, though the latter have done better in some other parts of the country.

The avowed reactionaries of the National Peoples's Party have gained considerably, but the most sensational victories have fallen to the People's Party. Before it adopted the name, after the revolution, of the People's Party it was called the National Liberal Party. Under the new name, as under the old, it represents wealth. Just before the latest election the party underwent a complete reorganization and with the unlimited money at its disposal it conducted a campaign of propaganda whose intensity and enthusiasm seems to be justified by the present success.

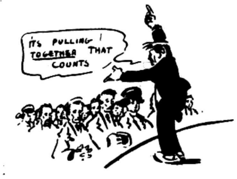
In the late National Assembly, with only about a score of members, it was a negligible quantity. Now it is the new factor in German politics and the man behind the scenes is Hugo Stinnes, millionaire owner of all kinds of industrial enterprises, including sixty-four newspapers. His recent buying up of a number of leading journals was the first sign that the German capitalists intended making a great bid for political power.

Vorwaerts, organ of the Majority Socialists, bewails the election result as meaning "the sharpening of class war." Vorwaerts points out that while the whole Socialist movement—even assuming eventual unity between its various sections—has reached a standstill, reaction is advancing.

Jimmy Higgins Gives His Views On How to Do It

The truest bit of philosophy on the face of the earth is that contained in the five word statement of our illustrious orator—Jimmy Higgins, depicted in the accompanying drawing. Jimmy is not much given to oratory, he is generally too busy DOING to have time to TALK. HE knows that it is far better to DO a thing and talk about it afterward—if it has to be talked about, than to just talk and talk without deeds. But when James is forced to talk he says something worth listening to—as witness the wisdom in this speech.

It is only because of the necessities of the present emergency n which The Toiler is involved because of the print paper situation, that we were able to prevail upon Jimmy to say a few words in these columns. Even at that it required some coaxing. Says Jimmy, "while I'm shooting off to these guys, teling them what they already know, I could be out rounding up a few dollars to get paper for the next issue." "But", we remonstrated, "folks have to be reminded occassionally to do even the things they want to do. They need to be told how and when to do them. You tell 'em", we said, and he did. And we pass it on to you because Jimmy nor any one else ever told the truth in better form.



IT'S PULLING TOGETHER THAT COUNTS

And you know that Jimmy is right. We know it—every body knows it. It is one of the facts of human history that can't be gotten around. Co-operation IS the biggest single fact of human history. Because of it, and for other reason—you and we are here instead of being non-existant; positive proof of the truth of Jimmy's statement.

And because we are here and because we HAVE to, we must apply the logic of history to present problems. Whether these problems be big ones or little ones, the application must be made if they are to be solved advantageously.

We never know of a better chance to apply the philosophy of Jimmy's statement than the present appeal of The Toiler to its readers for donations of dollar bills to help it purchase a supply of print paper for the ensuing months. If there was ever a better chance to prove that statement than is here offered we are not aware of it. And we are proving that PULLING TOGETHER does pay. That is, you are proving it, proving it by your one, two five and in some cases, ten dollar donations. We believe you will accept your own proof as good proof.

As we told you last week we were going to purchase 200 reams of print stock believing that our promise to pay very soon would be backed up by our readers. We have bought it and this issue is printed on part of it. Because of the PULLING TOGETHER of so many Toiler readers, because of the dollars they have sent us for print stock, we got that paper, $750.00 worth. Because we have been PULLING TOGETHER, we have accomplished this. Pulling together still more will enable us to keep The Toiler in the field in spite of any and all difficulties.

A comparative few of us have made The Toiler and kept it on the job by pulling together. We can keep it on the battle front by continueing the same good policy of pulling ALTOGETHER until we have secured enough to meet its needs for print paper.

You can prove that you are pulling in co-operation with us by remitting a dollar, or more, TODAY!

MEXICO NOT ASKED TO RETURN SLACKERS

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The United States Government has made no representations to Mexico for the return to this country of American draft evaders who took refuge in that country during the war. It was declared at the State Department today that this Government has had no dealings with the new regime in Mexico nor with any individuals claiming to represent the Mexican Government.

Although Salvador Diego Fernandez, the Charge d'Affaires of the former Carranza Government, has advised the State Department that he has withdrawn from that office and has turned the Mexican Embassy over to representatives of the new regime, it was stated that the Department had not concerned itself with the matter further than to note the Charge's retirement from authority.

Neither formal nor informal transaction will be carried on by the State Depatrment with the Mexican Embassy until the matter of American recognition of the new Mexican Government shall have been definitely settled.

MEXICO EXPELS REDS

New Government Takes Step to Check Bolshevist propaganda.

MEXICO CITY, June, 7.—Five Bolsheviki have been expelled from Mexico City and taken to Tampico, where they embarked for Havana.

Three Russians, formerly living on the east side in New York, who arrived here during the war to escape military service, were arrested last week. A search of their rooms revealed Bolshevist propaganda. One of them named Stoch was identified as the man who was working with the strikers in Tampico last November. President de la Huerta ordered the expulsion.

Chief of Police Amieva of Mexico City has received orders to arrest all Bolsheviki and extreme radicals, who will be deported. The Government is determined not to permit Mexico to become a centre of propaganda.

Lenin Urges Farm and Shop Unity on Union Congress

Third Labor Congress of Russia Links Crafts With Moscow International in Class Solidarity.

The Third Union Congress of Soviet Russia, according to Finnish newspapers just received by the Federated Press, convened at Moscow in the middle of April. Delegates, 1,588 in number, from all parts of Russia, Turkestan, Ukraine and Don were present, representing 4, 328,009 members.

The congress was opened by Tomskij, president of the All-Russian Federation of Trade Unions, who, in his opening address, emphasized that this congress, on the experiences of two and one-half years, must call the attention of the unions to the solving of the important economical problems facing the workers of Russia during the transition period to peaceful reconstruction. As to international relations, he said, the Russian appeals to the workers of the world will receive a response that will create a basis for a strong trade union international under the banner of the Third International.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Kulinin, Bucharin, Rukoff and Radek, and by representatives of various parties. Greetings were sent to the German workers.

Unite Farm and Factory—Lenin.

On the second day Nicolai Lenin welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Soviet Government.

"Transition from military to economic problems is characteristic of the present period," he said. "The purpose of Communistic policy is to abolish classes as well as the distinction between workers and peasants. Only through the united efforts of the workers and peasants can Socialism be realized. The proletariat must create a new system.

"It is impossible to gain freedom only through loyal solidarity and enthusiasm. It requires work of long duration; it requires a moral and organizing strength of all workers created by the dictatorship of the proletariat. This dictatorship is rightful because the peasant masses are without the bond of unity and discipline. These qualities brought the victory over the capitalist states which have more cannons and dreadnaughts.

"Soviet Russia is powerful on account of this strong voluntary unity. This unity is strenthened by the congresses of the workers and peasants. No country has in a hundred years had so many congresses as Russia during the last few years. No country has gained such a spirit of democracy. Our congress are marked by enthusiasm and unanimity. This incomparable spirit of voluntary association is the basis of the strength of Soviet power. The orders of the Soviet Government are obeyed without reluctance by the workers and peasants.

Calls for more discipline.

"The proletariat which so far has been organized by trades, is now organizing itself as a class. The question is to help this class to reach its aim. This will be realized before all by discipline. Now, in the first place, organizing unity and moral education are necessary. We need more discipline, more personal responsibility, more dictatorship. These conditions are essential for victory.

"The Communists form the advance guard to the worker's army. If all organized workers and peasants will follow the decisions of the Communist congresses are marked by enthusiasm and unanimity. This incomparable spirit

Following Lenin's speech, the congress adopted a resolution favoring:

1. The publication of an appeal to all workers of Soviet Russia to begin a united struggle against economical disorganization;
2. The immediate adoption by every union of a thorough and firm labor discipline;
3. Renewed efforts to induce all workers to take part through their unions in communistic policy under the leadership of the Communist party for the benefit of the Russian working class.

Unions Join Third International.

The congress further decided, upon hearing the report of the Commissar of Labor, that it is the duty of the commissar to see to it that the decisions arrived at by the various congress and other workers' organs concerning labor questions are really put into effect. Further, that unions must have more controlling power in the Commissariat of Labor. The members of the executive committee of the Commissariat must be elected by the trade union congress or by local congresses or by their executive committees. The factory committees, it was also agreed, must work in accordance with the decisions of the organizations of their trade. The factory committees are under the control of the unions.

After the speech by Radek, the congress adopted a resolution by which the Russian Trade Union movement joins the Third International. An appeal will be sent to the organized workers of all countries to follow the example of the Russian Trade Union movement.

The congress regarded trade education as the most important part of the educational work of the workers' state in order that every branch of industry may have competent workers. Education must be developed to embrace all phases of the life and illiteracy must be fought with vigor.

Some Informative Facts About the American Negro

In the early years of American colonies 50,000 men were exiled here from England and sold into slavery ranging form a few years to life. The colonists also made slaves of some Indians, but found them hard to manage. The first African slaves were sold in Virginia in 1619, by a Dutch man-of-war, in exchange for provisions. Subsequently Newport and Bristol, R. I. became centers from which regular raids on the African coast were made, and vast numbers of Negroes were seized and brought here into slavery. Although slavery was forbidden by the constitutions of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, the capital for the Rhode Island slave raids was largely obtained in Boston, and slavery was common in both states. The old North Church in Boston still contains a gallery that was used by the household slaves of some of the families that furnished the capital for the raids in question. The treatment of the slaves varied greatly, depending upon the owner's benevolence and the development of the community's conscience. In 1780, in a certain American state, a Negro who killed a white man was found by Saint-John Crevecoeur, confined in a cage and left there to be devoured by the elements and by insects. He was still living when Crevecoeur saw him, although his eyes had been destryed.

The development of slavery southward was due to the invention of the cotton-gin, which made cotton a profitable crop, capable of being tilled by slave labor. At this time objection to the evangelization of slaves was raised on the ground that a baptized slave might claim freedom as a Christian. Slavery in the North gradually became unprofitable; and between 1777 and 1800 Pennsylvania and the states north had abolished it. Those who found it unprofitable could see many reasons why it was unchristian. By 1850 there were 2,000 families in the South with 100 to as high as 2,500 slaves each, managed by white or colored overseers; and about 350,000 families had smaller numbers, generally managed by the owner himself. Three-fourths of the whites owned no slaves at all, but defended the institution. Owners and managers varied greatly in character, intelligence and temper, and treated their slaves accordingly. Occasionally the most kind-hearted and easy-going were the least successful and had to sell their holdings, thus causing the heart-rending breaking of family ties. By 1860 one-sixteenth of all slaves had been freed; and many were enjoying full citizenship.

For two centuries the American people as a whole profited by the unpaid labor of the Negro and then set him adrift, ragged, unguided and unlettered, to assume the burdens of citizenship and to be further exploited by politicians, to his real injury. But "the chain that holds the slave has its other end fastened to the master"......

Negro Distribution

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the Negro was 19% of the population; at the beginning of the twentieth century, 11.6% of the population; at the present time, 10% of the population. In every state in the union the proportion of Negroes is slowly decreasing.

Roughly speaking, the black belt is a strip 250 miles wide, beginning at Richmond, Va., and running through Raleigh, N. C., Columbia S. C., Macon, Ga., Montgomery, Ala., Vicksburg, Miss, and Shreveport, La., into eastern Texas. The center of Negro population is in northeastern Alabama, near the city of Chattanooga, Tenn.

There are over 50% Negro population in South Carolina and Mississippi, over 37½% in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Louisiana, over 25% in Virginia, North Carolina and Arkansas, over 12½% in Tennessee and Texas, over 5% in West Virginia, Kentucky and Oklahoma, over 1% in thirteen other states and less than 1% in the eighteen far northern and western states.

In 1910 there were living in the United States 478 Negroes who were born in Africa, 100 born in Asia, 94 born in Australia and 61 born in various Pacific Islands. At the same time the occupations of all Negro workers (and these comprise one-seventh of the total working population of the United States) were:

Agriculture, Forestry and Animal Husbandry	2,893,275
Domestic and Personal Service	1,122,231
Manufacturing and Mechanical Industries	631,377
Transportation (including 37 railroad officials)	255,969
Trade (including 135 bankers and bank officials)	119,491
Professional Service (including 123 chemists, assayers and metallurgists, 237 civil and mining engineers and surveyors, 478 dentists, 798 lawers and judges, and 3,077 physicians and surgeons)	67,245
Extraction of minerals (including 126 mine operators)	61,129
Public Service	22,382
Clerical Occupations	19,336
	5,192,535

Negro Migration

The Negro race is not migratory, and therein is much of its value and reliability. However, the World War, which disturbed everything else, also disturbed the Negro Immigration from Europe ceased former immigrants returned, and at the close of the war America was short three million immigrant laborers.

Northern employers were troubled by shortage of labor and high wage demands, and looked toward the South for a possible labor supply. They sent representatives South to find many Negroes whose earnings were small, due to the plant-destroying boll-weevil and to consequent unemployment of cotton acreage.

These employment agents promised the Negroes better wages, better housing, better education for the children, better treatment in the courts, and free transportation for themselves and their families if they would come North. One large railroad system operating in the South started special trains, notifying the Negroes at each stop that any who wanted to come North might do so without charge. As a result 500,000 migrated to a climate to which they were unaccustomed, and on account of bad housing conditions died in large numbers.

The factory doors which had hitherto been closed to the Negro opened wide, and to a large extent still remain open, and large numbers of the migrators who formerly worked in southern field sare now engaged in all sorts of industrial occupations in the North. The plants of seven states, numbering 244 plants in all, into which Negro laborers were introduced during the war were investigated by the Department of Labor as to conditions prevailing during 1918 and 1919 and disclosed a good feeling between whites and blacks in all the plants, with the blacks showing equal attendance and supplying an equal quantity and quality of work.

However, the Northern social organism did not support the sudden influx. At first the new arrivals were crowded into certain sections long recognized as plague-ridden, disease-infected and vice-ruled; but when the new arrivals, as in case of Detroit, increased 500% in five years, those sections could not contain the newcomers, and other sections were necessarily occupied. Declines in real estate values followed; and although these declines were quickly succeeded by recoveries larger than the declines, due to the enormous rents collected from the new arrivals, racial prejudices developed and trouble ensued.

Southern Negro Prosperity

When the Negroes first began to go North not much attention was paid to their exodus in the South. But the size of the migration seriously affected the Southern labor market, increased the shortage of farm products, raised the prices of foodstuffs; and ere long the planters and Chambers of Commerce of the South were urging the Negroes to return South to bettered conditions, such as larger wages and gifts of land suitable for homes and gardens.

Meantime, those Negroes who remained in the more fertile parts of the South had fared far better than most of those who went North. Vast numbers of them work on a crop-sharing system; and where the farm superintendents and operators are honest men, the Negroes have made enough out of the high prices obtained for their products, to lift them completely out of poverty.

There are vast sections of the Mississippi River delta land in the hands of Negroes who have become well-to-do. Many of these farmers have accumulated fortunes ranging from $10,000 to $175,000 and are permitted the full use of sidewalks, streets and thoroughfares.

These lands have produced as high as 500 lbs. of 51-cent cotton per acre, and under such conditions the making of money by an industrious and intelligent man is most natural. One such man, a Negro who had nothing eighteen years ago, now owns 1,600 acres of this land. Nine Negroes have recently clubbed together and bought a tract of 1,200 acres; and twenty-five others have clubbed together and bought a 3,000 acre tract for $225,000, intending to cut it up into 100-care farms. In one county of Mississippi Negroes possess more than $5,000,000 worth of property and over 2,000 automobiles.

With improved economic conditions the Negro has improved otherwise, has organized an insurance company doing a large business, has employed a farm demonstration agent in one important agricultural center, and has organized various kinds of commercial enterprises in many places. Among these is a steamship line.

General Negro Advancement

The percentage of Negroes that own their own homes has increased from 18.7% in 1890 to 23.3% in 1910. and varied in 1910 in the different states as follows:

New York	7.5	Indiana	26.4
District of Columbia	10.3	Missouri	26.6
Pennsylvani	12.3	Colorado	27.6
Georgia	14.7	Florida	27.7
Rhode Island	15.2	Oregon	8.2
Massachusetts	16.2	Texas	28.5
Alabama	16.4	Idaho	28.7
Mississippi	16.9	North Carolina	28.7
Louisiana	17.1	Iowa	29.9
Connecticut	18.1	Ohio	30.1
Woyming	18.4	New Mexico	30.3
South Carolina	18.5	New Hampshire	30.6
New Jersey	18.6	Arizona	30.7
West Virginia	19.3	Kentucky	31.3
Vermont	20.4	Washington	31.1
Utah	21.2	Montana	32.1
Illinois	23.2	Montana	32.8
Nebraska	24.1	Oklahoma	35.3
Delaware	23.2	North Dakota	35.6
Minnesota	24.7	Nevada	35.7
Arkansas	24.6	California	37.3
Tennessee	25.3	Virginia	41.3
Maryland	25.6	Michingan	44.0
Wisconsin	25.8	South Dakota	45.1
		Kansas	49.6

In education the Negroes do not linger so far behind the whites as many suppose. In 1910 the percentage of native whites that spent some time in school was 22.9 and of Negroes 17.0. The percentage of illiteracy is rapidly decreasing; in 1890 it was 57.1; in 1900 it was 44.5 and in 1910 it was 30.4, while for persons between the ages of ten and fourteen it was 18.9. In cities of over 100,000 it was 6%.

Race Riots North and South

The United States has suffered deservedly in the eyes of intelligent people elsewhere because of the race riots that have disgraced New York City, Philadelphia, Chester, Coatesville, Washington, Norfolk, Charleston Atlanta, Knoxville, Memphis, Springfield, (Ill.), East St. Harbor Omaha, Longview, Houston, Bisbee and other places. At the riot in East St. Louis over forty Negroes were slaughtered, while at Washington and Chicago it is said that six hundred fatalities occurred. Outnumbered ten to one, the Negro stands no chance in a race riot, and resistance only increases the fury of the mob that has allowed race prejudice to sweep it off its feet for a time.

The temper of these mobs was shown in the nine-hour battle at Omaha in which a mob of thousands determined to lynch one negro offender, stormed the county jail, located on the fifth floor of the Court House, scaled the walls by rope ladders, burned the lower floors with all their precious records, damaged the building to the extent of $1,000,000, forced the surrender of the prisoner, shot him to death, dragged his body by hand and by automobile through the streets, kicked, hanged and finally burned it. And all this time American churches send missionaries to China instead of Nebraska.

The mob seized $50,000 worth of arms from hardware establishments, burned a patrol wagon, took the rope meant for the Negro and threw it over the mayor's head, dragged him a block, threw the rope over a trolley pole and twice hauled him from the ground, and would have hanged him had not police officers cut the rope. It fired repeatedly at the 121 helpless prisoners assembled on the roof of the burning building, and was subdued only by the arrival of national troops.

Of a different naturo was the trouble near Helena, Ark., having its origin apparently in the dishonesty of certain farm superintendents or operators who refused to give the Negro farmers the large profits which the high prices of cotton had enabled them to earn. These farmers work for a share of the crops; they furnished all the labor, the superintendent or operator of the farm furnished everything else. This arrangement works well or ill, depending upon the honesty of the supervising white man who has the farm in control.

In some places these white men have taken advantage of the Negroes, forcing them to turn over all their cotton in payment for supplies which, in instances, have amounted to but a mere fraction of the value of the cotton, and refusing to give settlements or statements of account. For example, a case is cited where a Negro worked 27 acres for a year and produced six bales of cotton, his share of which was $753. In liev of a settlement he was charged $50.60 for freight charges for removing nine small articles 100 miles and $700 for groceries which could not have been worth more than $150; and when he made objection was ordered off the place, penniless, with nothing for his year's work.

At a point below Helena where the Negro population is largely predominant, a number of Negroes, acting under white legal advice, formed an association for mutual legal protection and were preparing to bring legal action against certain white landlords. It is admitted that these Negroes were hard-working farmers, considered the best class of Negroes in the South. It is also admitted that their association, while organizing, had armed guards about the building or buildings where the meetings were held, or at any rate that in the meeting there were men who were armed.

While one of these meetings was in progress, an automobile containing a white deputy sheriff and others in search of a revenue violator had a tire burst in front of the house. This was probably mistaken for a shot and was answered by a shot from the house, the beginning of a small-sized war, in which, within the next few days, twenty-five blacks and five whites were killed, and others wounded.

Within a few more days forty Negroes were sentenced to death or penal servitude with-out any witnesses in their defense being called. Twelve of these were sentenced to death, and six of the twelve were sentenced to the gallows in a total of seven minutes time. Ten were sentenced to twenty-one years, and eleven were given one year for night-riding. It is claimed that the accused men were provided with the best available local white lawyers. They were tried before a white jury, blacks being excluded from jury duty in that section.

Negro-Lynching Problems

Ex-Attorney General Gregory of Texas said of lynching:

> "Lynch law is the most cowardly of crimes. Invariably the victim is unarmed, while the men who lynch are armed and in large numbers. It is a deplorable thing under any circumstances."

Henry Watterson, Editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal says:

> "Lynching should not be misconstrued. It is not an effort to punish crime. It is a sport which has as its excuse the fact a crime, of greater or less gravity, has been committed or is alleged. A lynching party rarely is made up of citizens indignant at the law's delays or failures. It often is made up of a mob bent upon diversion, and proceeding in a mood of rather frolicsome ferocity to have a thoroughly good time. Lynchers are not persons who strive from day to day toward social betterment. Neither are they always drunken ruffians. Oftentimes they are ruffians wholly sober in-so-far as alcoholic indulgence is concerned, but highly stimulated by an opportunity to indulge in spectacular murder when there is no fear that the grand jury will return murder indictments against them."

In the thirty years, 1889-1918, lynching mobs murdered 3,224 persons in the United States, of whom 2,522 were Negroes and 702 were white persons. Of the Negro victims fifty were women, and of the whites eleven were women.

What a lynching is like in Christian America may be gathered from the following account taken from the Chattanooga Times:

> "Jim McIlherron, the Negro who shot and killed Pierce Rodgers and Jesse Tigert, two white men, at Estill Springs last Friday, and wounded Frank Tigert, was tortured with a red-hot crowbar and then burned to death here tonight at 7:40, by twelve masked men. A crowd of approximately 2,000 persons, among whom were women and children, witnessed the burning.
> "McIlherron, who was badly wounded and unable to walk, was carried to the scene of the murder, where preparation for a funeral pyre was begun.
> "The captors proceeded to a spot about a quarter of a mile from the railroad station and prepared the death fire. The crowd followed and remained throughout the horrible proceedings. The Negro was led to a hickory tree, to which they chained him. After securing him to the tree a fire was laid. A short distance away another fire was kindled, and into it was put an iron bar to heat.
> "When the bar became red hot a membes of the mob jabbed it toward the Negro's body. Crazed with fright, the black grabbed hold of it, and as it was pulled through his hands the atmosphere was filled with the odor of burning flesh. This was the first time the murderer gave evidence of his will being broken. Scream after scream rent the air. As the hot iron was applied to various parts of his body his yells and cries for mercy could be heard in the town.
> "After torturing the Negro several minutes one of the masked men poured coal oil on his feet and trousers and applied a match to the pyre. As the flames rose, enveloping the black's body he begged that he be shot. Yells of derision greeted his request. The angry flames consumed his clothing, and little blue blazes shot upward from his burning hair before he lost consciousness."

Of another Sunday morning lynching in the center of a Christian city of 7,000 population in the same state and not greatly unlike similar occurrences at Coatesville, Pa., and Springfield, Ill., the Memphis News Scimitar said:

> "Not a domino hid a face. Every one was unmasked. Leaders were designated and assigned their parts. Long before the mob reached the city the public square was choked with humanity. All waited patiently. Women, with babies, made themselves comfortable.
> "At last the irons were hot.
> "A red streak shot out; a poker in a brawny hand was boring out one of the Negro's eyes. The negro bore the ordeal with courage, only low moans escaping him. Another poker was working like an auger on the other orbit.
> "Swish. Once, twice, three times a red hot iron dug gaping places in Lation Scott's back and sides.
> "'Fetch a hotter one', somebody said. The execution went on.
> "Now some one had another poker—jabbing its fiery point into the ribs of the doomed black.
> "Then rubbish was piled high about the agonized body, squirming beneath its load.
> "More and, more wood and rubbish were fed the fire, but, at three o'clock Lation Scott was not dead. Life finally fled at four o'clock.
> "Women scarcely changed countenance as the Negro's back was ironed with the hot brands. Even the executioners maintained their poise in the face of bloody creases left by the irons—irons which some housewife had been using.
> "Three and a half hours were required to complete the execution."

In the year 1919 there were 78 blacks and 6 whites lynched in the United States—22 in Georgia, 12 in Mississippi, 10 in Arkansas, 8 each in Alabama and Louisana. Of the remaining number 9 were in Northern states and 15 in various Southern states. Eleven of these were burned to death, two beaten to death and one cut in pieces. Ten of them were soldiers in the World War. Thirty-four of them were taken from officers and jails in fourteen states. The causes of lynching were as follows:

Negro Characteristics

It is claimed by some that during the World War the Negroes, though constituting but ten percent of the population, supplied fifteen percent of the soldiers, thus taking the places of others exempted. We do not know the facts of this assertion, but we do know that when the richest man in America would surround his home at night with the most trustworthy guards that his means could provide, he chose colored men for the task; and the faithfulness of Negroes has endeared them to true Americans in all ages. An instance of their reliability was brought to light in one of the Northern race riots in 1919, when a Negro policeman shot another Negro for firing at a white policeman.

The Negroes are peaceful and law-abiding. They have never been accused of night-riding and lynching. They have shown that they can suffer without becoming embittered, and can forgive those who have done them wrong. As a race they are happy, gentle, affectionate and humorous; and most of them are honest and industrious. To be sure they have faults; but so have others. Those who have had the freedom of the homes of the southland for a hundred years have seldom betrayed their trust.

Hopes of Negro Well-Wishers

The Negro educators of North Carolina met and proclaimed a platform condemning all advocacy of social equality with the whites, intermarriage of the races and all attempts to settle racial disputes by violence.

Dr. George Cleveland Hall, a prominent Chicago Negro, says:

> "Our enemies always emphasize social equality. But you will notice we put the strong pedal on economic and political equality. Let us have these and social equality will take care of itself."

CHAPT. XXXV.

The Mental Angle.

It was several days before Jack had occassion to refer to the notes he had made while on his work hunting and experience getting, trip. The occassion was an argument between him and his friends as to the possibility of organizing the working classes of all nations into one all embracing brotherhood, having for its aims the political and economic freedom of the race.

Jack, who had been taught socialism and economics by George and Herman in the harvest fields, and by Collins and Rudolph in jail and at the cabin failed to see any scientific evidence for such a faith. To him it appeared that amongst men, as among the flora and fauna of the earth there were, and of necessity had to be grades and variations. He had felt instinctively that among human masses the tendancy for some to climb up on the backs of others was an essential factor not only in the development of civilization but in the maintainence of the species as well. He had expressed these views to his friends in the harvest fields, and George had given them a Marxian interpretation. Since that time he had read omniverously, not with the idea of justifying socialism, but rather to vindicate his biological views.

He had just finished reading the books of Drs. Blackford and Woodruff on the mental and physical qualities of blonde and brunette types, or as it might be more accurately expressed, of the fogland types. These books had given him the idea that from time immemorial the blonde types had been the world's leaven of industrial development. That by virtue of their mental and physical makeup, which is a result of their development under particular telluric conditions, they had become a dynamic force for the spread of civilization. He contended that these types had from time immemorial been forced to do things, and to do them quickly. Their seasons were short. Their winters long and more or less severe, hence agriculture could play but an insignificant part in their economic life. They had to make their living either by battling the seas, or by braving the wilderness. Thus nature eliminated to a great extent the weak and the timed, and developed the Viking, the Goth, and the Vandal. He maintained that much of this was due not only to the pressure of necessity, but to the peculiar character of the light rays filtering down thru a fog laden sky. He said that it was a known fact that the slower light rays had a retarding and stabalizing effect on physiologic dvelopment. He stated that the women developed later in life and retained their virility longer in these countries than on any other part of the globe, and that what was true of the women was doubly true of the men.

At all this his companions smiled good naturedly, and teased him by saying that all he needed was a little more rope to finish his argument.

"Your views are crazy but interesting," said Collins. "Go on, let us have it just the way you see it."

"The particular environment of Northern Europe produced this blonde beast. It was a Spartan environment, fierce, merciless and relentless. The Northmen wove his environment in his blood; it became part of him; he made it his religion. Thor, hammer in hand rode the thunder, and Neptune ruled the deep. Thus, in order that the race might conquer its hostile environment. Nature evolved the blonde beast. Fair of skin, so as to easily absorb the water dimmed light; fearless of brain in order that he might dare to brave the terrors of land and sea; with clear and agressive intellect by which he was able to take advantage of every opportunity the blonde beast became the terror, and the savior of the nations. The very necessity of their lives caused them to become bold, fearless, and predatory. It caused them to cross both land and sea, robbing, pillaging and ruling those who lived in warmer climes and under clearer skies. It was not infrequent that the natives were pleased with their rule, as is evident from the fact that they constructed their gods in the image of the Northmen, and depicted their angles as having golden hair."

Here Collins interrupted him with the remark, that it was not due to telluric or biologic factors that the northern races had played so powerful a part in the world's history. He maintained that the fact that Germany and England were rich in mineral resources had led to their becoming manufacturing nations, that goods manufactured out of iron or tin could not be equalled and hence developed the necessity for commerce with other nations. That this built up a merchant marine which in order that it might be protected from piracy developed for England a large navy and for Germany in order that it might be protected from French and Slavic agression had developed a powerful militarism, and with the development of her merchant fleets she would also have to develop adequate navel forces. He contended that industrial development dependend on the presence of natural resources and the economic necessity, that they be used for the feeding, clothing, and shelter of the race. He maintained that any other race being situated in a similar position would have acted in a similar way as did Jack's fancy blonde beast.

But the boy, nothing daunted returned to the fray. He insisted that Holland, which is only a little patch of bog, facing the North Sea, without as much as a single mine or other substantial resource except agriculture for two centuries disputed with England the mastery of the seas, and conquered and held a goodly part of Polenasia and other parts of the world. He maintained that the conquered parts had never freed themselves, but had been taken over by England after centuries of bloody war. He showed that the blonde Goths who had settled in Spain acted exactly like the similar types of England and Holland and conquered all of what is now Latin America. But when on account of the cear skies the blonde blood died out of Spain or became degenerated, her empire fell to pieces and she had to assume an inferior place among the nations. He further pointed out that the strongest south American republics were those into whom there was a great influx of northern European blood, and that where that blood was dying out, as in Mexico, chaos and retrogression was the normal state of affairs. The human race only moves forward and upward under the stimulation of the blonde beast, and when he retires the progress of civilization generally dies down, and in many cases out. Even Japan, the wonder of the Orient, remained asleep for ages, until Dutch and American navigators brought her face to face with the menace of European civilization. He argued that it was doubtful if there ever had been a high order of civilization that was not directly attributable to the influence of blonde types.

"The spanish historian Herara tells us that the conquistadores, who were blonde Goths, found the pictures of bearded white men on the walls of the Peruvian temples, in the city of the Incas. The Peruvian priest still told legends of the white men who had come from the sun. But the originals of these pre-Columbian discovers of America were gone. Doubtlessly the civilization of the Incas owed much to these early visitors. The white man goes out into the world as a dynamic force. But he cannot stay in an uncongenial environment. There is no third generation of white men in India. Even in the United States with the exception of New England and the Puget Sound, the white stock will die out. It is already apparent among the mountain white of the Appalachian region. Many of them are descendents of the first colonists, and in their appearance are already decidedly Indianesque, as well as in their mental characteristics. Did you read about that McCoy-Hatfield fued they had a few weeks ago? The blonde types have conquered America but in the course of a few centuries America will capture the blonde. Our descendants will either become brown or cease descending. Let us turn to the pages of history. The Greeks were fair, under the Ptolymes they stimulated the civilization of Egypt.

"If I read the Ancient Lowly aright then the influence penetrated eastward into India, westward into Spain, and northward into England. When the blonde type died out that civilization fell, only to develop again further west among their ancestral types. Gothic blood made Spain an Empire, also Portugal. When they died out or degenerated they had to send to Austria for a king and to Ireland for a prime minister. And so I could go on citing example after example, but what is the use, I might cite one more. Take China for example. Their earliest traditions tell of blonde invasions. These died out and the chinamen fell asleep and remained asleep for five thousand years, or until Europe came and woke them up, by trying to put them to sleep. Christian England said to heathen China, "take opium or the sword." China took opium, but there is enough white influence entering into that country that you may look for a kick back."

His friends laughed good naturedly. "Isn't it funny how hard a man will work to 'fool himself,'" said Collins. "How they will take the longest way around, in order not to knock down their hobby?"

"I don't know where he gets all the junk," chimed in Rudolph. "I wish you would tell me what your blondes have accomplished to the exclusion of the other types of the human race."

"Blondes have built the ships, brunettes have built the religion; blondes have evolved laboritories, brunettes monasteries; blondes brought about the renaissance, brunettes established the inquisition; blondes gave us the sciences, brunettes the metaphysics; blondes are the doers, of deeds, brunettes are the dreamers of dreams; blondes stormed the ramparts of nature, bruenettes seek the throne of heaven. Remembr I am speaking of race types, not individuals. Because I'm convinced that the faculty of aggression and construction, is most strongly developed in the blonde type, that is the reason I look to them for the solution of the economic problems of the world."

In one corner of the cabin, above a little shelf where they kept their tin wash basin was a piece of broken mirror. Collins reached over and took it down. Holding it before the boys face he said, "Behold the genesis of your ideas. Thou art a blonde."

Jack could not help smiling at the revelation of his own egoism. He was silent for a few moments while his mind went back over all that George and Herman had taught him concerning the class struggle, and the mental view point developed in the mind as a result of participation in the class struggle. He realized that his knowledge of, and experience with it was really very small so that he became painfully aware that his views were not those that would be natural to an intelligent wage worker. He understood the theory of socialism, but did not live a socialized life in the industrial sense. To get the view point of a proletarian you have to be tied to the requirements of machine production. He built up his social

THE GERMAN ELECTIONS

The recent German elections indicate that the workingclass of that troubled Republic have at least learned a little during the past two years of travail due to the war and the peace, which is almost as bad. They have turned leftward for their representatives in the national assembly.

While reports of Communist strength are disappointing, Left elements there and elsewhere may content themselves in finding sufficient reasons therefor in the slow and methodical Teutonic manner of arriving at a certain point. If Communists find little consolation in the elections, no less can capitalism and the reactionaries find comfort therein.

The Independent Socialists, representing the Left group have won great strength in the industrial centers which figured so prominently in the recent rebellion. These gains are directly attributable to that revolt and indicate the progress made in the German industrialist mind in the past few months.

The German Peoples' Party or Populists, figure in the role of business man's party, a party of capitalism which speakes the mind of German capitalism taking the offensive. There are other parties in between these two and the Nationalists and Communists at the extreme Right and Left. The in between parties lose to both Left and Right and there seems little possibility that any sort of a working agreement will come about between any groups.

The exasperating slowness of the development of the German proletarian revolution strikes a chill upon communists generally. Nevertheless, we may be satisfied of the fact which theelections prove: that there is to be no settling down to apathy of the German workers. German workers are slowly reacting to the economic necessity and spirit of the times. The rest we must leave to time.

The German revolution can only develop along lines governed by racial characteristics, politico-social development and industrial growth.

THE POWER OF PRINT

The trebling of the German People's Party vote and representation in the elections has brought to light news of interest regarding the influence of the press in molding public opinion.

The People's party, previously the National Liberal party, went into eclipse when the monarchy collapsed. It has been revived principally thru the tactics employed by one of Socialist (?) Germany's biggest capitalists and exploiters of labor, Hugo Stinnes. Stinnes represents aroused German capitalism making a determined stand against the rise of communistic thought. The increase of representation gained for the People's party indicates how effective were the means employed.

Stinnes is now Germany's newspaper king. He is also a king in other financial and industrial enterprises. Besodes owning sixty five newspapers and magazines he also controls mines, steel mills, ship lines, paper factories and hotels. It would be hard to conceive of an existence for even a day in Germany without paying tribute to Hugo Stinnes, so universal is his control of necessities.

He is the power behind the People's party, supplying the necessary funds. For months he has been quietly buying influential newspapers and periodicals. Thru control of these means of information the public mind was largely molded along the lines indicative of the best interests of Stinnes and capitalist interests generally. The tremenduous vote gained by the party in the elections is the direct result.

However, there is a certain artificiality in influence gained in such manner. Tremenduous as is the power of the public press, there is a fundamental and basic cause of human activity which in the end will rule the mass and which no public press can turn aside or controvert. This is the economic needs of the people. Their very miseries provoke them to thots and measures which are elemental in their nature and over which the veneer and conventionalities of civilization have no influence whatsoever.

The rise of the People's party (capitalist party) is indicative of a last determined struggle of capitalism to erect a machine for the self perpetuation of capitalism in Germany. The class lines are now more tightly drawn than heretofore. The miserable, makeshift, compromising Majority Socialist power has been broken. The battle henceforth lies between predatory capitalism and a developing working class-consciousness.

A capitalist controlled press is on unequal weapon in that battle. The masses will eventually win.

THE CARDINAL'S PRAYER

> "Grant that the proceedings of this convention may be marked by wisdom, discretion, concord, harmony and mutual forbearence worthy of an enlightened and patriotic body of American citizens".

With the above pious wish, Cardinal Gibbons closed his prayer to God Almighty at the opening of the Republican Party convention at Chicago. Presumably the Cardinal believed then in the efficacy of prayer. We don't. We wonder now, in the light of later convention developments if the Cardinal does—anymore. If his faith remains unshaken we congratulate him upon having a 100 percent proof skull. Nothing that he prayed for has come about. It seems that the Cardinal picked an entirely impossible feat for even omniscience to perform. So much the worse for the Cardinal. To expect such accomplishments from a Republican party convention is preposterous in the extreme; to pray for them is appropos to an insult to the intelligence of the power which the worthy Cardinal seems to believe rules this mundane sphere and all therein, including the rotten political conventions of putrid politics.

Everything emanating from the convention smells to heaven of the decaydence that marks present day capitalistic politics. From the "keynote" speech of one of the party's fossils to the latest reports of intrigue, bribery and chicanery, it has been shot thru and thru with every evidence of the coin, has steam rolled out of existence all opposition in its path. There have liberal and vicious use of money as against principle and consideration of the wishes of the people as voiced at the primaries. The wishes of the primary voters have long since been forgotten. The machine, the one which carries the been open confessions of votes bought and sold at a price indicating that vote, will steam roller out of existence all opposition in its path. These had the holders realized their value. While the Cardinal sought with closed eyes divine guidance, the delegates had their optics glued upon the trough from which they have since swilled their full. The glitter of the coin was guidance enough for them—to the devil with the Cardinal and the Almighty!

No political convention ever sounded the gavel with less of principle, less of integrity, less social purpose in its programe than this miserable affair at Chicago. However it is not surprising that this is true. When a political party becomes a mere pupet in the hands of predatory capital, a tool with which to keep from the people at large their just and worthy dues, it cannot at such a time maintain a front of deceptive purity. Its rottenness seeps thru the thin veneer. This is what has happened to the Republican party. Rotten at the heart the pus has at last soaked thru and rotted the whole fabric. The "Party of Lincoln" has become a putrid mass fit only for burial.

But it will not be buried—yet. The American voters, for whom the Cardinal has such high hopes, will march to the polls as to a holiday and put those who have been out, IN, and those who have been in, OUT. To expect more at this stage of the American workingclass voter's social and class consciousness, is to expect the impossible—which is no less than is embodied in the Cardinal's prayer.

POLAND'S DAY

Governor Cox of Ohio has joined the Polish White Guard. Well,—not exactly. That is, he has not gone to the Polish front to back up the Red Bolshevik army—by no means. He has found a means of serving the imperialistic, land-hungry Polish bourgeoisie in a perfectly safe—tho insanse manner.

Last Lord's Day was Polish day according to Cox. A perfect day to upon which to launch a "drive" to carry on an imperialistic war! The Polish White Guard drive in America for 50,000,000 dollars has been lagging. It closed last Tuesday. "Polish Day" was calculated to put it over the top.

While Polish nationalists in America and American bourgeois supporters are anxiously boosting the cause of imperialism, a glance at internal Poland would not be amiss. For many weeks past internal affairs of Poland have been assuming a threatening attitude. The miseries and suffering of the people, due to the imperialistic war have resulted in serious strikes and social disturbances. A schism has developed in the government resulting in the resignation of the cabinet on June 10th. The immediate cause of the quitting of the cabinet was opposition to the policy of the government in seeking to establish a buffer state between Russia and Poland. Also the National Democrats say they will refuse to participate in a government made up largely of socialists who insists upon peace with the Bolsheviki.

Another significant occurrence is that due to the fact that the communist railroad workers of Cecho-Slovakia siezed 36 carloads of war amunitions in transit from Italy to the Polish front, Poland has retaliated with an embargo on petroleum and benzine to Cecho-Slovakia. The Cech government is reported to be inclined to yield but the railroad workers have served notice of an immediate general strike if it does so. Late movements on the war front credit the Bolsheviks with important victories. In view of these facts we would advise Gov. Cox that Poland's day, insofar as its imperialistic designs are concerned will soon be enshrouded in blackest night.

OUR SCHOOLHOUSES

In 1828 the school board of Lancaster, Ohio, authorized the writing of the following letter:

"You are welcome to use the schoolhouse to debate all proper questions; but such things as railroads and telegraphs are impossibilities and rank infidelity. There is nothing in the World of God about them. If God had designed that his intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of fifteen miles an hour by steam he would have clearly foretold it through his holy prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls down to hell."

The above historical document is evidence that there was at that date a very close connection between Church and State. While they were supposed to be separate, in fact they were by the religious opinions then prevalent in close connection. We have practically completed the separation since that time and it may be said that the development of the steam engine was instrumental in establishing that condition. The school Ma'am no longer (except in very isolated communities) opens school with the Lord's Prayer or a reading from the New Testament. To do so would in all probability provoke a neighborhood row in these days.

We no longer gage the possibility or utility of a new invention by what is said or not said in the Bible concerning it. We have gotten at least that far on the road to a sane conception of life. As is readily seen in the forgoing letter, there was a test case at hand between the new and the old—between science and superstition—between the conception based upon ideas handed down from the dark ages and the budding science developing from discoveries in nature's ways and means. As usual the new won. The telegraph worked, the steam engine actually run—at better than "15 miles an hour". That was the test and right there the Bible began to fall into disuse as a guide for human life.

But we have not yet set the schoolhouse free from the grasp of antideluvian ideas. Practically all subjects which agitate the minds of men may now be discussed freely in the school houses of the country — except one—that dealing with the right of the capitalist class to extract profit from the workers thru their ownership of industry and control of the State. This subject-workers' control of industry—Socialism, is taboo in our centers of education.

Lancaster youths and maids may now look up from their text books of science as the snorting, hissing monsters of steel fly past without thot or fear of any Biblical injunction against them but the sacredness of the system of exploitation is still taught them. Nevertheless, evolution of industry still continues. That which began in the discovery of the use of steam power and electricity must and will evolve in its natural order into workingclass control of these machines of production.

This will come about in spite of capitalist control of the schoolhouse—Capitalism cannot put a curb on evolution!

MAY DAY IN BRITAIN

Our May Day for 1920 has come and gone. In Britain millions of workers from John o' Groats to Land's End stopped work. The Red Flag of the Internationale was unfurled in great parks and on tiny village greens.

Our demonstrations were both serious and gay. We strove to enter into the spirit of May, and sometimes, with the exuberance of youth or with an assumption of it, let ourselves go with dance and song.

In every great center it was a record day. Manchester vied with Bradford, Glascow with London. Bournemouth in the west with Ipswich in the east. Everywhere the keynote of all the speeches and of all the singing was that line of William Morris'—"The Dawn and the Day is coming, and forth the banners go."

In every great town it was a glorious sight to see the women and children marching and riding to the meeting places with red flags, red rosettes, and—for us greatest joy of all—nearly everybody wearing our "rouster," symbolic of "The Herald of the Dawn."

That was in Britain. But perhaps the most significant of all things about May Day is that it is international. The capitalist press has been sneeringly telling us that May Day as Labor Day isn't an English festival, that it came to us from abroad. That is true. It is true of other things than May Day. It is true, for instance, of Christmas Day.

So, not in this country only, but the world over, men and women of the working class kept Saturday as their festival, the day sacred to their vows and their hopes for the future of the world.

And at every meeting our minds went to our Comrades across the seas—most of all to the workers of Russia, now once again called upon for a supreme effort and a supreme sacrifice for their ideals, which are also ours.

Today we send to our friends everywhere a message of love and good cheer, especially to the women who, giving up a day's rest, marched with their men, some of them many miles; and to the mighty host of Co-operators, who decorated motor car and wagon, cart and van, with such wonderful taste.

May Day for the moment is past and done. Yet it never passes. Every day is labor's day, for without labor there would be no life. So each day let our determination grow stronger, our faith more clear. Owen and Morris, Liebknecht and Jaures, Hardie, Rosa Luxembourg, and a million others passed out before the coming of this May Day, but they shared in its triumphs, and we, too, on the day the workers of the world have forever shaken the shackles of capitalism to the dust, will share in the shout of triumph, from a thousand million throats, will herald in the International Commonwealth.

Communism in Mexico.

There is only one magazine published in English in Mexico and it is a Communist monthly. Every Communist should read it and know, first hand, what the Mexican Communists and the Mexican I. W. W. are doing, and what is the real significance of the Obregon revolution that has just triumphed. This magazine is "Gale's Journal of Revolutionary Communism". Typical articles have been: "Made in the U. S. A.—the Civil War in Mexico"; "Who is Financing Pancho Villa"; "The Communist Party of Mexico"; "Open Letter to the Devil."

sociology, not from an extensive knowledge of actual shop conditions, but from books and observation of life phenomena in the natural world. He did not realize that while there is such a thing as comparative anatomy between man and animals as well as comparative physiology and psychology, that in the very nature of the thing there could be no such comparision in economics. Man's industrial problems are not biologic in their nature, but economic. It was this point that he did not see. He looked thru the eyes of a naturalist, while his friends looked at the world from the industrial angle.

Buth Rudolph and Collins agreed that as far as historic and biologic fact was concerned, Jack was right, but they insisted that he lacked a clear understanding of the materialist conception of history. "You are tainted with high brow psychology," said Collins. "You look at life like an abstract philosophy. Wait till you have been in the working class for about five or six years and you will have the viewpoint of the bindle stiff ground pretty well into you. The mental angle from which a man views things is to a great extent determined by the condition of his stomach and his hands," Collins asserted.

While Collins was speaking Jack had been looking for his note book in order to return to the fray. He noticed that several pageshad been cut out but he said nothing altho he suspected that several pages had been cut out spring some suprise on him. He did not dream however that Collins had sent these notes to Olive Anderson, nor the effect that this sending act would have upon his susequent career, for while they were arguing the problems of life, life was setting a snare that ultimately entrapped Jack in the radical movement as an active factor.

After a few more desultary remarks Collins said, "Let's take a trip to Harrison and see if there is any mail for us. I feel it in my bones that one of us is going to have some welcome information."

DEMOCRACY AND REVOLUTION — Bertrand Russell

II.

(In the first part of this article, which appeared in The Liberator and subsequently in The Toiler last month, Bertrand Russel discussed the possibility of realising mankind's dream of freedom. Capitalism has begun to fail as a method of production, and by arousing the discontent of the workers has raised up a power sufficient to overthrow it. But will Socialism secure freedom for mankind? And ought we, then, to seek to promote its complete success—or should we refrain because of the evils involved in a conflict of classes?—"For my part," says Bertrand Russel, in answer to this question, "I feel convinced that any vital progress in the world depends on the victory of International Socialism, and that it is worth while, if necessary, to pay a great price for that victory...... When I speak of Socialism, I do not mean a milk-and water system, but a through-going rot-and-branch transformation, such as Lenin has attempted. And if its victory is essential to peace, we must acquiesce in the evils involved in conflict, in so far as conflict is forced upon us by capitalism." With these words he concludes the first part of his article, upon which this present installment immediately follows.)

There are, however, some things which must be borne in mind as qualifications of this conclusion. One point of very vital importance is that Socialism should not lose its internationalism. It is perfectly possible to imagine Great Powers, each organised communistically on a national basis, coming into conflict for the possession of raw materials. The oil in the Caucasus, for eample, might well afford ground for such a conflict. Nor is there anything in Socialism, so long as it is merely national, that is incompatible with a new kind of Chauvinism. The contempt for the rule of the majority during the revolutionary period which the Bolsheviks inculcate, and their belief in winning over the majority through the temporary dictatorship of a class-conscious minority, obviously justify wars for the spread of the socialist idea, and such wars would easily become nationalistic when waged between a socialist and a capitalist Power. The abolition of exploitation at which Socialism aims, and which would make it a guarantee against war, is of course not complete so long as exploitation by nations continues. It is only secured when the raw materials of the world are dealt with by an international authority. It may well be doubted whether Socialism will be strong enough to overcome nationalist interest and feeling so completely as would be involved in this method of dealing with raw materials, yet until it has achieved this, it will have done little by way of affording a safeguard against wars.

And, apart from raw materials, there is another question, which might well cause wars between communistic national States: I mean the question of the right of immigration. In Australia and throughout North and South America, this question may be of paramount importance for many years to come.

Against international socialism there stands, except in America, only one really strong popular force—the force of nationalism. By nationalism I mean the determination to secure the interests of one's own nation at no matter what cost to other nations, and the belief that the interests of different nations are essentially antagonistic, or rather the hatred of other nations of which this belief is a rationalised expression. In all the new States which have been created by the Peace Treaty, nationalism in this sense appears to be absolutely dominant. Most of them would rather kill their neighbors and starve, than live in plenty, at the cost of friendly relations with races whom they hate. This attitude of mind is partly instinctive, partly the result of education and propaganda, which probably cannot be eradicated at all quickly, except by the use of force, in preventing hostilities, promoting freedom of trade, and setting up a new kind of education. The League of Nations, with its legacy of war hatreds, is quite incapable of performing this work. International Socialism alone, of all the forces now in the world, can really alter the mentality of bellicose populations. I do not say that even International Socialism can achieve this quickly, but I do say that, if it were in power, it could achieve it in the course of a generation, since what it has to combat is instinct and tradition, very palpably contrary to self-interest, and what it has to substitute is a generous ideal from which the enormous majority of the population would derive material genefit.

In spite of the serious difficulties and problems which Socialism will have to face if it becomes dominant, I am firmly convinced that it is the necessary next stage in the world's progress, if the things for which Western civilization has stood are to survive in any degree. I believe, also, that the degree of good it can accomplish depends upon the degree of generous hope in those who bring it about. If the evils that flow from economic exploitation are thoroughly realized, and the new world that can result from its complete abolition is vividly desired, a new force will be generated, sufficiently strong to dethrone nationalism from men's hearts; and it is nationalism alone, in Europe and Asia, that enables capitalism to preserve its power for evil. With nationalism removed, idealism and self-interest alike would prompt the enormous majority of the civilized population of the world to adopt International Socialism, and once adopted, this system would be stable through its palpable advantages, and through the fact that there would be no class with an obvious interest in overthrowing it.

Freedom, democracy, peace, efficient production and economic justice, can come through International Socialism and cannot come, so far as I can see, in any other way. But although Socialism may bring these things, it is not certain it will do so. Whether it brings them or not will depend largely upon the manner of its advent, upon the fierceness of the struggle, and upon the temper of the victor.

I think that our own country, especially through the guild idea, has a very definite contribution to make in the transitional time. I think that we can effect the transformation without violence and that we can do more than any other country to keep alive, during the struggle, those ideals of individual liberty without which a socialist society, if created, would be stereotyped and unprogressive and lifeless. Liberty and war are not compatible, yet an extension of liberty is one of the professed aims of socialists: collective liberty in work through self-government in industry; individual liberty outside work through the shortening of hours. The relative merits of different forms of socialism, and of different tactics for securing socialism, can be judged by capacity to secure these ends.

Socialism, no doubt, like capitalism, will be a phase in human development, succeeded by something of which we do not yet foresee the nature, perhaps by anarchism. It would be fatal to future progress if Socialism established itself, like the Church after Constantine, as a persecuting orthodoxy, fettering the human spirit, and delaying progress for a thousand years. Such a result is not impossible, especially if the victory of Socialism is brought about by military means at the end of long and disastrous wars. For this reason, if for no other, the victory of Socialism by peaceful means is immeasurably to be desired.

Every strong conception of human life tends to pass through three phases. In the first, it is amiable, humanitarian, persuasive, seeking to convince by argument rather than by force. In the second phase, having acquired a certain strength, and roused an opposition of a certain fierceness, it ceases to be amiable and becomes militant, justifying its militancy by the belief, inherited from the amiable phase, that its victory will bring the millenium. In the third phase, having acquired power, it becomes oppressive and cruel. Christianity exhibited the first of these phases down to the time of Constantine; in the Crusades it exhibited the second; in the Inquisition it exhibited the third. Capitalism has passed through similar phases. In Adam Smith, Cobden and Bright, we see its amiable phase. In its overthrow of feudal institutions it exhibited its militant phase. In the exploitation of inferior races, and the anti-socialist reign of terror, we see its third, tyrannical phase. The same thing has happened as regards Nationalism, though here the rate of development is different in different nations, according to their strength. Mazzini exhibited its amiable phase, Bismarck its militant phase, and modern Imperialism its tyrannical phase.

Socialism has passed, with the accession of Lenin, from the amiable to the militant stage. In so passing, it has lost much of its attractiveness for certain types of mind. There are those who feel acutely the evils of the existing world, and desire ardently the existence of a world free from these evils, who yet shrink from the stern conflict which is involved in getting rid of them. I confess to a very strong sympathy with such men. I observe that, in the course of a conflict, every ideal becomes degraded, and that the forcible victory of a party is invariably accompanied by loss of the greater part of what made their victory desirable. And violent conflict in itself, especially when it is prolonged and wide-spread, tends to degrade the societies which indulge in it. I cannot believe that a socialism which would achieve victory after a lengthy and world-wide civil war, would retain the kind of temper necessary for a happy and progressive society. Progress after its victory would probably depend upon those who would oppose it in its victorious form, in the interests of some freer, less cast-iron set of institutions, embodying once more something of the old ideals of Liberalism—not, it is true, the economic ideals, such as free competition, but the social ideals, and the intellectual freedom which no party engaged in a life and death struggle can permit.

Socialism has many forms; and it is not improbable that the victory in different countries will be for different forms. Subject to the paramount claims of order and efficient production, the most important thing that any socialistic system has to aim at is freedom. National Buidsmen have always remembered the importance of freedom, far more than their Collectivist predecessors. Their system of balances between the rival powers of Parliament and Guild Congress is designed to secure political freedom. Their system of self-government in industry, as opposed to bureaucratic management by State Socialists, is designed to secure freedom for the collective workers in any industry, both nationally, in the general problems of the industry, and locally, in all matters that can be decided locally. The system of devolution, not only geographically, but industrially, is of great importance for creating the sense of freedom, the possibility of personal initiative, and the opportunity for beneficial experiments.

Self-government in work is the most important of all the forms of freedom that have to be conquered, because his work is what touches a man most closely, and because, owing to this, it is the best way of arousing his political consciousness. Freedom in work was the chief aim of syndicalism, and it is the aim of guild socialism. I believe that it is secured by means of the national guilds than by any other economic organization of production. I believe that the sense of self-direction and independence, which will be thus secured, will entirely alter the outlook upon work of ordinary workers, and will, at any rate while it is new, stimulate production enormously more than the old capitalist incentive of terror.

But in addition to freedom in work there is of course freedom outside work, in leisure hours, and this will be secured by the shortening of hours, which more efficient methods will render possible. At present, more efficient methods are viewed with suspicion as redounding only to the advantage of the capitalist. Under the new system, the whole advantage of them will be obviously derived by the workers, and technical progress is likely to be enormously accelerated by this change. This is illustrated by the Bolshevik adoption of the Taylor system of scientific management (See "The Soviets at Work," by Lenin.)

There is, of course, another kind of freedom, applicable to rather few individuals, and yet of very great importance to the progress of mankind, and that is the freedom to refuse to occupy any place in the organised system of the community. The man who wishes to teach a new religion, to invent a new science, or to produce a new art, may find no guild ready to receive him. All fundamental innovations must necessarily go against the will of the community, no matter what the economic system may be. For the sake of such men it is highly desirable that complete emancipation from the system should be possible for anyone willing to endure sufficient hardships. Exceptional behavior which is probably slightly harmful, but may be very beneficial (such as painting pictures which the experts consider worthless) may rightly be discouraged, but should not be made physically impossible for those who believe in it enough to incur sacrificies rather than discontinue it. Loopholes and exceptions are absolutely vital if society is to remain progressive. We, in this country, if we adopt socialism at all, are sure to adopt it in a piecemeal and unsystematic fashion, which gives a far better chance than systematic Bolshevism for the toleration of loopholes and exceptions. We may hope that Continental socialism, when once it has become secure, will be strong enough to admit the advantages derived from such failure of systematization. In this respect, I believe that we have something of importance to contribute to the ultimate outcome.

Capitalism can no longer make a tolerable world, or preserve for us the heritage of civilization. International Socialism can do these things, provided it can achieve power without too prolonged or ruthless a strugle. Those who oppose the advent of Socialism take upon themselves a very grave responsibility. It is impossible to believe that the old system will be preserved, and all that the opposition can effect is to rob the new system of much of its merit. We who stand for Socialism have to remember that it is not enough to defeat our opponents, if in so doing we defeat ourselves, and that we shall defeat ourselves if the new society which results from our efforts does not embody more of freedom for the creative human spirit, and for the lives of ordinary men and women, than has ever existed in the world before. I do not believe that it is possible to dispense wholly with the use of force, though I do believe that, in this country, the necessary force can be acquired without violent revolution. Force, if it is to succeed in its ultimate purpose, must be always subservient to propaganda. It must be employed in ways which help to persuade, not in ways which alienate the ordinary citizen. And at every stage, everything possible must be done to make it clear that the use of force is temporary, and that the goal is a society where force shall no longer be needed. It is only through the inspiration of a great hope, through the vivid realization of the better world at which we aim, that we can prevent our aims from degenerating in the conflict, and that we can secure the victory, not only of our party, but of our ideals; the ideals of freedom, economic justice, and international co-operation, which the world needs, and which only Socialism can achieve.

Bertrand Russell.

mowing machines, harvesting machines, sheaf binders, at which, from morning to night, wage slaves are working. And just as in the factory, they are not working for themselves but for the proprietor. Because the land, the soil, the machines, the seeds—in one word, everything except the hands of the workmen themselves is the private property of the capitalist-proprietor. He is the boss here. He commands and manages the business in such a way that sweat and blood are changed into ringing gold. The workers obey him, occasionally grumble a bit but continue to earn gold for the proprietor because he has everything—and the worker, the poor country man, possesses nothing.

It occasionally happens that the landlord does not hire any workers, but rents out his land. With us, in Russia, for example, the peasants with their small plots of land hardly large enough to feed a chicken, were forced to rent land from the landowner. They worked there with their horses, their plows, their harrows and drags. But in this way, also, they were mercilessly exploited. The bigger the need for land, the larger rent did the landlords demand, forcing the poor peasants to actual slavery. Why could he do it? Because the land belonged to him, the landlord, because the land was the private property of the landlord-class.

Capitalist society is divided into two classes: into those who work much and eat little and poorly; and into the class which works little or not at all, but which eats much and well. This does not accord with the Holy Bible which says: "Who works, shall eat." But this facts does not hinder the priests of every religion from praising the capitalist system. for, to be sure, everywhere the priests receive their golden reward from the capitalists (except in the Soviet Republic).

Now arises a second question: How can a small number of parasites maintain the right of private property in all the most necessary instruments of labor? How has this private property of the parasitical class existed so long? What is the cause of it?

The cause of it is the excellent organization of the enemy of the working people. At the present time, there is not a single country in which the capitalists work separately. On the contrary, each of them is a staunch member of the propertyholders' organization. And these very organizations of propertyholders have all the power in their hands, they have tens of thousands of loyal agents who do not serve them through fear alone, but because their conscience tells them to. The whole economic, business life of the community is at the complete disposal of special combinations of property owners, syndicates, trusts, and large associations of banks. These combinations control and rule everything.

The most important combination of all is the bourgeois State. This organization of propertyholders holds all the reins of government and of power in its hands. Here everything is discussed and calculated, everything is considered and prepared so that at the first attempt of the workingclass to rise against capital, the attempt may be nipped in the bud.

The government has at its disposal harsh material force (spies, police officials, courts, hangmen, drilled and soulless soldiers) and the spiritual force which gradually corrupts the workingmen and the poor morally, educating them according to false ideas. For this purpose, the bourgeois State has schools and the church, to which must be added the capitalist press. Everyone knows that pig-breeders can breed pigs that are so fat that they can hardly walk, but are extraordinarily fit for the slaughter. Such pigs are artificially bred by giving them a particular kind of food every day, from which they grow fat. Just so does the capitalist deal with the working-class. He gives the workers, to be sure, very little real food—for fattening the body. But every day he serves to the workers a special sort of mental food which makes the brain of the workers fat and unfit to work. The bourgeoisie would like to turn the working-class into a herd of swine, which is obedient and fit for slaughter, which does not think and which willingly subordinates itself. On that account, the bourgeoisie begins even with the children in the schools and in church, inoculating the idea that one must be obedient to those in authority because they are ordained by God (only the Bolsheviki are honored by the Church's ban instead of its prayers, because they refused to pay the deceivers in monks' hoods out of the treasury of the government). And for the same reason, the bourgeoisie is very solicitous for the successful dissemination of its lying press.

The admirable organization of the bourgeois-class makes it possible for it to maintain private property. There are very few millionarires, but next to them is a sorry mass of their most trusted, submissive and brilliantly paid servants: ministers, factory directors, bank directors, etc.; next to them are their helpers, who get less but are absolutely dependent on them, are educated in their spirit, and intend to get positions of the same variety, and if they succeed, to mount higher; they are followed by still smaller officials and agents of capital, etc. In rows they follow each other and are bound together by the centralized organizations of the bourgeois State and other combinations of propertyholders. These organizations cover each country like a net, in which the working-class struggles in vain.

Eevery capitalist government becomes really an enormous Association of property owners. The workers work—the possessors enjoy; the workers execute—the propertyholders command; the workers are deceived—the possessors deceive. That is the system which is called the capitalist system and to which the Lord Capitalists bid us submit.

Notes of Interest to Workers

MOSCOW.—A recent report of the Moscow municipal food administration shows that the most strenuous work of the bureau has been that of furnishing necessaries of life to the children. There are in Moscow 21,000 children under one year, 110,000 between one and five years and 240,000 between five and sixteen years. Children under one year are furnished sterilized milk from special kitchens. Children of school age are nourished in 116 special dining rooms and those not of school age in 11 special rooms. Besides this there are 171 school kitchens. Some 35,000 children are being cared for by various soviet institutions.

GENEVA, Switzerland.—A plan to launch a simultaneous attack on British imperialism was developed at a recent conference here of delegates from India, Praia, Afghanistan, Turkey, Egypt Arabia, Algeria and Russia. Enver Pasha of Turkey was the president of the conference.

The Indian delagtes asserted that the British military occupation of Constantinople was only a "bluff" and that its real purpose was to obtain British prestige in India. They assured the conference of the hearty cooperation of the revolutionists of India in the dismemberment of the British empire.

TIFLIS.—Official newspapers in Persia are energentically demanding immediate alliance with Soviet Russia, which, they say, is the only country in the world which is not imperialistic and which will honor the rights of Persia.

The revolutionary movement in Persia is growing. The broad masses are impatiently waiting for the best moment to arise against the British and the Shah. Already one of the leading reactionary leaders, Supexdar, has been murdered.

MILWAUKEE.—The appeal for clemency for Carl Haessler, former instructor in the University of Illinois serving a term in Alcatraz prison, California, as a political objector, has been denied and he will have to serve his full term, according to word received here by his wife and friends who recently appealed in his behalf. Haessler's term expires about June 15, 1921, but it may be commuted for good behavior to permit his release Sept. 16.

MOSCOW.—In the government of Saratoff strenuous work has been done to increase the area of cultivated land. After the war broke out, the amount of land under cultivation decreased yearly by about 100,000 hectares. Thanks to energetical measures and general labor mobilization, the level of 1915 has now been reached. Over 400 new reparation shops for farm implements have been established.

VIENNA, April 30.—(By Mail)—With the departure of a train yesterday carrying 620 children to Sweden, the number of Viennese, little ones who have been temporarily saved from famine through the kindness of other countries reached the 80,000 mark. According to data given out by Vice 26,973 children, Holland, 19,942, Germany 12,621, Italy 6,593, Sweden 6,190 Mayor Winter, Switzerland has taken Denmark 5,490, Norway, 2,733, Czechoslovakia 322 and Upper Austria 60.

In voicing the thanks of the city to the foreign missions and committees who have helped in saving the hungry children, Herr Winter declared that the wonderful spirit of human solidarity displayed in this relief work would form a bright page in future history.

KREIGER, I. W. W., IS FREED BY JURY.

Man Charged with Bombing Oil Head's Home Acquitted in 2 Hours.

TULSA, Okla., June 8.—Charles Krieger, I. W. W. under prosecution since December 28, 1917, in two different trials, was acquitted today of the charge against him, after the jury had been out for two hours.

Krieger was held on a charge of conspiring to dynamite the home of J. Edgar Pew, an executive of the Standard Oil Company subsidiary. He was first arrested in Tulsa December 28, 1917, without warrant, and held in prison for more than six months without being informed of the charge against him.

His first trial started on October 6, 1918, and resulted in a hung jury—six to six. His second trial stated a number of weeks ago. In the interval he was released under bail. The jury which acquitted him today was composed of a majority of farmers. Judge Raymond S. Cole officiated in the district court where Krieger was tried.

He says he refuses freedom except as a free man, and that if he is an outlaw he wants them to prove it and punish him. He is still in prison.

From Our Petrograd Correspondent.

Petrograd, April 15, 1920.

My Dear Friends:—

I could write you now about five volumes of 700 pages each, if it only be possible to deliver them to you. In Russia indeed is a workers' and peasants' government, but the long war is terrible destroying the national wealth and tiring out the nation. The only thing that can save Russia is the Soviet form of government and the necessary means of production granted to it, regardless of where they come from. The Soviet government, as yet, is not the exponent and the apparatus to realize the Communist principle if it is not led and controlled by a Communist Party. The Communist Party and the Soviet government are two different things in the same space and time. More yet: the Soviet government will not be a Communist government if the International proletarian movement will not grow and force its governments to back down economically as they were forced to back down militarily. Unless this takes place there will be not only no Communism in Russia, but there will be nothing. People will die out thru starvation and the complete collapse of civilization will follow not only in Russia but in all capitalistic countries. The capitalist class would degrade the workers in a state of slavery. Therefore work with united forces for International Communism.

In Petrograd I met comrade Sinovyev, who recently went through an operation for appendicitis, but is recovering fast. The Lett, Peters, who was branded by the American bourgeoisie press as the Bolshevik butcher because he was the extraordinary commissaire to combat counterrevolution, was not killed by a bomb, as reported, but occupies a high post in Caucasus. I have also met other leaders of the revolution, for instance, Radek, Bucharin and Maxim Gorky. Radek is a very active and attractive individual. Bucharin is very absent minded and usually forgets his own comfort. If someone will not put him on his coat, he will leave it and go without. So once I am told, going from Moscow to Petrograd he lost his overcoat in this manner and was supplied another. I heard Maxim Gorky in the Petrograd Soviet session. That great author is a poor speaker. Concerning the views of Bolshevism held by you and I, I wish to say that we were the best Bolshewiks, our views conform with those of Lenin.

Yours for the triumph of the working class

Slow Progress in Communist Trial.

CHICAGO.—Of six hundred men thus far questioned as prospective jurors in the trial of twenty-four members of the Communist Labor Party, charged with criminal syndicalism and conspiracy to advocate the overthrow of the government by force, only eight have proven acceptable to both sides, and have been sworn in. The state has exhausted 63 of its 200 peremptory challenges; the defense sixty-four.

The trial began on May 10th and is completing its sixth week.

I. W. W. POET IS FREE.

CHICAGO.—Charles Ashleigh, poet of the working-class, is at liberty again, after having esrved eighteen months in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, to which he was convicted with ninety-five other I. W. W. His release on bail was obtained by the American Freedom Foundation which is working for immediate release of all political prisoners and for restoration of American political and civil liberty.

Whether Ashleigh will remain free, or whether he will go back to serve out the rest of his ten-year sentence, will depend upon whether or not the appeal of the I. W. W. will be sustained. Argument took place here June 15, Attorney Otto Christensen acting as counsel for defense. It may be several months before the decision is handed down.

Ashleigh left behind him at Leavenworth about 150 political prisoners. Some fifty of these are I. W. W. convicted in Chicago; thirty-seven, I. W. W. convicted at Sacramento; twenty-seven, I. W. W. imprisoned as a result of the faomus "Wichita indictment'. Four more I. W. W. from San Francisco are in the number. The others are members of the Working Class Union of Oklahoma; Kansas City Communists; the Magon brothers; Brent Down Allinson and Jaeger, conscientious objectors. All of these men are political prisoners still in jail as a result of war time emergency legislation.

COMMUNIST CASES ARE NOLLED.

ROCKFORD, Ill.—Upon motion of State's Attorney William Johnson in the local circuit court, the indictments against Mrs. Christine Person and Peter Anderson, alias Martell, were nolle prossed and by agreement Karl Lind was released from the county jail on his own recognizance.

They were three of 13 who were indicted by the county grand jury here on the charge of violating the Illinois anti-sedition statute. Mrs. Person, Lind and Anderson were members of the Communist Labor Party of America and were among the nearly 200 persons who were scooped up here in the federal raid on Jan. 2.

Mrs. Person is in a critical condition suffering from tuberculosis. The Persons have three children.

Peter Anderson and Karl Lind have been in the county jail since Jan. 2.

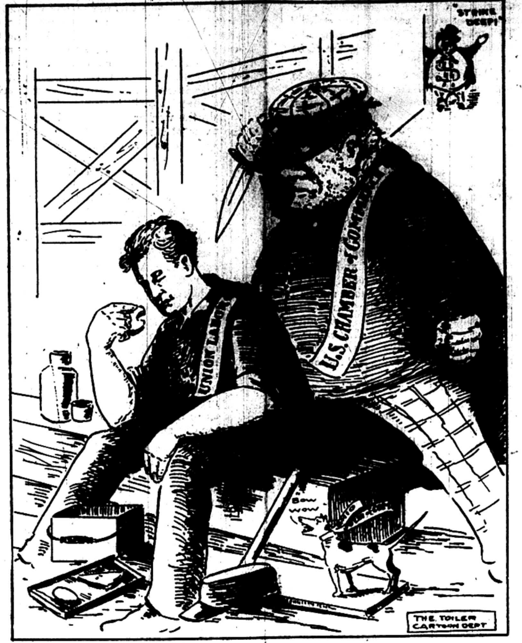
THE COMMUNIST CALL TO THE WORKERS.

We communists say to the workers: "Many thorns lie in our path, but we must, without losing our courage, go forward. The great Revolution which has turned the entire old world upside down, cannot run althogether smoothly, one cannot accomplish it with kid gloves on: it is being born in pain. These pains must be endured, patiently, its purgatory must be endured, in order, finally, to get free of the iron vise of capitalistic slavery".

The Menshevik, Social Revolutionaries, Social Democrats stand aloof and look on, crticise the mistakes and failures, and draw from them this conclusion: let us turn back, let us give everything back to the bourgeoisie, and let us modestly demand reasonable portions in our capitalist stable!



Playing His True Part.

The United States Chamber of Profiteers.

Bill Smith.

Do you remember when Mitch Palmer,—after getting some millions of dollars from a subservient Congress, organized his "Flying Squadrons" to chase down the profiteers—and thus kick the lining out of the ol H. C. L., —do you remember that, boys? Sure. Do you remember how these profiteers then left the country in ship loads to dodge Mitch—and how he filled jails with those that fell into his remorseless clutches—and how the H. C. L. dropped so rapidely that one grew dizzy watching it—do you remember that, too, boys? Neither do we.

But one must not be to hard on Mitch for these profiteers are very elusive,—they keep under cover. It is as hard to find one as it is to find the elephant at a circus. But if Palmer really wanted to get at the bottom of this profiteering,—what a golden opportunity he lost just recently! Here assembled at Atlantic City in April an aggregation which calls itself the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. Now if he had followed the tactics he pursued in the East, of raiding night schools, where foreigners were trying to improve their education,—and have thrown a cordon of his sleuths around this Atlantic City assembly—and then arrested the whole bunch,—without warrant or explanation—and slammed them into widely separated jails without privilege of bail,—and then started an investigation, just one half as drastic as he did with the foreigners,—as to what and who were back of these people;—holy gee! boys, wouldn't there be a smell!

Commerce means—"Barter, Trade and Traffic."

Thus the most stupid person can readily see where to look for the profiteer. After the production of a commodity, no matter whether mechanical or agriculture,—it then enters the domain of Commerce—the Kingdom of the Profiteers. Then the Public commences to get it in the neck! It is in this Kingdom of the Profiteers, that 300 percent from farmer to consumer is filched—the 600 per cent from cattle percent from miner to consumer is embezzled—and so on down the long line of these protected thieves!

What could be more appropriate let us ask,—than that Mercury, god of Commerce, is also patron deity of all the Thieves of the World!

This ancient deity stuff takes us back to remote ages—and it recalls events in the grey centuries when Seti held down the Pharao job in Egypt. Some "lean years" occured in his reign and the grand forefathers of our present profiteers got busy and "manipulated" the markets until conditions were very sore indeed. Seti's grand steward snooped around and took a census of these fine gentlemen and they were all invited to one of these little "informal suppers." History is silent as to the details of that supper, but it is supposed that they damned labor in general,—were agin the unions etc. etc. We know though that Seti was a rough old scout and that the name of not one who was around that festal board could be found in the next years city directory!

What is this Chamber of Commerce of the United States?

It is the logical successor to the old Manufacturers and Merchants Assotiation, of infamous memory, whose headquarters were at Indianopolis, and was captained by the late D. M. Parry. It punished strike breakers and did all in its power to throttle labor when ever the opportunity occured.

Standing practically in the same position is this new born ogre of capitalism with its high sounding name.

It is a self created institution, having had its accouchment in Washington, D. C., in April 1912. It now claims a membeship of 660,000, with Joseph H. Defrees of Chicago as its executive head.

It is interesting to note the "Purposes" which it claims made its creation necessary. Remember that its permanent headquarters are in that great manufacturing city of Washington, D. C. Chief among its "purposes", it says —"When debatable policies affecting our National Commerce" — they must butt in, and "confer alike with the executive and Legislative branches of the government etc." in order to "make all business legislation constructive."

All of which means, in plain language, that they have squatted there to intimidate and coerce legislation. They hold over these timid congressmen that power of terror that the Popes were wont to launch at servile kings—the excommunication and the interdict. Woe unto that congressman that does not pay heed to the "whispers from the throne"! He may as well dig his little hole in the ground and climb in!

To show how well this combination has succeeded in throttling free legislation we present the following letter from Ex-Senator Robert F. Pettigrew of South Dakota.

Carl D. Thompson, author and secretary of the Public Ownership League, with offices in Chicago, wrote United States Senator R. F. Pettigrew, regarding the advisability of petitioning Congress at Washington, and received the following interesting reply:

Your petition should not run to the government. Your petition should be presented, if you want the fun of getting up a petition, to the real government, no longer invisible located in Washington City. The heads of the great industrial and financial institutions have organized the United States Chamber of Commerce. It is a corporation; they are all corporations; we are a government of, for and by the corporations. Our feudal lords are artificial persons without human sympathy. Their attorneys are in Washington in the House and Senate; 76 senators out of 96 are lawers; 310 out of 440 members of Congress are lawyers. These lawyers are the attorneys for the great financial and industrial combinations which are the real government of the United States, and, of course, you know how useless it would be to appeal to the real government and how silly it is to present anything to their attorneys.

Judge and Jury Establish Mob Rule in Cincinnati

By O. Buchtaeschel

The case of the Communist Labor Party of Cincinnati against the Robert Bently Post of the American Legion for damages done to its headquarters last November, was concluded in court there last week. The jury's verdict was in favor of the defendants. The case will not be appealed. Jos. W. Sharts was the attorney for the plaintiff. The Post was represented by 22 attorneys.

Out of the immense material developed from this trial, we can quote only a very small part of it.

The defendants admitted guilt, but made as excuse for their crimes, that their patriotic fervor was avansed, which prompted them, to destroy the literature, which they claimed was seditious.

The examination of the witnesses brought forth the fact, that the defendants had only a superficial knowledge of the cantents of the literature destroyed and that the ring leader Cooper, had a conversation "over the telephone" with the federal authorities, who stated, there was no law which prohibited the printing and distribution of that literature.

In the proceedings of the trial the counsel for the defense tried in vain to prove that the platform of the C. L. P. preaches violence.

The counsel for the defense read that "into" the platform and claimed their interpretation of the platform was absolutely correct. To prove their contention, they brought in everything and anything under the sun.

If attorney Jos. Sharts for the plaintiff made the attempt to go to the bottom of it, Colston, counsel for the defense objected to it. The manner in which he objected and was sustained by the presiding judge showed the one sideness of the proceedings. We cite here only two cases: Gragdon for the defense brought in the history of the prison ship of Dorset, England.

About two hundred years age, seven agriculture workers, acting as a committee to ask for higher wages, were charged with conspiracy, found guilty and sentenced to deportation.

A "defective" photograph of a Russian newspaper was admitted as evidence.

But as Sharts for the plaintiff talked about the history of Cincinnati to prove his side, objections were sustained.

A photograph, showing the destruction in our office, made on the 19th of November, the very morning after the raid, was declared "as arranged".

After long and tedious proceedings the hearing of the witnesses was finished.

One conspicious fact impressed itself to the audience.

The counsel, ignorant of economic science, tried to hide this fact by boisterous language and cheap, silly remarks alleged to be witty. The antics of the members of the American Legion reminded us of the behavior of the "Junkers" in the german Reichstag.

Sharts, as counsel for the plaintiff had the opening speech. In a quite and logical manner he drew the parallel in history between the abolitionists and the Communist Labor Party.

Colston for the defense followed with a boisterous talk for "democracy" which culminated in the remark: Ah, Kar Marx is a back number!

These ignoramusses had the audacity to declare economic science as "bunk."

Colston was followed by Graydon for the defense. He tried to appear to be accentuated by a love for th law of the land. His first statement was, that the literature destroyed had no value as property, because it was outlawed.

(Dear reader mark well, the federal authorities declared that literature legal, then counsel for the defense admits, that the American Legion is above the federal government.)

He continued to talk about conspiracy, violence, dictatorship by a minority, burglars tools, gambling devices, confiscation of "all" the property a man or woman possesses, industrial production abolished, general strike unlawful, the prison ship of Dorset, England, the decree of six hours work in Russia, whilst the workers are forced to work 16 hours and abusive statements about the communist party.

Comrade Jos. Sharts made the finishing speech, which was a marvelous, eloquent and logical one. We would do an injustice to it, to cite only fragments.

The weight of his arguments impressed the audience and was propaganda of great value.

Sharts finished with the words to the jury, that the issue is: if the laws of the land are to be vindicated, or a group of unscrupulous men shall decide what we are allowed to write and read.

On the 16th of June the court reconvened to hear the charge of the judge to the jury.

To do justice to the readers of The Toiler, this charge ought to be in full here. But the crux of the question is this: While judge Gusweiler stated plainly that according to law the members of the American Legion had no right to enter the place, he came around this point by saying, that they could destroy the literature, if they deemed it seditious.

By doing this, he transferred the responsibility and power to act from the constituted federal authorities to any irresponsible, unscrupulous person or mob.

As a matter of course, we did not expect justice before a capitalist court, but how about the anarchists of the John Most type, ain't they ashamed of their new increase?

The fourth and fifth amendments of the constitution are thrown on the scrap heap.

Soviet Troops are Lenient.

BERLIN, May 20.—(By Mail). In today's "Freiheit" is prominently displayed an army order issued to all the Russian Soviet troops engaged in resisting the Polish invasion. The ordern which is dated May 13, and signed by Minister of War Trotzky, reads as follows:

"Under all circumstaces are prisoners and wounded men to be treated as opponents who are entitled to protection.

"If the Polish White Guards commit massacres and execute not only communists, but every Russian who falls into their hands, Soviet Russia will hold the ruling classes and not the Polish workers responsible for this.

"All the Polish crimes deserve but one answer: Vigorous attacks upon the Polish White Guards."

The Freiheit comments upon the order by saying that "Russia feels strong enough not to retaliate upon misguided Polish workers for the crimes of adventurers."

National Chamber of Commerce Program of Industrial Slavery

In high-sounding phrases about “justice”, “equality” and “individual liberty”, the Board of Directors of the National Chamber of Commerce has formulated a complete program of industrial slavery for the workers of America. This twelve-plank program is now under referendum vote of over 1,300 industrial and commercial organizations.

At the time of President Wilson’s famous industrial conference the liberal journals were insistent that Judge Geary represented the views of an exceptional autocrat, views which had no counterpart anywhere else in the world except in Japan. It was stated most emphatically that the group represented by Judge Geary as spokesman at this conference, the employer group, would not sanction the reactionary attitude of the chief of the Steel Trust; and that this attitude could only be accounted for by the fact that the steel strike was then in progress, and that recognition of collective bargaining under the circumstances would have compelled Judge Geary to enter into negotiations with the union representatives of the strikers.

Now comes the Chamber of Commerce program, which is expected to secure the necessary two-thirds vote on referendum,—a program which goes the full limit of Judge Geary’s reactionism, and even a little beyond. The adoption of this declaration of policy will formally put American capitalism on record in favor of “benevolent despotism”. It will make our capitalists avowedly the most obstinate, defiant and contemptuous in their dealings with their workers of any group of capitalists in the world. This has already been realized as matter of fact, though not heretofore advertised by the capitalists themselves by formal adoption of a program.

> “Any person possesses the right to engage in any lawful business or occupation and to enter, individually or collectively, into any lawful contract, either as employer or employe. These rights are subject to limitation only through a valid exercise of the public authority.”

Once the absolute sanctity of contract is accepted, without regard to the living truths involved in dealings between the worker whose weekly or daily wage is his only hold upon life and the powerful corporation to whom that worker is an item like any other detail of machinery, then the foundation is definitely established for the perfect program of wage slavery. It was upon the same sacred principle that the system of chattel slavery was defended even by Abraham Lincoln. But the Abolitionists did not hesitate to challenge this one of the “ideals” among “the fundamentals of our national institutions.”

An important method of limiting effective organization among the workers and the outlawing of strikes is the use of appropriate employment contracts.

It is to be noticed that nobody is questioning the right of any person to go into business. But the Chamber of Commerce is very much concerned to maintain the worker’s sacred right to enter into any occupation on any contract which he may “choose” to make. This “liberty” is to be limited only by public law; which means that it must not be limited by union rules of any kind. It must not be limited by collective agreement between workers’ and employers’ organizations, but each employe must retain his “rights”.

Of course the “open shop” is the logical sequence to the first clause, and here it is:

> “2. The right of open shop operation, that is, the right of employer and employee to enter into and determine the conditions of employment relations with each other, is an essential part of the individual right of contract possessed by each of the parties.”

To make the matter quite complete, there follows a clause declaring the right to scab:

> “3. All men possess the equal right to associate voluntarily for the accomplishment of lawful purposes by lawful means. The association of men, whether employers, or employees or others, for collective action or dealing, confers no authority over, and must not deny any right of, those who do not desire to act or deal with them.”

Just the same, as experience has shown, it would be rough sledding for any employer who refused to recognize the authority of an employers’ association.

The fourth clause demands that associations of employers and of employees shall be “equally subject to the authority of the State” and responsible legally for their acts or acts of agents. This clause is a criticism of the exclusion of labor unions from the anti-trust laws, and it is further suggestive of incorporation of unions and liability on suits for damages. If the full meaning of this clause were to be developed into law the most conservative trade unions would soon become outlaw organizations.

The next clause is a brazen bit of hypocrisy:

> “5. To develop with due regard for the health, safety and well-being of the individual, the required output of industry is the common social obligation of all engaged therein. The restriction of productive effort or of output by either employer or employee for the purpose of creating an artificial scarcity of the product or of labor is an injury to society.”

The absolute life principle of capitalist industry is artificial limitation of production—restriction of output to the point of maximum return on investment.

Just why should a wage slave consider that he has any “social obligation” concerning production? There could only be social obligation if there were social production. But with private production there is only private obligation. Each corporation considers itself responsible only to its stockholders, that is its 100% obligation. The only “social obligation” of the wage slave is toward his fellow-workers. Production is not his business, and cannot become his business until “the production-epoch”, that is, until social ownership makes production the affair and interest of all engaged in the common industry.

Now we come to wages:

> “6. The wage of labor must come out of the product of industry and must be earned and measured by its contribution thereto. In order that the worker, in his own and the general interest, may develop his full productive capacity, and may thereby earn at least a wage suffficient to sustain him upon a proper standard of living, it is the duty of management to cooperative with him to secure continuous employment suited to his abilities, to furnish incentive and opportunity for improvement, to provide proper safeguards for his health and safety and to encourage him in all practicable and reasonable ways to increase the value of his productive effort.”

Let us restate this remarkable clause in our own language; “We think that the workers should be kept alive. Indeed, we would like to see the workers keep on living. But, in order to remove any doubts on this point, we call the attention of our employees to the fact that they must hustle to beat hell if they expect to get enough wages enough of the time to keep on living. We are also willing to help the worker to improve himself—to increase the value of his productive effort. But we are not saying anything about who is to get this increased value.”

> “7. The number of hours in the work day or week in which the maximum output consistent with the health and well-being of the individual can be maintained in a given industry should be ascertaned by careful study and should never be exceeded except in case of emergency, and one day of rest, or its equivalent, should be provided. The reduction in working hours below such economic limit, in order to secure greater leisure for the individual, should be made only with full understanding and acceptance of the fact that it involves a commensurate loss in the earning power of the workers, a limitation and a shortage of the industry and an increase in the cost of the product, with all the necessary effect of these things upon the interests of the community and the nation.”

Never was a more inhuman proposition conceived by the mind of man. The owner of the chattel slave was at least obligated to keep his slave alive and marketable; he could not consider it as open to question whether or not the slave could keep himself alive by his contribution to industry. Nor did chattel slavery ever undertake to regulate the hours of labor by an exact mathematical calculation of the limit of efficiency, not one minute more nor one minute less than the point of maximum use of the sum total of the slave’s life energy.

Not the eight-hour day, not the six-hour day, not the ten-hour day, but the number of hours which the worker, calculated as a piece of machinery, can stand the strain. For every minute less than this calculation, a reduction of wages. Taken together with the wage clause, this means a reductiotn of wages below the doubtful level of a “proper” standard of living, whatever these benevelent employers may consider proper. Go the limit of the use of your muscles and nerves or starve, that is the size of it.

One day rest out of seven, maybe; there is the qualification of an “equivalent” for the one day of rest. Think of the generosity!—at a time when organized workers are demanding the five-day week. At a time when the workers of the world are beginning to see as reality the possibility of an industrial system where the six-hour day for the five-day week may easily supply a living which includes not only the bare needs of life, but recreation, education, travel, every substantial enjoyment which the Chamber of Commerce considers appropriate to the individual life of its members!

What about unemployment? Surely this is a waste of energy utility below the “economic limit” —yet it is a constant, wholesale, inevitable part of the system of private capitalistic production. Millions are out of work all the time; on the average all workers lose one-fourth of full time. Too bad for the workers; all that the Chamber of Commerce is concerned about is the time that the employees are on the job, and that during this time a day’s work shall be not one jot less than the last ounce of efficient energy!

There is no word in this program about unemployment. It is taken for granted that the capitalists will generously supply work to all who accept these terms, when as a matter of fact this has never been the case and never will be the case under private industry.

The next two clauses are a restatement of the Gary version of “collective bargaining”, as follows:

> “8. Adequate means, satisfactory both to the employer and his employees, and voluntarily agreed to by them, should be provided for the discussion and adjustment of employment relations and the just and prompt settlement of all disputes that arise in the course of industrial operation.
> 9. When, in the establishment or adjustment of employment relations, the employees do not deal individually, but by mutual consent such dealing is conducted by either party through representatives, it is proper for the other party to ask that these representatives shall not be chosen or controlled by, or in such dealing in any degree represent, any outside group or interest in the questions at issue.”

In other words, no union negotiations, no solidarity of workers even of a single craft, but only a nice, amiable little unionism of the one plant, a unionism which the employer can very easily supervise and keep in hand.

Th Chamber of Commerce is kidding itself, or here is the deliberate challenge against any form of labor organization which goes outside the one shop, which means no organization at all. Probably the latter is the truth. American capitalism realizes that all organization of labor must be destroyed, or the momentum of the wages and hours fight will hurl the workers into the revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of capitalism. The Chamber of Commerce appears to be ready to face the issue, to declare openly that it means to maintain a slave system by might of the State.

The last clause of this program are anti-strike clauses, dealing with government employees, also with the workers in “public service activities”, a classification which can easily be extended to include every major industry.

This declaration by the leading organization of capitalism in the United States shows that we have arrived at the show-down in the class fight. The employers dare to show their full hand. They hold in contempt the backward, narrow, corrupt union movement in this country; and they mean to crush in its infancy the newer movement toward militant industrial unionism. This is the program of class-conscious capitalism, a program of industrial slavery built directly on the law-making, court, police and military power of the State; a program which regards the worker as one form of material for the making of profits, never for a moment as a human being.

The Black Sheep.

Chapter XXXVI.

Collin’s Ambition.

On their way to Harrison, Jack asked Collins, what object he or Rudolph had in cutting pages from his note book, and the big man replied that he had done so, for the good of humanity. Of course this was an explanation that did not explain anything to the boy. Yet, he asked no further questions, partly because he had not understood Collins’ meaning and was turning the matter over in his mind, and partly, because Collins immediately proceeded to take him to task for his singular philosophy anent human relations.

“You have a good brain Jack,” said he, “but it is leading you wrong. It ties you so close to a mole hill that you fail to see the mountain. Your passion for natural phenomena in the animal and vegetable world has a tendancy to blind you to the greater, and in a sense more wonderful, phenomena, of the social world. You are not a millionaire, or the son of a millionaire, no matter how you wiggle you are on the lower side of the fence. Types or no types, capitalism is a reality and the class struggle is a fact. It is a damned hideous fact and you will not be able to escape it.”

“I do not deny the class struggle. I know that it exists. The only difference between you and I is that I maintain that it must exist as a natural result of biologic variation. As long as life produces variations there will be the weak and the strong, the wise and the foolish, the agressive and meek, the worker and the shirker, the schemer and the producer. All I maintain is that no matter what your system of society you will always be face to face with these facts,” Jack urged.

But Collins ignored the boys explanation at least in part when he said, “The trouble with you is, that you study the problems of labor and the laboring classes, as the astronomer studies the moon. You have too little preceptive information of working problems, to be in a position effectively to criticize social science, Remember, the test of truth is, will it work? You cannot test any social theory by yourself. You are an individual within society and not society itself. You will never be big enough, Jack, to force a ready made theory down a social throat. In order to become an effective social scientist you must enter the working class and study its workings from within. You must learn to guide the natural trend of the masses. You cannot lead or force the mass.

It is true, you have had but little experience in the working class. You have seen some of its trials in a minor way, but only in a very minor way. You have only approached the class struggle in the skirmish line; as yet you are unacquainted with the fierceness of its battles. You have met much of the dross that is, the drunken, weakned, degenerate elements, and you have met a few thinking men. It has all been in less than six months, and from this meager data you have built up your theory of types as ultimate determining factors in human evolution. And I do not say that they are not determining factors. I often feel the force of your argument, for you know I do not like to associate with stew bums, Jesus lovers, and mission stiffs. I am free to confess that I dislike the riff raff; they grate on my nerves. I admit that I am top heavy, and naturally lean toward men with brain. But all that is beside the question, it obscures the real issues. The isse of capitalism versus humanity.

Do you realize Jack that capitalism cannot last forever, that sooner or later it must die, and that at its death, one of two things must happen, either, the workers take over natural resources and the tools of industry and run them for the common good, or the world plunges back into the dark ages or worse.” He stopped and looked at his companion intently as if expecting an aswer, but the boy made no reply. He just walked on beside Collins on the trail between the forest and the lake, evidently busy with his own thought on the subject of human destiny.

Just before they came in sight of the village Collins resumed the conversation. Speaking as if to himself. “It makes no difference,” said he, “if the ultimate change comes, first to the light or to the dark and it will be for good or evil in proportion to the accumulated intelligence of the working class. The change will come as truly as tomorrow’s rising sun will bring the coming of the day. That can be mathematically demonstrated. Blondes and brunettes are not a problem in industrial development, altho they may be a problem in social relations. And social relations are but the reflex of industrial necessities and industrial necessities are regulated by the requirements of mankind and the availibility of natural resources, plus the evolution of the machine. All these factors are interacting. The real problem is, whether mankind will retain and develop what it now has or if it will lose and relapse into the primeval night.”

Jack looked at the big man curiously. He had seldom heard him talk with such calm earnestness. There was no doubt, but what Collins believed what he said. He actually feared the possible death of civilization and a consequent relapse into the dark ages. He feared “Caesar’s Column” more than he did the “Iron Heel.” Jack tried to comfort him with the statement that civilization could only fall and perish if by some catastrophe the blonde races were exterminated. Then, he maintained, that the world would go back into darkness until a new light could be evolved in the fog lands.

But Collins was not in the mood to philosophise. “O forget it,” said he impatiently. “Get this idea clearly in mind, it is the one important thought that every worker should hold. The working class constitutes eighty per cent of the world’s population — the parasites twenty per cent. These figures are not absolutely correct, I only use them as a paradigm. Now the twenty, will employ the eighty, only as long as there are markets. Once the markets are gone, and they are fast going, then seventy out of every eighty will become useless to the twenty parasites. Useless human beasts of burden will be disposed of, as were the oxen at the coming of the horse, and as will the horse be disposed of at the coming of the motor. My God kid, can’t you see the massacres, the holocausts of the future, if we do not develop the spirit of solidarity. The people simply must awaken to retain and to hold what their hands and brains have lost, for if hey do not then their masters will hurl them against each other, and they will destroy each other in the fury of their own ignorance,” he concluded passionately.

“It’s no use to try it,” Jack answered. “They will only chase you, and jail you, and finally kill you, for your pains. The very people you try to awaken would thank their bewhiskered Gods for having had part in your murder. The very masses who you would give your life to educate would hold a ghost dance around your bleeding cadaver. It is not that they are viscious, it is because they are trusting and obedient to their superiors, as they call them. They believe the word of the papers, the preachers, the teachers, and all other hirelings of the ruling beast. You can’t get them to hang together, as far as solidarity is concerned, the whole working class is a rope of sand.”

Just see what they did to me at Mullen, they praised me to the skies when I spoke to them of the things that affected their present and future welfare. They led me to believe that they were with me, but when I was fired, because of my agitation, these very people said among themselves, “why didn’t he keep his mouth shut,” and “it serves him right, he had no business shooting off his bazoo against the people who give him work,” and “A man should stay by the man who feeds him.” Ye gods, they fed me, when I worked in their mines, in constant danger of death and received only a fraction of what I produced. No, no Ed I can’t see where either you or I gain anything, by playing twentieth century Jesus. Both the masters and the slaves, would look upon us as Black Sheep.”

They were just crossing a little brook that ran from the woodland into the lake, by jumping from one rock to the other. The rocks were wet with the rain that had fallen and the big man loosing his footing fell full length into the water. The icy bath cooled the ardor of his eloquence and Jack rustled about to find pitch wood, with which to start a fire, so as to dry his companions clothes. After a few moments of good natured bantering about the mishap Collins said, “you’re all wrong Jack, even if you were right, you would be wrong. Yoy are to big a man to entertain so damned selfish a view of life. You simply must help in this battle for a better world. Remember you donot live for yourself alone. You are only a link in the chain of human evolution. Some day you may have children, and they may live at the death of capitalism, while you lived during its life. I know that you do not want it said that you could have helped to change conditions only you were more interested in rats than you were in the welfare of your class. After all is said, the fact remains, that we are human and we have duties and responsibilities not only to ourselves but to our kind. I know you will take this view of it, ultimately. There are two forces that will drive you to it. The one is the hand of capitalism, and the other is the part of your note book you missed this morning.”

“Yes, what in hell did you cut out the leaves from that note book for?” Jack asked as he heaped another arm of bark on the fire.

“I sent it to the daughter of that real estate man at Anamoose. I have a notion that a little correspondence will awaken a new set of brain cells, that have hitherto laid dormant in your head. That girl had the spirit of the crusader, while you have the mind of a scientist, and damn me if I don’t believe that bringing you together will save you both as fermenting germs in the great leaven of revolutionary thought. I hate the bourgeoisie, and it was a big fight on my part to decide whether to send those notes or not. I remembered all that she said and appreciated more what she did then you perhaps imagine. I know that she is made of good stuff, in a sense of better stuff than you, you are inclined to gravitate towards books, and hills, and valleys, animals and plants, and abstract thought, while she is drawn toward man and justice, and the ideals that directly affect human welfare.

Then there is an other matter I want to talk about, now that we have a few moments time. You can’t speak of such things before Rudy. I had a love affair once; it was during my Scissorbill days. The girl worked in a store and I worked in a mill. I got hurt, and was laid up for six months or more. Couldn’t raise my hand above my head. Couldn’t walk. Had to be wheeled about in a chair. Of course I went broke right down flat. This girl kept me during all the six months. Now mind you she was only getting four and a half a week, and out of it she kept herself and kept me, and in some way managed to give something to the support of her sister. Now take a peek at scissorbill psychology. I never stopped to figure that she couldn’t do what she was doing on her salary, and when I learned the truth after I was back on my feet, I bawled her out and left the country. Rudy would not have done such a thing. Two months later I met a fellow who had known us both, and he told me that she had died three weeks after I left with the con—or something. I was no rebel then. Just a plain boosier but that cut me to the quick. I have tried to atone in some measure ever since, and I’ll keep on attacking the system that made a fool of me, and a corpse of her, in every way that I can as long as there is breath in me. And if consciousness holds out and I can gage my strength the last three words, I will say with my dying breath will be, “God damn capitalism!”

LONDON.—The Triple Alliance of miners, railwaymen and transport workers, have passed a revolution calling upon the parliamentary committee of the Trades Union Congress, the Labor Party and the Cooperative movement to join with the Triple Alliance in making an exhaustive inquiry into the reasons for the high cost of living and to work out a plan for its substantial reduction. This plan, it was proposed should be submitted to the government as soon as possible.

Work that Counts -- Now to do it!

Every class-conscious worker will admit that he is some sort of a socialist. Perhaps he's red, maybe he's only pink. Maybe he's only just plain white, but if he is class-conscious, if he realizes that between the workers and the capitalists there can be no peace until the workers become the dominant ruling class, then we have something to say to him—whatever the particular shade or tinge of crimson that may be his (or her's).

Knowing this to be a fact—realizing that the workers and the capitalists are in a life and death struggle for control of the world—realizing that in this struggle knowledge of the class character of society, of the structure of the capitalist State, of the historic mission of the workingclass—is necessary, then it becomes the duty of every such worker to seek to spreed the knowledge of our Movement among his fellows. Each such individual must become a propagandist and a booster for the Communist press.

For some time The Toiler has carried on a campaign among its readers for funds to purchase a supply of print paper. We are happy to announce that thru the co-operation of its readers we have secured a supply sufficient for several months. We believe that in future we shall be able to meet any situation that will arise and that The Toiler will not again be jeopardised on account of a paper shortage. We thank every contributor to the paper fund for their loyal support.

But far better than donations are subscriptions. A new reader is to be preferred any time to a dollar given outright. We must increase our power for our Movement among the workers by extending our circulation. In this work there is a place for every worker whether on the farm, in the shop, mill or mine. Wherever workers are to be found, there must be a booster for The Toiler. In this way our circulation can be increased and our Movement built up.

We say frankly that the best support which you can possibly give to The Toiler is that of getting subscriptions. Subscriptions support the Toiler, The Toiler in return educates another worker into a communist. Every communist is a brick in the structure of the Revolution which is to bring about the New Society.

Get on the job of subscription getting. Order a bundle of Toilers at 1c each and put them where they will be read. It's easy to interest a worker in The Toiler—after he has read a copy it's equally easy to get his subscription. Try it, get in the job every day with The Toiler and we will not only increase our subscription list but we will BUILD UP OUR COMMUNIST MOVEMENT.

A New Belgian Apeal

Comes to our desk a copy of “De Internationale”, organ of the Communist Party of Belgium published at Antwerp, containing an appeal which was adopted at a public meeting held by the Communist Party at Antwerp. A comrade has also sent us an English translation of this appeal which all radical papers are requested to publish. The appeal follows.

TO THE BRITISH AND AMERICAN PEOPLE.

“As we did not need to make an appeal to your sense of justice and philanthropy in 1914, of which you gave so much proof in supporting, helping and encouraging us when we were attacked by the Prussian invader, so we feel again obliged to make another appeal to your sense and sentiments to help now to deliver us out of the claws of the American and English profiteers, who, after all our privations, misery and sufferings which we endured during the war, have set their claws deep in our economic life.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

“A splendid opportunity arises for your capitalists to show us that all they did in the past was not mere hypocrisy and self-interest.

“Now, more than ever before, as the pretended enemy had to leave the country, you have an exceptional opportunity to expose our common enemy, capitalism, in your country.

“Indeed, wrong done by Prussian, American or an Englishman always remains wrong and consequently the results of it always fall upon the toilers, especially in this case.

“In the name of humanity, we again make an appeal to your brotherly and sisterly feelings, and we hope that you will use all your power and influence to help us to realize this just demand in order to get a more humane existence.”

This is one of the most unique appeals that has come to our notice.

It contains a lesson of the class struggle of the deepest significance. The Prussian invasion which laid Belgium in waste and spread death and desolation broadcast has long since subsided. The invanders whose very name was anathema throut the entire world, has returned to his boundaries. But the miseries of the Belgian masses have not subsided. A new invasion is now in progress, an invasion as cruel, as destructive, as merciless as that of the German hordes.

The American and English capitalist profiteers have their Shylock hands at the throat of Belgian men, women and children.

They are demanding their pound of flesh. The Belgians have discovered that a new enemy has dislaced the old. The Kaiser has gone but the profiteer remains.

It now remains for the workers of Belgium to learn the lesson of their sufferings. As long as Belgium's economic life is under the control of private capital so long will they be subject to the exploitation and misery which private capital sees fit to inflict upon them. Between the Kiser and profiteer, whatever his nationality, there is little choice. Belgian workers, like the workers of all countries must overthrow the capitalist system, they must seize and control the system of production and distribution. Until this is accomplished the Shylocks of capitalism will continue to carve their pound of flesh from the heart of Labor.

“Not Radical.”

When Judge Willis of Los Angeles, released nine members of the I. W. W. on suspended sentences under rigid discipline as to their association with radicals and radical movements, they were allowed membership in the A. F. of L., Judge Willis stating, “that is not a radical organization.”

Certainly the Judge knew what he was talking about. The recent convention at Montreal is ample proof of that long outstanding fact. If the Judge had said, “that is a reactionary organization; I advise all workers who have the best interests of the capitalist class at heart to join it,” he would neither have over stepped the truth nor mistated his wishes.

The Montreal convention refused to endorse the recognition of the Russian Soviet government, the lifting of the blockade and free intercourse with the Russian people. This act places the American Federation of Labor at the bottom of the list of black reactionary labor bodies of the world.

In striking contrast to the labor bodies of Europe, who are creating havoc in the ranks of the reactionaries by their espousal of the cause of the Soviets and their demands for Soviet recognition backed by threats of general strikes, the action of the Montreal convention shows up in its true light the enmity to international solidarity of the workers which rules in the detestable Gompers controlled machine.

The resolution in question reads:

“Resolved, that the American Federation of Labor is not justified in taking any action which can be construed as assistance to or the approval of the soviet government of Russia so long as that government is based upon authority not vested in it by a properly constituted national representative assembly of the people, or so long as that government by constant propaganda endeavors to start revolutions in the civilized nations of the world or so long as it militarizes the workers, opposes trade unions or exercises suppression of freedom of speech and the press.”

What makes Gompers and his following sore is that the workers have made a short cut to freedom by depriving the non-producers and parasites of any power in the government. The A. F. of L. is strong for ‘democracy’—the democracy of the bourgeoisie class. What the A. F. of L. wishes for Russia is a constituant assembly made up of sufficient bourgeois and labor skinners to thwart every effort of labor to sever its chains. Its highest ideal is to keep the workers enslaved to the kings and queens of finance. Its heart is broken at the very thot of labor reaping the full social value of its toil. A “fair” day's wage is all it ever asked for, all it ever demanded—it has always been perfectly satisfied to turn over the bulk of labor's products to the parasitic class while labor took only sufficient to keep itself on the job.

The attempt of the resolution to make a case against the Soviet form of government and the measures it has been forced to adopt during the transition stage thru which it is passing, reveals the stupid bourgeis viewpoint which is characteristic of the A. F. of L. Judge Willis spoke entirely from a knowledge of the facts. No heavy taint of radicalism hangs about the A. F. of L. The one redeeming feature of the act of the convention is that one fourth of the delegates voted against it. Next year, after the whole world has opened trade relations and the soviet government flag flies from its consulates in dozens of American cities—then the A. F. of L. will come along like a cows tail at the end of the procession endorsing trade relations with Russia. This is an example of the ‘leadership’ which functions in this fossilised labor union.

Our National Sport.

Is lynching to become America's national sport? Now that Duluth in the North has forged ahead to a place vieing with most ‘democratic’ southern state of the Black Belt in the lynching of our black citizens, it is only right that we should give to lynching the honors due it, and like true sportsmen call it by what it really is.

Duluth has set the example. When the evenings grow monotonous and lose their tang, there is still much spice to be had in life. Confiscate a truck, parade the streets calling for volunteers.Assemble all the hoodlums in town, make a lot of noise; start something all down the line. Locate some bricks and assault the police station. The officers will probably run. If they turn the sprinkling hose on you, just hump your back and stick. Pretty soon they will get tired and beat it.

Then you have it all your own way. Break down the jail doors. Gather the negroes (or whites if no Negroes are inside) hold a mock trial. You are the judge, jury and prosecution. When you get tired of this rig-ma-role, get some rope from the nearest hardware store. The merchant will probably obligingly and patriotically serve you free. Then the real fun can begin.

Telegraph poles are handy. Just pitch one rope end over a cross-arm and make the other secure to a black victim's neck. All grab hold and swing on hard! Now you are enjoying the delights known only to 100 per cent Americans, law, abiding citizens of a Godfearing nation which blushes with shame at the death of a counter-revolutionary profiteer in Moscow.

Great sport! A whole lot might be said about this, but what's the use? We have a public educated by the profiteer, venile, sensation mongering daily press. Public offices are filled by a crew of hungry, job hunting politicians with neither knowledge, vision or ideals. A combination of this sort is certain to develop by-products such as the Duluth massacre.

SOVIETS APPEAL TO WORLD'S WORKERS

MOSCOW—(via London)—An appeal from the Soviet government to the workers of all countries has been transmitted here by wireless which says:

“On our western frontier war has started again. Once more enormous regions are being devastated by military operations. The working classe of Russia are compelled to take up arms again. The Poles have started war for the purpose of plundering the Ukrainian peasants and securing their lands for Polish landowners. Poland is waging war in order to impose on Soviet Russia, already ruined by the Allied capitalists, a huge indemnity.

“Those who are guilty of this new war are the governments of the allied countries. All of them are supporting the action of Poland to a greater or less degree. It depends upon you workmen of all countries that the war shall end in the shortest possible time with a crushing defeat of the capitalists and the landowners.

“Workers of France, England, Italy and America's transport workers, railwaymen, stevedores and sailors: Do not make a single rifle or a single cartridge; do not send any munitions or provisions to Poland; go out in the streets and arrange demonstrations and strikes with the slogan: ‘No support of the Polish White Guards.’

BERLIN—A demonstration of protest against the Polish attack on Soviet Russia was recently organized by the Communists and Independents of Berlin. Crowds which filled the Lustgarten were addressed by prominent revolufionaries, among them Dauming, Ledebour, and Eichorn. On one procession a man carried a gallows on which was written “ For Mannerheim”.

An advertisement of the Interchurch World Movement made this statement: “All that makes property safe in the world is bound up in the respect for law that religion breeds.” But, may we not ask, whose property? That of the 2 per cent who own 60 per cent of it? Is it the ambition of the church to be the policemen of property rights?

HERE'S HOW MANY EVADED WAR FOR DEMOCRACY

The government shortly will publish a list of 170.000 men alleged to have evaded the Selective Service law.

This will be equivalent to offering a reward of $50 for the arrest and conviction of each, federal authorities said.

COMMUNISM EVENTUALLY IN MEXICO: TWILIGHT STAGE NOW

— By Linn A. E. Gale. —

Communism is Inevitable
in Mexico, Sooner or Later.

These long-enslaved, suffering and exploited masses know in a dim way that they want an end of capitalism. Clear vision is not theirs yet but they are acquiring it rapidly. Many of them have acquired it already. The increasing radicalism of the unions, even those that are affiliated with the Pan-American Federation of Labor, is an unmistakable sign. The cynism with which many of the unions have regarded the promises of both Obregon and Bonillas in the campaign that now, since the revolution, is starting all over again, with Bonnillas eliminated, is evidence of the steady swing of Mexican proletarian sentiment toward direct action.

But it would be a mistake to anticipate another outbreak, a class-conscious revolution, soon. Miss Helen Augur, writing in New York Call, intimates that when the election comes there may be a real effort to elect a labor government. Miss Augur is mistaken altho her articles are rendering a real service in putting squarely on the shoulders of Wall St. the responsibility for the disorder. civil war and crimes that have so long torn Mexico in twain.

Workers with Obregon yet but—

The vast majority of the Mexican workers are with Obregon due to the officient electioneering of L.N. Morones, close friend of Obregon and right-hand man of Samuel Gompers. They will stay with him for a while. They are eminently satisfied with the outcome of the revolution to date and believe that Obregon, on his accession to office, will be a true friend of labor. They also like de la Huerta, newly elected provisional President, and have heard much of what he did for labor in Sonora as its Governor. They will certainly stand by Obregon for a time.

Then, if exploitation and oppression continue, as they must to a greater or lesser degree, and if socialization of industry is not begun in apparent sincerity, they will prepare for another uprising.

Another Revolution Inevitable

When that time comes it will not matter whether there happens to be an ambitious politician at hand who wants to lead them or not. If there happens to be, they may follow him, but he will be forced to do what they want or his days will be numbered. And if there is no such aspirant available, the workers will pick their own leader from their ranks, which will be much better, to be sure.

In any event, Communism is coming in Mexico and nothing can stop it ultimately.

On the other had, it is just as certain that Wall St., having been thoroly exasperated by Carranza's long and persistent resistance, will, to paraphrase what the kaiser is said to have told James W. Gerard, “stand for no nonsense from Obregon.” If he tries to do much for the masses, American capitalism will get rid of him in short order. It is by no means convinced so far that he will obey orders despite the frantic assurances of his press bureau in Washington that he is 100% pro-American.

Miss Augur thinks that Wall St. would like to see Obregon start on a radical policy so it would have an excuse for intervention. Not at all, Wall St. would much prefer to have Obregon play the game with it. It will be far easier to dominate Mexico indirectly and “diplomatically” than to conquer it with guns. When the peon sees a “gringo” soldier coming for him, he gets mad and being able to fight like hell and then some, he will keep that soldier busy for quite a while, despite the disparity in their respective equipment. But pat the peon on the back, tell him you are going to co-operate with him and want to “assist” him in developing his country, and he grins good-naturedly, gets friendly and puffs away at his cigaret. He can be kidded in this way for a while for he is not by nature suspicious. Wall St. would rather use this method, and take its chances on being able to put down a later rebellion by the time that the peon gets his eyes open.

Obregon, tho he may really want to right social wrongs and even lay the bases of a new system in Mexico, will not dare to. Perhaps he will not want to. Perhaps the prospect of American co-operation with plenty of money and plenty of guns will be too alluring for him to retain any working-class sympathies. Whether it will be necessity or choice that will impel him to his probable course of action, is not of serious moment. The big fact is that he will undoubtedly toe the mark indicated by American Big Business and that intervention will, therefore, not come by military methods for the present.

This can have no other effect than to prepare the Mexican toilers for a genuine, full-fledged Social Revolution within a few years.

Carranza Nationalist,

Not Radical

As to Carranza, while we shudder at his murder, let us not be misled into any maze of hero-worship of the slain man. Let us not forget that his policy or opposition to Wall St. was one of Mexican nationalism, rather than Internationalism, and that while he tried to keep the nation's wealth for a local bourgeoisie, he permitted the excellent labor laws of the country to go unenforced against Mexican and Spanish capitalists as well as against American capitalists. Only a few weeks before the revolution broke out, “Resurgimiento”, a brilliant little Spanish weekly published by the Puebla syndicalists, contained an editorial saying that the wretched wages, long hours and entire absence of sanitary restrictions that the Carranza government winked at, were worse even than what existed under Diaz.

Let us not forget, either, that while Carranza was killed as the result of the brutal determination of American finance-capitalism to seize Mexico, many a poor worker with a less provincial and chauvinistic outlook than Carranza, has given his life for the same heartless reason.

And let us above all remember that Carranza “flopped” in the last few months of his administration, and at the moment of the revolutionary uprising, was spending millions of pesos to elect as his successor, Ambassador Ygnacio Bonnillas, the real choice of Yankee capitalism. Carranza had permitted a suspension of the petroleum tax law; had turned his back on the Radicals with whom he formerly flirted but for whom he never had any real sympathy; had agreed to pay the old Huerta debt that he had hitherto steadfastly repudiated; and would probably have been allowed to get the 12,000,000 rounds of ammunition that had been held in New York 6 years because the American government would not allow the shipment of what he had actually bought.

Playing “Both Ends Against Middle”

The only reason why the monied men north of the Rio Grande dropped Carranza so quickly when the revolt came, was that they realized the popularity of Obregon and did not want to waste further time with the losing man! If Carranza had stood a show of winning, they might have staid with him. Nobody knows. Those who pretend to know, don't and are only displaying knowledge that is not knowledge but guesswork. It was an opportunistic game that Wall St. played all the time. Carranza having sold out, would have been “safe” if he had retined power. Obregon, who was also receiving aid from Big Business, would probably be safe, if he won, they figured. If the revolution lasted, the American government could step in and grab the country without further ado and without bothering to deal with either set of politicians. And if one side or the other definitely won and then refused to do as it was told, it would be easy to forment another outbreak and intervene just the same.

The Peon To Be Heard From

No matter which side had triumphed in the revolution, the result would have been much the same. Wall St. played a game of “Heads I win, tails you lose” with the Mexican people, and Carranza, Obregon, Gonzalez and Bonillas all were its pawns, consciously or otherwise.

But the Mexican peon, like the American people, cannot be “fooled all of the time.”

The peon will be heard from again.

WASHINGTON.—A request by former Senator Hardwick of Georgia, counsel for Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, chief of the Russian Soviet Bureau at New York, for the subpeona of Major General Graves, former commander of the American Epeditionary forces in Siberia, and of Raymond Robins was denied recently by Immigration Inspecter Shell on the ground that their testimony would be irrelevant.

The case of Martens before the Commissioner of Immigration was completed last week. A hearing which was scheduled to take place June 17, it is thought, will be taken on the deportation warrant for Martens.

Taft, who may be remembered as a former president, wrote recently in defense of the present system and thinks the relation between the wage-earner and the rich man is a happy one, “because the former is quite as likely to enjoy real happiness in life as the latter.” Aside from the fact that few rich men are willing to try the experiment, we might remark that because Epictetus, the slave, may have been as happy as Marcus Aurelius, the emperor, we are perfectly satisfied that slavery ceased to exist. Besides, Taft, being to fat to work, has to write something to meet the H. C. L. He should be treated with indulgence. Otherwise, we might adequately criticize this recent utterance.

SOME “REDS” WE ARE NOT ASHAMED OF.

In these palmy days of Palmerism and Wilsonian Democracy, when to be a radical is to court a jail sentence and persecution at the hands of our beloved democratic officialdom, it is well to recall to mind the names of a few of those whom the world once derided, persecuted, chained and damned. We name a few of them below.

Socrates,
Jesus Christ,
Galileo,
Christopher Columbus,
Patrick Henry,
Voltaire,
Rousseau,
Thomas Jefferson,
Wendell Phillips,
Abraham Lincoln,
Charles Darwin,
Louis Pasteur.

Who is ashamed of these names today? It is a list that engages the veneration of every sincere and right thinking man and woman. When the name “radical” is bandied about in derision by the capitalist press and other lick spittles of the profiteers, just recall these names to mind and remember that they were equally derided by the profiteers of their days and for the same reasons—they were dangerous to profits. Measured by their service for the Common Good they stand as high above the “respectables,” as Heaven is above Hell.

UNITED COMMUNIST PARTY FORMED BY COMMUNIST GROUPS

COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY AND MAJORITY OF COMMUNIST PARTY UNITE THROUGH SECRET CONVENTION.

From a copy of the "Communist", which declares itself the "official organ of the United Communist Party," we reprint the following story describing the unity convention of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party:

The Convention of the Revolutionists.

During the first week of September, 1919 there were organized in the United States two Communist parties. Within two months both parties together had completed an enrollment of more than 40,000 dues-paying members. The prospects pointed to a quick increase to 60,000, perhaps 70,000;—about three-fourths of the former Socialist Party membership.

Along came the Lusk Committee raids and arrests in New York; also sporadic arrests elsewhere in connection with the November 7th celebration. Organization of Communists was checked. Came an ominous lull then the avalanche of the New Year — the Palmer nation wide raids, arrests, brutalities.

At the end of January Secretary of Labor Wilson held that alien members of the Communist Party were subject to deportation. Communists—members of both parties— were branded as outlaws in the courts of New York and New Jersey. Like results appeared imminent in Massachusetts, Illinois, Michigan, California, Ohio, Indiana, in many other states

No longer were there party headquarters, neither national, state, nor local. The active party officials were in jail or were fugitives. No meetings could be held without inviting arrests. Very little money could be raised even for defense and relief of prisoners.

By February 1920 the two thriving parties of October 1919 had vanished The Luskers and Palmerites had done their work completely, perfectly. This country was immunized from the "red" terror — the terror which haunts the world...

Sometime recently, somewhere between the Atlantic and Pacific, between the Gulf and the Great Lakes two groups of elected delegates assembled as the Unity Conference of the Communist Party and the Communist Labor Party. Of the former, 32; of the latter, 25, and one fraternal delegate; also a representative of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. These 59 delegate came together from all parts of the United States, held sessions for seven days, debated every issue with absolute thoroughness, laid out the plan of work for the United Communist Party;—all under the most perfect circumstances conceivable for such a convention.

One who holds in his hand the scroll upon which is inscribed the record of this mysterious gathering is amazed, for one thing, at the roll of delegates. Communist Party and Communist Labor Party—but all these strange names? Not one of the 1919 Communists present? Search the roll again;—not one familiar name. Remarkable achievement of the Lusk-Palmer Inquisition—not one of the 1919 Communists in the list!

In spite of the fact that these delegates came together on a call for a "Unity Conference," in spite of all realized of the fearful blow it would be to the Communist movement in this country if unity were not at once achieved, it was not until noon of the seventh day that this issue was decided conclusively.

Neither side was fully conscious of the undercurrent of sentiment on the other side. Factional controversies of nearly a year's standing surcharged the atmosphere with suspicion—suspicion not only across the lines but within each camp. None of the delegates were willing to surrender their reservations until after a long series of debates, some of little intrinsic importance, many on basic questions of Communist understanding and practice—questions which had never before been really faced in United States.

One delegate hit upon the most salient truth about this convention in the remark that, in contrast to any other convention in which he had taken part either in Europe or America, this convention had met squarely every essential issue and debated it fully to its ultimate solution.

There were three separate advance sessions of the two parties. To each of these conventions was presented the tentative draft of a Program and Constitution previously prepared by a Joint Committee: Damon, Caxton and Fisher, C. P., and Brown, Klein and Dubner, C. LP.

During the second of these sessions, a message came to the C. P. convention that the C.L.P. convention had accepted the agreements of the Joint Committee as a bisis for unity, reserving all amendments for joint discussion.

At this moment the C. P. convention had under consideration a substitute Manifesto, Program and Constitution presented by Ford for the New York District delegation. The debate quickly centered on the declaration as to "mass action", it being conceded that the Joint Committee Program was more acceptable as an entirety. The main contention was that the Joint Committee had not used direct and unequivocal language as to force. It was answered that the criticism was only of words; that there could not possibly be any doubt but that the Program pointed clearly to armed revolt as the ultimate and inevitable form of "mass action."

Personal suspicion stimulated this argument. The outside group of the C. P.—the majority members of the Central Executive Committee—had manufactured the issue of force as a dominant item in the C. P. split. There had never been such a factional issue. But the Eastern delegates particularly were determined to make certain that there would be nothing about the handling of this subject which might leave a loophole for the C. P. opposition.

Agreement was reached for the revision of the Program in a number of particulars, the C. P. delegates to support these amendments as a unit. The C. P. convention further bound its members on the issue of federations; also, to retain the C. P. name and emblem.

The first joint session opened with a spirited dispute as to election of committees. Some of the C. P. delegates insisted upon discussion of the Program as the first order of business. They said that they were not ready to commit themselves as to joint proceedings until the Program was disposed of. This brought forth angry protest: it served as a challenge to the group unity of the C. L. P. It was urged that unity had been achieved by coming together on the basis of the Joint Committee Program and Constitution; that every provision was open to amendment by the convention; that there might be a new division on the issues to come up, but the old party division was gone.

A bolt of nine or ten of the C. P. delegates was started. Klein (C.L.P.) re-introduced the motion to proceed with the discussion of the Program and Peace was restored.

The opening debates were sparring matches, with a strong undercurrent of nervousness. Threescore persons, engaged in a criminal conspiracy, spent two hours to decide whether capitalism breaks down in that it fails to "produce" the needs of life, or whether the collapse is due to the failure to "provide". After considerable uncertainty the argument prevailed that capitalism, in spite of all its equipment, stultifies production; the wheels of industry turn only at the call of profit, regardless of all capabilities for production; crisis or no crisis, capitalism has never functioned to "provide" the needs of the masses...

In the playfulness of this debate was expressed relaxation and the forestalling of another premature clash. This was the safe way of "getting acquainted"—the suppressed form of the struggle for unity.

Restrained resentment and suspicion broke loose into a furious storm during the next session. At the first statement in the Program concerning the overthrow of the capitalist system it was insisted that the word "forcible" be added. Likewise, at the first mention of "conquest of political power" it was demanded that there be added "by the use of armed force." One amendment was piled upon another—a veritable "force" panic.

In vain was it argued that this part of the Program contained only preliminary definitions, statements of the goal to be achieved; that the Program, under appropriate subdivisions, gave full attention to the methods of action; stand by itself, but is the inevitable that the item of armed force does not culminating aspect of "mass action"; that this tactic must be presented in its developmental, character—armed uprising as the unavoidable sequence of the advancing class conflict.

The C. L. P. delegates, for the most part, were ready for a test of strength against the C. P. "irreconcilables." They were conscious that this minority would have to accept defeat, since the point to be voted was only on what page something should be stated in the Program. Others sensed too much danger of misunderstanding behind such a vote, too much anger where agreement could easily be reached. Caxton moved to recommit this part of the Program, then to adjourn. There were some protests, but the motion prevailed. Meanwhile the tension was relaxed by the brilliant satirical speech of Sherwood, whose Yankee wit was the perfect antidote for passionate argument on an artificially stimulated issue.

The C. P. night caucus which followed, the amendments proposed by the Joint Committee, and a decision to dispose first of the section on "Mass Action," gave the convention smooth sailing the next morning.

A spirited debate ensued on the proposition to limit nominations to legis lative officers, according to the clause of the C. P. program. The issue was not clear-cut, since the anti-parliamentarians took the side of limiting nominations as one way of expressing opposition to all nominations. Brown (C. L. P.) and some of the C. P. speakers argued directly against nominations of any kind. Damon (C. P.) contended that this clause was needed to discourage party nominations by [illegible] of the party. Raphailoff (C. L. P.) Caxton (C. P.) Malcolm (C. L. P.) and others pointed out that the general proposition of parliamentary action was not involved in this debate; that to the extent we were to have any nominations at all it was indispensable, under the American system, to name the "head of the ticket", the president, governor or mayor; that this clause had been written into the C. P. program under the misconception that this was the proper method of meeting the "ministerial question," the fact being that the Socialist ministers in Europe had all been elected as legislative candidates; that in this country the Socialists whether elected to legislative or executive offices had all behaved equally badly; that, finally, it was no occasion to worry about the actions of a Communist president, because the revolution would forestall this contingency, and that minor executive officers could serve just as well to be thrown out of office as the Communists elected to the legislatures.

By a close vote the paragraph was retained, but the limitation is of no immediate practical moment since the convention further went on record against all nominations during the 1920 campaigns.

On the third day occured the longest and most stubborn debate of the convention, that on industrial unionism. This was another three cornered affair. The C. P. convention had passed up the question of the I. W. W. because it was apparent that this question could not be settled by agreement. Perhaps two-thirds of the C. P. delegates favored a direct endorsement of the I. W. W. and a program of cooperation, reserving criticism of the I. W. W. theorizing. The other C. P. delegates considered the I. W. W. as essentially no better than the A. F. of L., citing the reactionary character of the I. W. W. in some of the Eastern cities. All of the C. P. delegates were agreed upon an absolute stand against the A. F. of L. as an inherently anti-revolutionary organization which must be destroyed.

On the other hand, there was a strong current in the C. L. P. ranks for a treatment of the subject of industrial unionism from a general view point which would neither include direct endorsement of the I. W. W. nor absolute condemation of the A. F. of L. The lead in this debate was taken by Dawson who argued that the A. F. of L. must be considered from the angle of the local unions, not from the side of the Gompers officialdom; that industrial unionism was having a development in many fields aside from the I. W. W.; that the need was for a call to a new general the central theme of the contrary industrial union, a new One Big Union.

On both sides there was not only a close analysis of the proper function of a Communist party in connection with the unions, but also a wealth of illustrative material out of actual shop and union experience. Machinists, miners and ship-builders fused their practical understanding with the more abstract conceptions of those whose vision was focused on the ultimate revolutionary clash. The cleavage was not between "intellectuals" and "rank and file," but between workers in the industries who had undergone contrasting forms of experience.

The original Joint Committee proposal on this subject had been taken over from a draft by the Chicago District Committee. Dozens of amendments and substitutes were brought before the convention, but finally the section as adopted as originally presented. As a result of the debate, however, the Committtee opened the subject for reconsideration the next day, presenting two amendments which were accepted. In the sentence, "A Communist who belongs to the A. F. of L. on account of absolute job necessity should use every opportunity to voice his hostility to this organization, not to reform it but to destroy it," there was eliminated the phrase "on account of absolute job necessity." The sentence, "A stronger I. W. W. must be built," was stricken out.

The unity issued flared up again on the question of party name. On the first vote there were 22 counted for "Communist Party," 24 against. A roll call was demanded; The C. P. names were read first; 30 votes were recorded for "Communist Party."

The C. L. P. delegates resented what they considered a coercive vote without any chance for discussion. An indignation speech was made by Flynn which proved the moral power of effective minority criticism;—with the opening of the next session came a ballot vote on "United Communist Party" or "Communist Party" with "united" written underneath. The vote was 33 to 22 for "United Communist Party."

This appeared to the real achievement of unity, the breakdown of the old party lines... But there were still the elections.

Two important debates came under the consideration of the Constitution, one on party centralization, the other on federations.

In the first instance the issue of centralization came up on the amendment making the C. E. C. appointment and removal of organizers subject to the approval of the district executive committees. On the one side it was argued that this meant the substitution of autonomous districts for autonomous federations, a central executive shorn of real authority and real capability of action; that democracy was not to be obtaned by decentralization but only by some effective means for control of the central authority; that district committees would lend themselves more easily to factional manipulation than the central committee elected in a national convention by delegates well known to the members. It was urged that an underground party must have the possibility of instant decision and action by a small committee; it must act as a single machine, else it can never strike a decisive blow.

Lack of confidence in officials was argument. The party affairs, it was urged, must be brought nearer to the control of the rank and file. The central committees had been the breeding place of factional controversies. It was not asking much to give the district committees a veto in the choice of the organizers upon whom their work depended.

Upon the first vote the amendment was declared adopted. It then appeared that some of the delegates had misconceived the proposition to be one of appointing all organizers "from the top downward," that is, sub-district section, branch and group organizers as well as the district organizers. A motion to reconsider was made and declared lost. Then followed a keen parliamentary battle, led by Damon, which finally resulted—after three roll calls—in a reversal of the original vote, 34 to 20.

On the federation question the Joint Committee had come to no agreement. In curious contrast to the history of last Summer, it was the C.L.P committee members who were loath to take a rigorous stand against federations. At the convention the C. L. P. delegates took no group stand on this question. Two plans were presented, one for the C. P. delegates by Damon, the other by Dubner and Raphailoff for the federation members of the C. L. P. The debate was largely between the federation delegates on both sides. The principal controversy was as to the existence of national executive committees for the language groups, this proposal being decisively voted down.

Late in the afternoon of the fourth day of the joint session it was decided to proceed with elections of party officials. There had been many hours of caucusing on each side as to elections. Regardless of the sentiment of the conventio expressed by a majority vote against further caucuses, neither side was willing to risk a surrender of its group strength.

A motion was made by Spark (C. P.) that the C. E. C. be composed of the five C. P. delegates and four C. L. P. delegates receiving the highest votes, without contest as between the C. P. and C. L. P. candidates. The motion was not supported.

Brown and Caxton were the nominees for International Secretary. Brown, 30, Caxton 23.

With two to elect, there were four nominees for International Delegate. The vote stood Damon 30, Meyer (C. L. P.) 28, Caxton 26, Barry (C. L. P.) 26... The lines were not holding; four C. P. votes had been divided between Meyer and Barry.

Then came ten nominations for the nine places on the C. E. C. Damon, Scott, Reinhardt, Delion, Zemlin, (C. P.); Meyer, Klein, Flynn, Brown, Dawson, (C.L.P.). These were the caucus nominations. Obviously the C. L. P. caucus had determined to avail itself of the dissensions in the C.P. ranks and to attempt to elect a majority of the committee.

At the night session was announced the result of the balloting; Damon, Scott, Klein, Flynn, 29; Brown 33, Dawson, 32, Meyer, 30; Reinhart, 26; Delion, Zemlin, tied at 24.

Damon, Scott and Reinhart quickly offered their resignations. A bitter discussion was precipitated. Both sides had played for "control" and the result had been a boomerang; for how, it was urged, could the C. P. delegates report back to their members that they had been outwitted in strategy in a way to give the minority control of the united party? Even though the fault was that of the C. P. delegates themselves, how could that remedy the outside situation?

The C.L.P speakers vehemently answered that what was done was the result of the will of the convention; that it was outrageous for members to resign from the C. E. C. simply because they felt they could not boss the committee and the party; that, after all, this outcome of the elections would be the best proof to the members that the old party lines had been forgotten.

A motion for a recess of half an hour was adopted. Then began the tug of war which went into the middle of the night, only to be resumed the next morning—the two groups, apparently completely welded, now standing sharply apart as C.P. and C.L.P. The convention vanished; in its place were two caucuses, with committees for interchange of offers and counter-proposals.

The strained item in the C. P. camp had been an attack upon Caxton, based on the "majority" C. P. criticisms. In the C. P. caucus, after long discussion, he had been nominated for the C. E. C., 18 to 9. Later Caxton withdrew his name. Now it was insisted his name reintroduced, making Zemlin first substitute. The C.L.P. offered to substitute Caxton for Brown as International Secretary.

The last morning found the situation deadlocked. To open the convention again meant to give the C.P. the advantage of the renewed caucus pressure in favor of solidarity for C.P. control, all questions of personality aside. The issue of control having been precipitated by the turn of the elections, the C.P. delegates were in no mood to give up their demand for a majority of the C.E.C.

The C.P. delegates made only one demand, to reopen the convention. It was for the other side to make the next move...

There is nothing in the official record which suggests under what sort of surroundings all these things happened. As a matter of fact the physical surrounding had a very important part in the struggle for unity;—which is not at all illuminating to the reader who is asked to wait a few years for a description of these surroundings.

Besides, how is one to visualize one group of delegates in heated argument, while the other group is engaged in the singing of revolutionary songs, mostly Russian,—how is one to imigne all this without something in the way of special dimensions? The singing group marches halfway toward the arguing group—a challenge to unity, the song of the Internationale—and reluctantly marches back to its own meeting place.

There is a committee conference. Before the report comes back the lines are formed for a new march, this time to go all the way. Agreement is reported: a C. E. C. of ten members, the five C.L.P. candidates to stand elected, five C.P. members now to be chosen. The march proceeds; it is the only report to the anxious C.L.P. delegates;—the two groups merge into one another, all singing the Internationale. There is the grasping of hands, the embrace of comradeship; nothing is said—there is too much feeling for speech... Unity is achieved...

For International Secretary, Caxton replaces Brown; Damon and Meyer stand as International Delegates; Scott, alternate for Damon, Barry, alternate for Meyer.

An American convention of Communists. Yet there was, more likely than not, a majority of "foreigners", though the division was fairly even. But these were Communists who were vitally concerned about the class struggle in America, men and women who really expected to take part in this struggle, not those who toyed with the Communist movement here as a method of ingratiating themselves in Moscow.

It was one of the most inspiring things about this convention to hear delegates painfully struggling with the English language, no longer depending for expression on the artificial foreign-language caucuses of prior conventions, but making themselves one with all the other delegates in defiance of barriers of language or nationality.

Perhaps this was the greater "unity" achievement of this convention....

Again and again the sentence was heard: "We have crossed the Rubicon." Every delegate was in the hands of his fellows; all subject to imprisonment, deportation, social and economic displacement. Yet most of the time,—not without thanks to the irrepressible wit of the convention secretary, Smyth,—the whole affair seemed like a jollification. Or perhaps it was the grim seriousness of it all that challanged relief in playfulness?...

A revolutionary movement driven "underground" is apt to be driven away at the same time from its own petty animosities and quibbles. Forced to face the life and death character of the combat, it is likely to discard pretenses, evasions, purposeless quarrels about persons. Confusion gives way to clarity; hesitation yields to stern determination.

A convention of revolutionists—a convention which relentlessly searched the truth of its every word and the heart of its every delegate....

The Development of Production Under the Soviets

NEW YORK— A minute and frank description of internal conditions in Russia is contained in the report of the All-Russian Central Executive Committee, held in Moscow February 2, the full text of which has just been obtained by the Soviet Russia bureau here. In the reports of Nicolai Lenin, Leon Trotsky, of Rykov, president of the Supreme Council of National Economy, and of other peoples' commisars. there are reflected the actual exigencies against which the government is struggling and the methods by which it proposes to solve them.

Lenin's report dealt primarily with Russia's foreign relations. The premier declared that the victorious peace with Esthonia was concluded in spite of the powerful efforts of the White Guards, and that there was hope that the laboring masses of Poland, Georgia and Azerbaijan would force the same action.

"In the east the prestige of soviet Russia is very high," Lenin asserted. "The colonies, who have themselves experienced the oppression of greedy imperialism, are more and more inclined to ally themselves with us. Our task is a compact union of small nations against imperialism."

Lenin announced as the chief points of internal policy the abolition of capital punishment, the institution of labor inspection, the development and unification of all cooperatives under the soviet state, the organization of the labor armies, and the electrification of the country's industrial centers.

Rykov's report pointed out that the disintegration of the country's industrial life was reflected in every European country as the result of the world war, and a prime need of all was the resumption of full commercial relations.

"Although available stores of raw materials have been greatly depleted, we are still able to exchange a certain amount of such materials for goods needed by us," he stated. "We are able immediately to export not less than two million poods of flax (72,000,000 lbs.) several million pieces of all kinds of furs, a great quantity of platinum, about 100,000 poods (3,600,000 lbs) of bristles. and great amounts of lumber. In exchange for this, we will accept only such goods as are indispensable for the rehabilitation of the basic productive enterprises of the country

"The nationalization of the means of production has developed rapidly in all fields of industrial production. At the present time we have in our hands about 4,000 nationalized factories, in other words, we have been able to nationalize not only the big industries, but also a considerable number of smaller enterprises.

"During the past two years we have endeavored to concentrate available supplies of raw material, fuel, and labor in such factories as are best organized and most up to date. This process of concentration has progressed very rapidly; 30 percent of all the enterprises have been unfied into a socialistic 'trust'. The number of workingmen in these factories is 74 per cent. We find that by concentrating 74 per cent of the indnstrial labor in 30 per cent of our factories we have been able to economize on overhead expenses to a great extent.

"Our most important problem at this time is the reconstruction of the means of transportation, and thereafter to create large reserve funds of food supplies, fuel and raw materials, which will form a basis for a rational organization of the economic life of the country."

Rykov discussed at great length the problems connected with the exploitation of the immense national wealth of the country. Immense stores of slate peat, coal and oil are now available. Especially, there are great supplies of slate and peat in the Volga valley, he said.

"The utilization of slate is a new field, which received no attetntion in Russia during the former regimes, but which has been fully studied and worked up by the Soviet Government," Rykov declared. "The preliminary experiments in this field have been completed, and two big government plants are now exclusively exploiting the slate deposits. Deposits of slate and peat are immense. They exist in northern Russia as well as in the Volga valley. This kind of fuel is very bulky and cannot be transported. Peat and slate must be utilized on the spot, and electrikal energy derived therefrom made to supply the needs of the surrounding territory. This condition led the Supreme Council of National Economy eighteen months ago to undertake the building of gigantic power stations which would use on the spot the available peat and slate supplies. Provincial cities and rural organizations have also taken steps for the electrification of their territory. It is necessary to consolidate these efforts and to create a unified, centralized system of supplying electric power, wereby the utmost attention must be given to supplying electricity to the rural communities. The realization of these plans would greatly accelebrate the development of relations between the cities and rural communities."

After outlining the success of the soviet army on the various fronts, Trotsky emphasized the necessity for the establishment of universal labor service, which under a Socialist state, he stated, was a very different matter from compulsory labor under conditions of private ownership. He declared that the enthusiasm of the Red Army must be borrowed by the workers, and that the peasants particularly must be educated in the role which they must play for their own salvation.

"Our most dangerous front at this time is the economic front," he said. "Our greatest problem at the present moment is the organization of a large reserve of supplies. There is no doubt that we shall solve this problem as we have solved all our problems, thanks to the heroism of the working class."

The inspiring of the railroad workers with a full sense of the necessity for rebuilding Russia's transportation was emphasized also by Krassin, peoples' commissar of Ways and Communications, who declared that a transportation crisis now prevails not only in Russia, but in every other European country. Krassin stated that the efforts of sections of the Red Army diverted to railroad service had within one month increased the number of suply trains to Moscow by 20 per cent, and the services of many thousands of the labor army would soon rebuild the country's rail system.

The Commissar of Supplies, Zurupa, reported the existence of supplies of grain 50 per cent greater than at the corresponding period in 1919, but declared that it had at its disposal 1,224,000,000 pounds of grain, 234,000,000 of meat, 328,000,000 of potatoes, and 3,000,000 of dried vegetables. Zurupa stated that the willingness of the peasant population regularly to supply foodstuffs was rapidly increasing, and that the commissariat was developing means of distributing game and dairy products from the agricultural districts to the cities.

Because of the criticism encountered by this department, the Executive Committee appointed a committee of three to reorganize its activities. The committee consisted of one member each from the Executive committee, the Commissariat and the All-Russian Council of Trade Unions.

held in Atlantic city,—as mentioned. They knocked the soldiers bonus with a sledge hammer, and every one knows why. They hissed Matt Woll, Gompers right hand man off the stage when he attempted to say something against Allen's Kansas Slavery law. And why? Of course this is another law of Moses to them,—and bless you there was Hennery Jay Allen—fat joweled, hook nosed, shining like a morning sun flower, one of the honored guests of the occasion. He had his Industrial Bull there, of course. Hnenery's Bull must have been of good service there —for right now the U. S. C. of C. is taking a vote of its club and little "me too" organizations throughout the country making the strike of employees of public service corporations a crime,—somewhat as follows:—

"The recommendations drafted by the chamber's public utilities committee were that strikes by employes of all public service corporations should be explicitly prohibited and that suitable tribunals should be created to adjudicate differences between such employes and their employers, decisions to be final and binding on both parties."

You know how the vote will be of course,—so do we. I'll bet that when Hennery Jay notes how his good work is spreading that he will feel prouder than Pontius Pilate did when he sent Christ to the cross. Remember what Pontius did? He jumped into a lake and drowned himself. Wonder if there are any lakes in Kansas. There is a far better man in Kansas than Hennery Allen,—I strained my eyes to see him but he was not there,—the courageous Alexander Howatt.

But boys if you want to see fire works, just say "Labor," in a lily fingered, paunchy bunch like this. You should have heard George Post, pres. of the New York Standard Coupler Co. explode! And all about these damned working people thinking of trying to elect persons favorable to their interests,—a horrible crime! Remember the "purposes" of this stall fed bunch quoted from their own papers. He reminded one of a nickle bunch of fire crackers going off. He urged the nation's capitalists to plunge into the campaign in defense of any and all candidates that labor opposes etc.

Do you see what you are up against? The corrupting millions of the Steel trust and this present and most sinister of all organizations that seek the destrution of American labor! There is but one way to conquer, and that is in perfect and unbroken solidarity in the ranks of labor. To attempt to oppose these colossal and corrupt combination's in little segregated groups,—on the Gompers plan,—is piffle. When the great army of Labor combines as a unit, with a revolutionary purpose and "All Power to the Workers", as its slogan, then will we emerge into the sunlight of freedom.

ABO, Finland— The White Terror continues. Early in May the supreme court of Abo sentenced five workers to the penitentiary for a total of fourteen years Besides they lost their citizenship rights. Their "crime" was "preparations for treason."

Rumanian children carry their own seats to school because of the general lack of chairs, Miss Alida C. Bowler, just back from Rumania after seven months service in social work, told a Seattle audience.

Miss Bowler declared that tons of socks knitted in this country had to be unraveled when they reached Europe and remade into clothing. Socks were used in place of paper bags in the distribution of sugar, she said. Tons of pajamas intended for relief were cut up and made into suits for children.

Miss Grace Harrington, back from Siberia where she was acting chief nurse of the American Red Cross, told the audience that the Russians were a kindly generous people rather than the half mad destroyers the American plute press would have them appear.

MOSCOW.—At the conference of the third international held in Moscow on May 2, Bukharin, Radek and Zinovieff were named as the committee to decide the question of admittance to the Communist International. The conference also decided in favor of Parliamentary action in so far as it serves the propagation of the revolutionary spirit.

MOSCOW.—The Soviet election in Omsk resulted in a communist victory. All elected delegates, 465, are members of the Communist party, 64 per cent of the qualified voters participated in elections.

At the last Congress of Soviets in Moscow, at which Kamenev presided, the People's Commissar of Education, Lunacharsky, delivered a report stating that in Soviet Russia 1,650 schools were opened in 1919. Altogether there are now in Soviet Russia 50,000 schools of the first grade and 21,000 schools of the second grade, he stated.

In 1919, 150,000 pairs of boots were distributed to the needy school children.

To stimulate higher education, the Commissariat for Popular Instruction appropriated a sum of 140,000,000 rubles in its budget. The number of university students in Soviet Russia is now 158,000 including auditors at people's and peasants' universities, as well as the participants in a number of other courses. The number of professors is 5,500. In addition there are in Petrograd, Moscow, Voronezh, [illegible] and Saratov various schools for the training of artists, attended by more than 4,000 students

DEBS AND THE SOCIALIST PARTY

At the beginning of the year 1919 the Socialist Party was an organization of nearly 100,000 members. It had as part of its membership the most advanced revolutionary elements in this country. It was an organization of powerful potentialities in the class struggle.

In the early months of that year the struggle between the Left Wing revolutionists and the Right Wing reformists come to a head. The Left Wing won the party elections by overwhelming majorities. If the Left Wing representative were permitted to take office it meant the reorganization of the party and the ousting of all non-revolutionary elements.

In this crisis the Right Wing leaders of the party in control of the party machinery overrode all the constitutional provisions and rules of the party and expelled the Left Wing. The issue between the two groups was a fundamental issue of principle which could not be compromised. Either one group or the other had to leave the party. The Right Wing held the party machinedy and used its power to hold the party.

But in expelling the Left Wing the party officialdom sapped the very life of the party. It was the Left Wing elements within the party that had been its strength. The party finances came largely from this element. When the situation clarified, after the September conventions, the Right Wing officialdom of the party found that it controlled the party, but that the membership had disappeared. By the Fall of 1919 the party membership of 100,000 of the previous spring had been reduced to a bare 15,000. It was an empty victory.

Not all of the 75,000 to 85,000 members who left the party, affiliated with the Communist parties. A large element, disgusted by the reactionary trend of the Socialist Party and the split in the Communist movement, remained outside of any organization.

In January came the raids directed against the Communist parties and the reorganization of these parties as underground organizations. Here again members of both parties, the weak-kneed and hesitating, dropped out, adding to the former membership of the Socialist Party which was not affiliated with any organization.

The situation in the early spring of this year was that there were from fifteen to twenty thousand Right Wing members in the Socialist Party and an equal number of Communists, willing to risk anything for their principles, in the underground organizations of the two Communist parties. There was the difference, however, that while the Socialist Party was drifting toward complete disintegration, the Communists were solid, militant organizations.

By their attitude toward the Left Wing the Socialist party leaders had lost the confidence of a large block of membership, which, while not yet Communist, resented the reactionary trend of the party. Up to the time of the Albany trial the St. Louis war program and the war record of the party had been the means of holding some of its membership—although the membership which forced the unwilling leaders to adopt this program had long ago left the party. But with the complete repudiation at Albany this asset was gone. A new block of members within the party threatened to revolt. The future looked black.

It was to meet this situation that the reactionary Right Wing leaders appealed to the magic name of Debs.

The Hillquits, Stedmans and Bergers of the Socialist Party have never liked Debs. In the controversies within the party prior to the split, dating back for ten years, whenever Debs had spoken he had aligned himself against these leaders. In the 1912 convention of the party, in which the last previous nomination of Debs was made, they had fought against his nomination and had tried to foist upon the party Seidel and a Socialism that talked about sewer building as its great achievement. Debs was nominated only after it became apparent that the militant rank and file of the convention could not be forced to swallow Seidel and Sewers.

The 1920 nomination of Debs through the influence of these leaders is merely a political trick. Through this nomination they hope to rehabilitate the Socialist Party. They do not like Debs. They do not want Debs. But they are ready to swallow Debs in order to have a party and they expect that the magic name of Debs will again rally to the support of the party all those elements which have been unaffiliated with any organization since the split in the party took place, and even to break into the Communist ranks.

Does Debs willingly lend himself to this political game? That is a question which is in the mind of many revolutionary workers.

The Right Wing Socialist leaders have tried to create the impression that Debs is fully informed in regard to the developments in the party since his imprisonment and that he accepted the nomination of the Right Wing with a complete realisation of its meaning. This is part of the game to use his prestige for the rebuilding of the party. Debs knows all the facts and Debs is with the Socialist Party, therefore the Communist attack upon the party is made up of lies and calumnies, is their argument.

THE FACT IS DEBS DOES NOT KNOW. He does not understand the depth to which the Socialist Party has sunk in its repudiation of Revolutionary Socialism. He does not know all the facts about the Albany defense and its abject apology to the peanut politicians of the New York legislature for being even suspected of standing for those things which Debs upholds, particularly the St. Louis war program. What little information Debs has secured about the recent acts of the Socialist Party convention made him hesitate and in accepting the nomination of the party he made the qualification that in doing so he did not intend to accept anything that would be a compromise of his previous utterance on the matter of Socialist principles.

This statement as to Debs' attitude is not based on hearsay. It is made after more than an hour's talk with Debs, which took place since he accepted the Socialist nomination.

Debs permitted his name to go before the Socialist convention, hoping that his candidacy would serve as the means of reuniting the former factions of the Socialist Party. The belief that his candidacy could reunite these factions is in itself evidence that Debs does not understand the great difference in principles that divide them. He has not been in touch with the drift to the Right by the Socialist Party leaders and the drift to the Left by the Communists.

It might as well be said frankly, that while Debs would quickly repudiate the present position of the Socialist Party and its leadership were he outside of prison and fully informed, at the same time he is not a Communist in fundamental understanding. Emotionally and through his revolutionary spirit he is with the Left, but not through understanding and acceptance of Communist principles.

What then shall be the attitude of the revolutionary workers toward the candidacy of Eugene V. Debs.

There is but one answer.

Debs may be ever so dear to us because of this past services to the movement. We may still admire him for his unwavering stand in his Canton speech and during his trial. We may respect him for his unshakable devotion to the cause of the workers, which has characterized his utterances since he has been in prison. In the past he has been the spiritual leader of the revolution and as such we may still give him our love and admiration.

While our attitude toward him personally can well remain unchanged if we understand that he acted without full knowledge or a full realization of the meaning of his acceptance of the Socialist Party nomination, as the candidate of the Socialist Party Debs has no claim upon us. It is the social revolution that we are working for and principles determine our course of action. When loyalty to our principles and loyalty to an individual clash the individual must be sacrificed.

No revolutionary Socialist will support the Socialist Party because Debs is its candidate. Has not every revolutionary Socialist often declared that he fights for principles and not for individuals? The principles of the Socialist Party are potentially those of the Ebert—Scheideman—Noske counter-revolution in Germany. At Albany the Socialist defense came pretty near to declaring it so.

Debs' name cannot cover the reactinary character of the Socialist Party. Rather will the fact that the party has tried to camouflage its reactionary character by trying to pull Debs down to its level excite the complete disgust of every revolutionary worker. The Socialist Party has betrayed the class struggle. It cannot disguise that betrayal with the name of Debs.

MESSAGE TO DEBS

Editor of "The Toiler":—

It has come to my notice that there is some curiosity about the contents and "official character" of the message sent by Comrade Ruthenberg and myself to Comrade Debs.

This message had no official character at all. It was a personal message, without mandate from any orgnization or committee. No doubt the fact that Cmrade Ruthenberg and I had been active members of the Communist Party and of its Central Executive Committee might have indicated to Comrade Debs that we expressed a viewpoint which was shared by many other Communists.

The telegram was as follows:

May 13, 1920.

"Eugene V. Debs,
Federal Penitentiary,
Atlanta, Georgia.

Earnestly urge you not to accept Socialist nomination until you acquaint yourself with entire work of convention.

C. E. RUTHENBERG
I. E. FERGUSON.

"In explanation of the motive of this communication, I need only state that some of us have felt that the least we could do under the unfortunate set of circumstances which threw us into opposition to Commrade Debs was to inform him as directly as possible of the fact of that opposition and the reasons compelling it; preferably, before the action which divided us was beyond recall

HUNGER STRIKE FORCES FINNS TO RELEASE REED

SUPERIOR, WIS.—Threatening to go on hunger strike if he is not released from the police prison in Abo, Finland, where he has been confined for a month, John Reed, American journalist, has frightened the Finnish secret service into revoking a trumped-up "treason" charge accusing him of being a Bolshevist courier in order to avoid an international scandal. These facts have come to light through Finnish newspapers just received here.

It will be recalled that Reed was arrested March 13, in the coal bunker of the Finnish steamer, Oihenna, on the charge of smuggling. On April 26 the city court of Abo decided that John Reed "had tried to smuggle out of the country 102 diamonds and money." The court imposed a fine of 5,000 marks and the diamonds were confiscated in the interests of the government.

Reed appealed the case. While the state authorities were planning their treason coup Reed waited in prison. In order to hasten action he retaliated with a threat of refusing to eat. The affair was forcibly brought to the attention of the American authorities in Helsingfors who have requested the Finnish authorities to surrender Reed to them.

According to the Finnish authorities Reed is to be deported because he did not have any passport. If he does not leave the country he will be interned in the Hannala prison camp until a further decision is made.

CHICAGO.—Despite the banishing of the Nearings, Danas, Levines and Balches from our collegiate institutions so that the minds of American students may not be "polluted" with radical teachings, the colleges are still turning out 400,000 "reds" a year, according to George Wheeler Hinman of Winnetka, Ill., former publisher of the Inter-Ocean and still more recently president of Marietta college in Ohio.

EIGHT WEEKS TO SECURE JURY IN TRIAL OF FORMER C.L.P. MEMBERS

Prosecution Challenges all Talesmen with Liberal Ideas. Case is speeded

CHICAGO, June 20.—Around New Year's, when the inimitable Attorney-General of the United States had decided to Palmerize the revolutionary workers' movement in this country, he asked the co-operation of the district attorneys of the big centers in accomplishing this. That put another equally inimitable gentleman, Mr. Maclay Hoyne, state attorney of Cook County, Ill., wise to a scheme to sneak up on Mr. Palmer and to deprime him of his laurels. He broke faith with Mr. Palmer, (tho we really suspect that the two gents know each other to well to have ever had much faith in each other,) and pulled off his private raid against the reds one day in advance of Palmers schedule. Members of the Communist Labor Party, the Communist Party, the I. W. W., the Union of Russian Workers and kindred organizations were rounded up as the victims. Police Chief Garrity's men, who last year so ably assisted the Socialist Party in purging itself of every suspicion of revolutionary blood, were the fit actors in this patriotic tragic-comedy.

To justify this wholesale arrest, and to retain the good will of the Chicago Chamber of Commerce he had tried so hard to earn during his long, so-called public service, Mr. Hoyne had a special grand jury assembled for the purpose to return indictments against the "reds." How much the $40,000 slush fund, created by the Chicago Chamber of Commerce, assisted Mr. Hoyne in this we do not know, nor do we care to know as we are perfectly sure that Mr. Hoyne would have done his duty to his capitalist masters even without such a little inducement as $40,000 slush fund. Well, the indictments were duly returned against 41 members of the Communist Labor Party, 35 members of the I. W. W. and against 85 members of the Communist Party.

The first to go on trial were the 41 members of the former Communist Labor Party. If we say "former" we mean it. Let us pause here to shed a few tears for the departed body of that party. Mr. Palmer and Mr. Hoyne seem to have succeded. The C. L. P. is no more. Its body disappeared. But for all those interested, including the undertakers Mess. Palmer, Hoyne et al, it may be said here that its spirit seems to have survived and is re-incarnated in the United Communist Party.

On May 10. before Judge Oscar Hebel the case was called: the people of the Superior Court of Cook County, Ill., the case wa called: the people of the state of Illinois vs. Wm. Bross Lloyd et al. If the capitalist state had enough decency to throw aside its hypocricy and cease to speak in the name of the people, the case would properly be called: the capitalists of Illinois against Communism.

Indictments were returned against the following alleged members of the Communist Labor Party: Samuel Ash, Max Bedacht, Chas. Baker, Paul Bernford, Oscar Jesse Brown, Jack Carney, Chas. Clarahan, M. J. Christensen, C. A. Engelken, L. K. England, Mayer Dobrovsky, Edwin Firth, Harry A. Greenwood, Samuel F. Hankin, Robert Horsley, Helen Judd, L. E. Katterfield, Chas. Katz, Niels Kjar, Chas. Krumbein, J. Kunst, Wm. Bross Lloyd, Edward Lindgren, Ludwig Lore, James A. Meisinger, John Nelson, Robert Norburg, Edgar Owens, Margaret Prevey, Arthur Proctor, John Reed, Clara Roffsky, Karl F. Sandburg, Jack Schiff, Perry Shipman, Alfred Shuster, Morris Stollar, Albert B Stone, John Vogel, A. Wagenknecht and Walter Wolf.

In court appeared on May 10. the following: Samuel Ash, Max Bedacht, O. J. Brown, Chas. Clarahan, Jack Carney, M. J. Christensen, Meyer Dobrowsky, C. A. Engelken, L. E. England, Edwin Firth, Samuel F. Hankin, Robert Horsley, L. E. Katterfield, Niels Kjar, Chas. Krumbein, Wm. Bross Lloyd, L. Lore, James A. Meisinger, John Nelson, Edgar Owens, Arthur Proctor, Morris Stollar, Karl F. Sandberg, Perry Shipman, Alfred Shuster and John Vogel.

Chas. Clarahan and C. A. Engelken were granted a separate trial. Margaret Prevey, Helen Judd and Clara Roffsky were not included in the conspiracy charge on trial, 12 of the 31 originally indicted have not been apprehended as yet. Of the 24 remaining and put to trial on May 10. four were released in the second week of the trial on motion of the prosecution. They were:

Meyer Dobrowsky, Robert Horsley, John Nelson and Alfred Shuster.

Mr. Frank Commerford is special prosecutor of the case by appointment. This gentleman once attempted to win fame as a labor lawyer. His ability did not seem to be quite sufficient for such an achievement. So he became a hyper-patriotic authority on Bolshevism. Ability is not required there. Waving the flag and shouting about "our country" will do. In this he will be assisted by Mr. Barnhard and Mr. Heth, two Assistant State Attorneys.

The defense is represented by Mr. Wm. S. Forrest and Mr. Wm. Cunhea for Wm. Bross Lloyd, and Mr. Clarence Darrow for the rest of the defendants.

Eight full weeks were consumed in the selection of a jury. In the course of the examination of the talesmen it developed that the prosecution works upon the theory that everything that is not expressly allowed is forbidden. Thus any change of government must be made by ballot. Those, whose intelligence does not allow them to

THE "SPY" STORY

(Editorial note: "The Toiler" prints the following statement in regard to the charges against Louis C. Fraina, for the information of its readers, without expressing any opinion as to his guilt or innocence).

The New York Call has found a new way to cover the reactionary character of the Socialist Party. The organization which it supports has become so thoroughly discredited among the workers of the country that it can no longer expect support by presentation of its principles. It has therefore adopted the policy of trying to undermine those organizations which really represent working class principles.

Recently Attorney-General Palmer made a statement before the rules committee of the Senate, defending his department against the accusation that it had planted spies in the Communist parties. In this statement he took up the charge that Louis C. Fraina was an employe of the Department of Justice, stating in answer the facts in regard to an investigation of the charges against Fraina, which was made by representatives of the Soviet Bureau and members of the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party.

In answer to this a statement was made by Santeri Nuorteva, of the Soviet Bureau. A copy of Nuorteva's statement was furnished the "Call" with the understanding that it would print the full statement in the form of a statement and not endeavor to make a news story out of it. In place of keeping the promise the "Call" published a garbled account of the matter, using such portion of the statement by Nuorteva as suited its purpose, and followed this up with an editorial trying to bolster up the Socialist party, by the suggestion that the whole Communist movement was infected by spies and agent provocateurs. In addition to a number of insinuations not based upon facts this editorial contains some outright lies.

Since the investigation made of the charges against Fraina has been given publicity, there is no longer any reason for not stating the facts, which are as follows:

An agent of the Department of Justice named Peterson was assigned the job of spying on the Soviet Bureau. This man endeavored to ingratiate himself with Santeri Nuorteva, secretary to L. C. A. K. Martens and in the course of conversations with him made the statement that Louis C. Fraina was employed by the Department of Justice.

When, early in December Fraina was directed to leave for Europe by the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party of America to establish connections with the Communist International, he requested the Soviet Bureau to give him credentials which would enable him to enter Russia. These credentials were refused because of the insinuations against Fraina made by the man Peterson.

In order to clear up the matter representatives of the Soviet Bureau and members of the Central Executive Committee made an investigation. A meeting was held at which Fraina was confronted with the Department of Justice agent Peterson. At this hearing Peterson stated that he had seen Fraina in the New York offices of the Department of Justice on three occasions. Two of these dates he fixed definitely, the other he was unable to fix. The two dates so fixed and which he insisted upon as being the correct dates when Fraina was at the Department of Justice in New York, were September 7th and Novebmer 15th.

Peterson also stated that he had seen in the files of Department of Justice reports supposedly made by Fraina and cancelled checks covering payments to him. These checks he stated were made payable to Fraina and were endorsed by him and the checks, after passing through the bank were filed in the file containing Fraina's reports.

Peterson also gave a description of the man he thought was Fraina. When he was brought into the room in which the hearing was held he was asked to state whether he could identify any of the persons present as Fraina, but was unable to do so. (It must be stated here that Fraina's appearance had changed somewhat). During the progress of the investigation Fraina cross-examined Peterson, and after a question or two Peterson stated "You are the man." It must be said however, that the description giving by Peterson of the man he saw in the Department of Justice offices was not a description by which those who have known Fraina during his work in the movement last fall would have recognized him.

During the cross examination of Peterson by those present many dubious points as to his motives and as to the reliability of his story were developed.

When the cross examination was over Fraina made a statement in reply in which he brought out that September 7th was the last day of the Communist Party Convention and that on that date, as could be verified by a score of people, he had been in the European Imperialism finds Russian Blockade is Boomerang, Says Bek

— By Nate L. Welch, —
Staff Correspondent, The Federated Press.

DETROIT, Mich.—That European imperialism is facing a speedy doom is the forecast of Lieutenant-Colonel B. Roustam Bek, military expert of Soviet Russia in the U. S., now in this city to assist in medical relief work for Russia.

"Poland, Germany, France and England are next in line for the dissolution of the imperialist order and the establishment of soviet rule," said Colonel Bek who has studied the matter from an economic as well as military point of view.

Reviewing recent press despatches with regard to activities of the Polish military forces, he ventured the prophecy, based upon the thorough study of the military map, that "the recent defeat of the Poles will be followed by a real strategic disaster the consequences of which will be a revolution in Poland, and only the establishment of a soviet in Warsaw can stop the Russian advance."

Pointing to the strategic positions held by the Soviet troops on all fronts, he continued:

"Russia does not care much for recognition by the government of other countries. She is so strong and so sure today that it doesn't matter whether she is recognized by other governments or not."

That England is now paying the penalty for the blockade which the Lloyd George government undertook against Soviet Russia, was laid down with emphasis by Colonel Bek, when asked how far the blockade was effective in fulfilling the purpose for which it was instituted: "The stupid blockade which was the creation of England harmed England more than it did Russia and Russians know that. The negotiations now reported going on between representatives of the British government and spokesmen for Soviet Russia mean that England capitulates and now tries to obtain the best that she can."

Colonel Bek was then asked to render a brief statement covering the latest developments regarding the military situation in Russia and its effect upon the outerworld. He dictated the following:

According to news from Moscow, naturally altered by the censor in favor of the Poles as for instance in the message dated June 15th, which stated that the Poles, on being forced to evacuate Kiev, have drowned in the Dnieper river 800 "reds" and had taken 100,000 prisoners, the cavalry under General Buduny in Volinia and Podolia has succeeded in capturing Zshitomir, Korostichev and several places between the Zsitomir and Beditchev railway and west of Kiev.

"Furthermore, on the river Teterev the railway station Borodianko has also been captured and at Wasilkov on the Kiev-Mohilev-Podolia railway, several stations southwest of Kiev are in possession of Reds, and in Wasilkov, 25 miles southeast of Kiev, the Poles have been defeated and have fled in disorder to the northwest.

"This means that all of the three strategic railroads which form the means of communication of Kiev with the rear of the Poles has been cut off by the Russians, and it is probable the Poles have not succeded in escaping as was reported from Warsaw.

"In the center or along the Pripit river in the Mozir region, the Russians are holding the Poles, avoiding any decisive movement. This is readily comprehensible for the Russians are accomplishing a strategic encircling movement.

"There is not much news about the Northern front, but from a study of the despatches one can see the Russians energetically pushing the enemy toward Minsk and Volina. It is very likely that both places have passed into the hands of the Russians.

"Looking at the map one realises that the Poles do not shorten the front as suggested by Eropean military experts, but are fleeing in disorder, without ever thinking of any other front which they cannot create with their demoralized imperialist forces.

"This defeat of the Poles will be followed by a real strategic disaster the consequences of which will be a revolution in Poland; and only the establishement of a Soviet in Warsaw can stop the Russian advance.

"Once established, the German workers will not lose an opportunity to overthrow the Ebert coalition government and join Russia and Poland in a Soviet government.

"France will be next, and those who have been witnessing the happenings in France will agree with me.

"It can now be readily realized why England is hurrying to establish friendly relations with Russia. First, because she is hard pressed in Asia on account of the rapid rise of the influence of Moscow upon the mussulmen. Second, because she believes that by recognizing the Soviet she can escape the fate of France.

"But in any case the whole endeavor of Lloyd George and his political colleagues will not prevent the establishemnt of a purely labor government in England.

"It does not matter much whether Russia is recognized or not. Russia is so strong, so sure, she doesn't think or care about recognition. That time is past and nobody will deny that the negotiations in London between the British cabinet and the Bolsheviki representatives means that England capitulates and now tries to obtain the best that she can.

"The Russian people fought for independence, got it and will continue to fight for it, knowing it will be victorous in the end."

A LETTER OF THANKS FROM MARTENS.

Soviet Russia Medical Relief Committee,
Dr. William Mendelson, Treasurer,
362 DeKalb Avenue,
NEW YORK, N. Y.

My dear Mendelson:

I have received your letter of May 27th together with your checks for two thousand dollars to be applied to the purchase of medical supplies to be shipped to Soviet Russia at the earliest possible time. I beg you to accept my warmest thanks for this contribution and I assure you and all those warm-hearted American men and women who have made the contribution possible that it will be deeply appreciated by our people in Russia. We managed to procure a considerable amount of medicines which are now being shipped to Russia and we are collecting another shipment of the same kind. Your contribution will be in whole expended for such supplies without any deduction for freight or any other expenses.

Again thaking you and all the members of your Society for your kind interest in the relief work for Russia, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
(signed) L. MARTENS,
Representative of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic.

STATEMENT BY THE RAILROAD "VACATIONISTS" OF CAMBRIDGE, OHIO.

As there has been so much misinformation handed out in regard to the Railroad situation, we the (so called) Outlaws take this means and opportunity to enlighten the public. There are approximately one-million men out on vacation; about six-hundred-thousand of these men are now members of the Chicago Yardmen's Association.

The following are just a few of the many cities where the men are out from 70% to 100%. These are taken at random from our reports. Cambridge, O., Youngstown, O., Cincinnati, O., Columbus, O., Chicago, Ill., Pitcairn, Pa., Conway, Pa., Canton, O., Terre Haute, Ind., Salt Lake City, Utah, Holloway, O., San Francisco, Calif., Detroit, Mich., Baltimore, Md., Indianapolis, Ind., Gary, Ind., Minneapolis, Minn., Omaha, Neb., Wichita Falls, Kan., Wellsville, O., Parkersburg, W. Va., Cleveland, O., Toledo, O., Dayton, O., and Philadelphia, Pa. Kansas City, East St. Louis, Dupo, St. Louis, and the whole Mississippi Valley are out 100%. The separation of the Laboring men into classes and Craft Unions has been what has defeated every move undertaken for the advancement of the Labor interests since the foundation of the Labor Union movement, as when one Union would out, they always have other Craft Unions to finish the job.

We have paid our Grand (?) Lodge Officers from $6,000 to $20,000 per year, while we who have worked hard for our daily bread have made about $1,000 per year. If any one disputes this assertion come to us, and we will show you a conductor who has been in the service twenty-six years, and who two years ago made a total of $1,285 for a years work. We claim that the railroad workers are the poorest paid class of organized labor in the world today, and we can prove it.

Any Employee of a Railroad, Male or Female, White or Black, can now join the Chicago Yardmen's Association.

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF THE WAR AGAINST RUSSIA

Special to the Federated Press and Foreign Affairs, Orchard House, Great Smith Street, London.

LONDON.—The war against the Russian people has entered a new phase. But it is the same war, and its purpose is unchanged. It is, of course, true that this effort to overthrow the Russian Socialist State, which under varying forms has persisted ever since Russia came out of the war after Brest Litovsk, is a capitalist war in a completer sense than the Great War of 1914—19 ever was. Insofar as it is a capitalist war, it has been narrowed down to a war between Russian socialism and French and British capitalism, now in alliance for many obvious reasons. And yet if we try and analyze more closely the motives which lie behind this continued assault, directed from Paris and London, now through one agency, now through another, against the Russian Socialist State, we are driven to the conclusion that they respond to differing inspiration. The fear and hate which grip Paris are the fear and hate of a politically and financially corrupt social order that refuses to assume burdens towards the state which the same order has elsewhere shouldered. Its dread and detestation of Socialism, whatever its brand and whencesoever it may come, are, therefore, proportionately greater than in any other European country. Frontiers are nothing to it. It would seek allies against Socialism anywhere. It is as ready to associate itself with a Von der Goltz as with a Pilsudski. Nowhere in Europe is the Legislature, the Press and public policy so effectively controlled by capitalism as in France.

With us in this country other and incomparably stronger and more subtle forces also come into play. The psychology of power for power's sake is far more developed with us than in France. The will-to-power; the traditions of a long line of imperial rulers; the caste and class monopoly over foreign policy which is the spinal marrow of the national structure; the prodigious growth in the materialism and militarism of Empire war has bred among our ruling classes—it is the psychology these things create which feels itself threatened in its innermost instincts by the Russian Socialist State. It is not difficult to understand why.

Socialism and Empire.

The advent of a great Socialist State in Europe is a solvent of Empire. Empire—the dominion over many nationally conscience peoples by a single alien people—and Socialism are irreconcilable factors. They are mutually destructive. The imperialists who presently govern the British Empire and who contemplate the consequences of the triumphant emergence of a great Socialist State in the geographical position of Russia — half European, half Asiatic—are not thinking in terms of Britain when they seek to prevent such a consumation. They are thinking in terms of the British Empire. And do not let us make the mistake of immagining that we are governed by Mr. Lloyd George. We are governed by the Foreign Office, the India Office, the War Office, the Committee of Imperial Defense the military and naval clubs, and Lord Northcliffe; by the great vested imperial interests which move behind the scenes, whose power is gigantic, and, as yet, barely sensed by Labor. For the nonce Mr. Winston Churchill is their agent, far more than Mr. Lloyd George. And he is very able, entirely unscrupulous, well in with the Court; dangerously so — for the Court, in the long last.

British capital has nothing to fear from the growth to adolescence of a Russian Socialist State. The mineral and timber resources of Russia are within its exploiting capacity for the asking. "Give me peace"—says Lenin —in effect, "and you can come here and develop the country. I will give you concessions. You shall work them. You shall profit by them." Why is the proposal not accepted? Why does it not govern policy here? Peace with Russia, and on Lenin's repeatedly professed terms, opens an unlimited field for the fruitful investment of British capital. But if British Capital has nothing to fear, British imperialism has everything to fear from the survival of Soviet Russia.

[illegible] heart is Asia [illegible] Commonwealth, [illegible] Russia is not only half Asiatic. She has been in contact with Asia for centuries. She has permeated Asia as no other people established in Europe has done. The Russian mind knows how to read the Asiatic mind. Picture Russia, a Socialist State, freed from her external foes, flanked by a series of racially akin or political allied — sometimes both—lesser States not in Europe only but in Asia, States enjoying full autonomy, permeated with Socialist ideas and precepts and practices radiating from a centre where education and science have been elevated into fine arts, where the treasures of knowledge, the accumulated learning of the ages are thrown open to all, made acceptible to the humblest citizen. Picture Russia thus—then look at India, Persia, Afghanistan, Burma, under present conditions. Need you ask why British imperialism shrinks at the prospect, and fears; fears unutterably as it scans the future?

The claim to "command" the Universe

The more so as our imperialism today is an imperialism, whose unyielding and intolerant side the very magnitude of its success in the war has tended to accentuate—partly through the intoxication of victory, partly through alarm arising out of the immensity of the added gains secured. It has become a militarist imperialism as it never was before. It has swung round violently to the old Roman conception of Empire. Read that speech of Field-Marshal Sir Henry Wilson the other day at the Union Jack Club. "Except in August, 1914—he informed his soldier listeners—our country and our Empire have never wanted you more". Why? He told them in the next sentence. Because, "our command on sea, on land, and in the air is being challenged in various parts of the world." Our command. Note the word. We were horrified at the schemes of world conquest attributed to the Germans during the war. Today we lay claim to command the sea, the land, the air—in short, the universe. By what right? This speech is typical of the spirit which impels our real rulers along the Roman way—to hold down Ireland by main force; to dragoon Egypt. It makes possible an unpunished Armitsar; an attempted absorption of Persia under the usual hypocritical devices; and ever extending extension of liabilities in Mesopotamia, in Palestine, at Constantinople, in tropical Africa. It is that spirit which sees in the ideas which Socialist Russia represents, a deadly foe; not without warrant.

The Lords debate.

Read carefully the debate in the Lords on May 5 last, on the relations between the Committee of Imperial Defence, and the land, sea, and air forces of the Crown. Observe the exchange of views between the noble Lords participating—Haldane, Crewe, Stanhope, Curzon: an urbane difference on points of detail, a common mentality of policy, the objectives of the British Imperial State. Mark the tenor of these elecutionary courtesies. See how they are permeated by the same spirit which Sir Henry Wilson, the soldier, expresses more bluntly. Note their outlook, the outlook of men bounded by the spell of imperial tradition, whose one pre-occupation is that of fashioning such military and naval weapons as shall surround this ever growing edifice with triple walls of steel. No loophole here for a gradual transformation of the character of Empire in the direction of those innumerable pledges with which the orations of our public men are studied. "Our" Empire, "our" possession; to be jealously so regarded. No room in these calculations for the gradual emancipation from alien tutelage of progressively conscious peoples. "If ever there was a time when the work of the Staff mind was necessary...... it is today." "Who can tell when the sky will become cloudy?" Thus Lord Haldane, who quotes with unction Foch's doctrine that war is "both a science and an art." The greatest of the arts, indeed! "Two thirds of the War Staff of the Navy, is, or ought to be, work done in [illegible] War is [illegible] as a permanent [illegible] University. The War Cabinet, declares Lord [illegible], must form "a permanent part of our organization." "Our armed preparedness," must continue "in spite of League of Nations or Treaties, or anything else." Precisely. As a solvent of Empire, a real League of Nations is only one degree less dangerous than a Russian Socialist State. For the principles embodied in the Covenant are incompatible with the continued subjugation of politically conscious alien peoples. That is why the British imperial mind is fundamentally hostile to the creation of a real League of Nations, and has always been. What an interesting study is that mind in its rare moments of expansion—as when Lord Curson boasts, speaking of the war, that: "The actual degree to which we were prepared for all the developments that ensued, was in excess of that even of the most able and scientific of our foes." (Compare with the declarations of our unreadiness put up by Mr. Lloyd George for the benefit of an ignorant public!) Get behind this flow of dignified orator. The smooth talk centres wholly round imperial responsibilities, the next war, the engines wherewithal to wage it—"the modern long range gun which is even now being considered." Do we possess, asks Lord Stanhope, "a body which is capable of co-ordinating our policy and our armaments,"—that is the question. What of the "new bases" for our Fleet? The present ones are not those "we shall use in a future war", the strength of the various nations of the world having been "entirely altered by the Peace." Let us hunt round for our new foe, and prepare our "imperial defense" against him? America? Japan? Socialist Russia? Our imperialists need one. Our command of the sea, land and air, impels one.

To this type of mind—and it is the mind which presides over our national destinies today—a Socialist Russia straddling across Eastern Europe into western and northern Asia, with its pestilent doctrines of solo-determination, its educational revolutions, its precepts of human quality, its war upon the institution of war and against imperialism which keeps that institution alive, is anathema. The determination to stamp upon it at all costs is as implacable as that other determination, expressed by Lord Birkenhead the other day, to exhaust the military resources of the Empire rather than give away one jot or title to Ireland's claims. We may yet see Gurkhas in Dublin and Cork. Why not? Our Ally has Negroes at Mayence and Wiesbaden. That is the spirit which drives Poland to suicide in another desperate attempt to overthrow Socialist Russia, and fills the hatches of the "Jolly George" with munitions for Warsaw.

Then consider the affront given by Socialist Russia to the most cherished privileges and preserves of the British ruling class, embodied in the Foreign Office. The shrewdest blow ever struck at Secret Diplomacy — without which a militarist Imperialism could not function—was delivered when Lenin and Trotsky published the Secret Treaties. The offense is as unforgivable as the revelation it occasioned was unprecedented. The leaven of that revelation still works, and will go on working. A socialist State whose diplomatic relations with other States are open, is a perpetual menace to imperialist States — a fortiori to the greatest of them all. The discredit into which Western diplomacy has fallen as the result of Lenin and Trotsky's action is so profound; the dangers to be apprehended from the future are so enormous for the existing Order that the Russian wreckers of the occult power which rules the peoples' lives must be broken.

These are some of the reasons why the struggle against Socialist Russia, although it has all the appearance of a fight between Capitalism and Socialism, is, while including this, something far bigger. French capitalism may feel itself menaced. But British imperialism, of the Roman type knows its very existence is at stake.

Eight Weeks to Secure Jury

believe in the efficiency of the ballot, after they learn that half of the people do not have the right to vote and the votes of the other half is negated by capitalist education, by stuffing of ballot boxes, by fraud, by ousting of elected officials etc., all these are liable to imprisonment under the law of the State of Illinois. Mr. Commerford believes in the right of free speech. His believe in it is so thoro that he challanged for cause a talesmen who said that he believed in free speech. Another talesman was challanged because he believed in the referendum. Still another was challanged because he believed in the constitution and particularly in the first amendment. Mr. Commerford states, that the state insists upon the right of the workers to strike, but he insists also on sending the defendants to the penitentiary because they have, according to the true bill returned against them, advocated the use of strikes against the state.

But one re-assuring fact has been learned during these long six weeks: Every American has a right to think whatever he pleases. Mr. Comerford says so. So we may take it for granted that the state is not in posession of a machine yet which registers the thoughts of the citizens, so the Commerfords may get a chance to prosecute them even for what they think.

So let us at least do some thinking.

The general impression of the selection of the jury in a case where ideas are on trial is that the jury, in order to satisfy the prosecution, must be composed either of ignoramuses or liars. The high type of Americans that are able to pass the vigilant watch of the prosecution are the ones that answer the questions put to them as follows: Are you a Socialist or Communist? No. Do you know something about Socialisms or Communism? No. Have you ever read something about Socialism or Communism? No. So you do not know what Socialism or Communism mean? No. Have you any prejudice against Socialism or Communism (about which they just confessed utter ignorance)? (emphatically) YES! Then these shining lights of social science are instructed that they may have all the prejudices their narrow mind may embrace as long as they solemnly swear that they will lay them aside and promise to base their judgement upon the evidence only. Opinions and prejudices of court officers must be very convenient matters if for certain purposes they can be laid aside like a dirty shirt!

But here we are wrong again. These defendants are not on trial because they are Communists. They are on trial, if we may believe Mr. Commerford, because they advocated the overthrow of "our" government "by force, violence or other unlawful means." So if a man is prejudiced against Communism he may still be able to impartially decide whether these defendants did want to overthrow "our" dear old government by force etc. Now this assertion of the prosecution is preposterous. But why argue? This trial is part of the class struggle. Capitalism is trying to defend itself thru its courts. And the revolutionary working class can expect just as much justice from a capitalist court as it can expect consideration from a capitalist legislature. Its the Sweets here and the Sweets there. And the workers get it in the neck here and get it in the neck there. The defense is not a legal battle for justice but a chance game in which the odds are nine tenths against the defendants. There is just a slight chance that there may be found twelve men who are not consciously or unconsciously blind tools of the forces of capital who thru their tools conduct the prosecution in the name of the people.

At this moment it seems certain that the selection of the jury will be completed within a very short time, as night sessions were recently instituted for the purpose of expediting the selection of the jury. Then the stage will be set and the performance will begin.

MILWAUKEE—Ole Hanson's appearance here under the auspices of the L. M. C. A. was mere camouflage —his coast to coast "Americanization" tour is really being financed by Big Biz. Confidential information received by Milwaukee leader has been to the effect that his appearance in Milwaukee was financed either by the United States Chamber of Commerce or by the American Constitutional league, a so-called "patriotic" organization engaged in fighting the working class movement of this city. The Y. M. C. A. merely had to play host to the ex-mayor in return for past favors

Frank R. Bacon, head of the American Constitutional league, when confronted with the confidential information, admitted that he had from the beginning been under the impression that Hanson was being toured by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The Black Sheep.

Chapter XXXVII.

Decision.

It was just as Collins had expected, Olive's reply to Jack's note was at the post office. And the next few days the big man busied himself with watching the boy for possible mental reactions, as a result of this new influence in his life. The reactions were not slow in coming. He answered Olive's letter the next day, keeping the nature of his reply strictly to himself. He, however, entered more whole heartedly into the discussion continually going on between Collins and Rudolph as the best plans for getting the masses of the working people into their favorite form of industrial unionism. The neucleus of that organization had already been formed. The Socialist Party was already in existence since the year 1900. The labor troubles that had originated in Cripple Creek, Colorado, during the year 1893 consequent upon the demonetization of silver and the consequent influx of silver miners into the gold fields had culminated in a series of atrocities and crimes committed on both sides, apparently culminating in the murder of Governor Stuenenberg of Idaho, during the winter of 1905-6.

All these phenomena were interpreted by Collins and Rudolph that the time was ripe for matching the great aggregates of capital with equally great aggregates of industrially organized workers. Both Collins and Rudolph believed with Lowell that the time was ripe and rotten ripe for change, and with him they had no fear of that which was called for by the instincts of mankind. But Jack pointed out that they were relying upon their own instincts, instead of the instincts of mankind. "Black Sheep don't constitute the flock," said he.

It was during these days, that a storm of news was brought with every mail, from the battle lines of the class struggle, and with it, Jack's argument had less weight with his companions. To them "Industrial Uinonism," was the form of organization invincible, the path to the redemption of labor and to the resurrection of mankind.

The fact upon which Jack had based his argument that the vast mass of the working class was unteachable, unorganizable, and unsaveable, was losing weight with his companions, if ever it had any. They took the position that the workers had to be taught, had to be organized, and, that then, they would save themselves. Had they been able to project their minds into the future, fifteen or twenty years and then looked back, they would have seen how substantially true, for the human race, were the boy's deductions from almost purely biological data.

Jack maintained, that there was only one thing that would ever bring the mass into action, and that thing was not oratory, but pressure. "Under the pressure of necessity," said he, "the masses will be stampeded into action and whether that atcion will be wise or foolish will depend entirely on circumstances."

But Rudolph and Collins contended that the pressure was upon them now; that millions of unemployed, and the rest working for pitiable wages, with child slavery, and white slavery thrown in for good measure the masses of the people were dissatisfied with the present order and ready and eager to take the step toward Soicalism or Industrialism if it were only properly presented to them, but on this point Jack remained skeptical.

"As long as the masses have bread or even a substantial majority of them have a fair chance to get it, they will take no chances with a new order of society. You must throw a kid into deep water if you would teach him to swim."

While it was true, that Jack was still pessimistic and skeptical on the subject of immediate organization for revolutionary action, on the part of any appreciable number of the working class, he did realize that there were immediate advantages that could be reaped by those who did organize. As has been pointed out the organization has already been formed. It had even shown the beginnings of strength in the harvest fields the year before. The members were spreading their message from the soap box and through papers, to the migratory workers in many parts of the country. Locals were being organized in different camps, and headquarters in different cities. There were reports of activity from Canada and Mexico, which gave it the character of an international movement. Similar organizations were heard from in Italy, France, England, Australia and other parts of the world. These things looked big to Collins and Rudolph, to them it was the forming of a battle line for the final conflict, and connot be said that it did not impress Jack. "The black sheep were bleating the world over," said he.

On the other ahnd they watched the belligerent attitude of capitalism. Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone had been kidnapped from Colorado and illegally brought to Boise where they were to be tried for the murder of Governer Stuenenberg, and other impossible crime. The civil, and militia powers, were ruthlessly brought into action. Labor had no right which capital was bound to respect. And by parrity of reasoning, these men came to the conclusion that capital could have no rights that labor was bound to respect. True to the law of compensation, injustice will beget injustice, violence will beget violence, even a worm will turn.

"Years of oppression," argued Collins, have made the workers desperate, and their experience in organization has given them a sense of strength. Ever since the year 1893 when John Calderwood was president of the Western Federation of Miners, this vast organization of laborers in the west has had a continual battle with the political and financial powers that own the natural resources in these regions. Labor has had only one true friend in the Governor's chair of a single state from that time till now. He was Governor Waite, of Colorado in the year 1894. He protected the workers, and used the state militia, to defend their rights."

"Yes, and the very men whom he protected in that manner only gave him two hundred and fifty votes for an entire district, when he stood for re-election," Jack interrupted.

"How in hell did you find that out," Collins asked in surprise. "I heard the story when I was at Mullen, and I think I understand the cause of that first Cripple Creek strike in 1894, as well as this later one that caused the arrest of Meyer and his pals. It had happened when the superintendent of the victor mine wanted to raise the working time of the miners to nine hours, and reduced their wages from three dollars to two and a half per day. Locke, the superintendent, thought, that with the influx of men from the silver mines into the gold camps, and the influx of untrained labor he could put it across, but the miners were organized and gave him his hat, and they didn't even tell him not to be in a hurry. It was then that capital organized posses to terrorize the miners, and the battle of Wilbur was the result. Here four hundred deputy sheriffs fought with the miners and several men were killed on each side. Sheriff Bowers, now organized twelve hundred men and descended upon the miners and would have doubtlessly inflicted serious trouble if he had been allowed to go ahead, for he had with him some of the most degenerate cut throaths, that were ever turned loose by an indolent Providence.

For instance they tell us of a man by the name of K. C. Sterling, a detective, who shot and killed a handcuffed man, simply because he tried to warm himself at a fire in a tent. Governor Waite, who by the way, was a populist, sent the militia, not as is usual to terrorize the miners, or at molest their wives and childrens, but to round up the deputies and disarm them, and to grant the strikers their demands of three dollars for eight hours work. Out side of that one instance, I can not recall any case where political power has not absolutely prostituted itself to the money bags. The one thing that has caused me to doubt more than all others the possibility of saving the working class from slavery is the fact that after Governor Waite had proven himself the absoluto friend of Labor, Labor voted him down, because capital threatened to close the mines in case he were reelected."

"The Bible tells us that an 'ass knoweth the crib of its master,' and labor feels dependent on capital for a job."

"But what about the battle of Wilbur?" Rudolph interjected, "didn't that show that labor had spirit. Didn't that show that they would fight for their rights in an organized and definite way?"

"Yes, they were nearly all Swedes and Irish. Northern blonde slaves in which a few degenerate instincts of liberty still survived. That is why capitalism drove them out of the country, and finally replaced them with darker and more docile breeds."

"Oh, for Christ sake forget it, "roared Collins. "You're a monomaniac on that stuff. I am surprised at one thing tho that you have gathered so many data on this matter. I am glad to hear that you have a correct concept of the beginning of this trouble in the west, for it is going to ultimately industrialize the Western Federation of Miners. And then," he said triumphantly, "capital had better watch out." Turning to Jack he asked, "Have you any more dope on the development of the W. F. of M."

"Yes, I had some. Most of it was on the reverse side of hose notes you sent away." Jack answered laconically.

Thus the trio argued and planned and dreamed at their fire side, and all the while the letters which came to them from all parts of the country fanned their enthusiasm to a glowing brightness. Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone were in jail for the Cause of Labor, Debs was touring the country in their behalf. The 'Appeal to Reason' waged a valient warfare. 'If you kill Bill Haywood, a million toilers will take up the banner of labor at his grave and carry it to victory!' These words had not yet been spoken, but their import was in the air. The papers were full of announcements of mass meetings, protests and demonstrations. All this electrified Rudolph and Collins and caused them to begin laying their plans for breaking camp early and go on the job, to help the good work along. As the news of the labor war became hotter and the 'Appeal To Reason' and 'The Weekly People', were regular visitors, to the cabin, Jack too, forsook his biology and natural history and followed the tides of the class conflict. Meanwhile there arrived the second letter from Olive Anderson. She too was following the struggle in the pages of the 'Appeal'. How she ever came in possession of that paper is not known In fact a great many of its readers never knew how it happened to come to them.

But it was evident that she studied the events closely in all their details. She expressed surprise that at such a time as this Jack should be hidden in the woods, when the whole world needed the message he was able to bring.

She did not realize that the boy whom she had met was only mentally and not spiritually converted to the great cause. It may be that to him that conversion never came, but to her it came and took hold long before she had an intellectual understanding of what this world movement meant.

The boy felt a sense of guilt surge thru him when he read her criticism. He saw clearly that the fire had taken hold of her soul. "I am going back to the mines," said he, "and see what can be done with these slaves—what shall we do with our books?"

"Oh, when we leave we will take all the truck over to Hahnenkratt and leave it with him," said Rudolph. "But why this sudden decision to get busy? Have you already forgotten what happened to you on your last trip?"

"We are not accomplishing anything

Propaganda -- Words, Deeds

While the capitalist propaganda against Russia seems to be weaking in some quarters, due largely to the necessities of commercialism, other quarters are as virulent as ever in their denunciations of bolshevism. Russia, it is claimed is seeking to propagandise the world with the ideas of bolshevism; it is establishing centers of propaganda in all parts, attempting to stir up the masses against the masters of bread thru the means of agitators and literature. At least one enterprising capitalist daily asserts thru its European reporter that schools are maintained in Russia which are turning out graduates whose special field is the labor movements of other countries outside Russia; underground routes are established whereby red literature, fresh from the centers of the revolution and proselytes as well, make their way out of Russia and henceforth over all the world, scattering the virus of discontent and bolshevism broadcast, such is the claim.

Granting that all this is true, the conviction must be borne in upon one that the governments of the great capitalist countries of the world must be settled upon very shaky foundations indeed, if by such methods of propaganda they can be made to totter and fall. The capitalist world appears to have a tremendnous fear of a few manifestos and declarations that it should shudder so at their appearance.

If capitalism is the blessing which our masters claim it is, they owe to the world a serious duty. They should at once establish a universal anti-bolshevik publicity covering its every phase and angle. Of course we know that some plans have been worked out somewhat to that end. The church, school and public press are ever active in the work of propagandizing capitalism. But their work is often course and very ineffective. It lacks system and depth. It is far too shallow, too general in character. It should be more specific.

Take for instance the question of wage payment of labor versus payment according to the full social value of labor's product. Capitalism should take up this question in a clear cut manner and set about at once to prove that the worker is far better off with about half his earnings than he would be with all of it. The question of houses should also be looked carefully into. It should be seen to that the workers are at once convinced that they are better off living in rotten, rented shaks in conjested cities that in real houses surrounded with grass, shade trees fresh air and sunlight. A short trial of this kind by way of example would be the best mode of convincing all doubtful tnement dwellers of our city slums.

The conditions of employment and control of the means of life should be gone into thouroughly. The landless serfs of all countries should be shown how tremendnously better off they are in having their products taken from them in the form of rent than they would be by tilling the soil and keeping the product as their own, with no fear of losing that right. The industrial workers should be convinced once for all that they are infinitely better off under a system whereby the control of their right to work is in the hands of the private owners of industrial machines than it would be under the control of the workers themselves. It should be brought to their minds how full of good things their lives are, how secure from the fear of want and lack of work they are; with what ease of mind they pass to and fro about the earth with never a gnawing agony of uncertainty. Innumerable circumstances of the workers lives might be mentioned here which the capitalist class might thus propagandise to their benefit and the unduing of bolshevism.

What the capitalist class is up against is facts. And the one big fact, bigger than all others together, is the fact of Russia under Soviet rule. Compared to the propaganda value of Russia, considered as a fact, there is more in it than in all the literature turned out of the bolshevist press in a year. Soviet Russia IS. If never a leaflet came out of Russia that one fact alone, would be enough to give capitalism a mortal scare. And as long as the fact of Russia exists capitalism is certain to be afflicted with chills and fever and at last collapse.

The thing which capitalism is up against is the existence in fact of two competing systems—capitalism, decaying, capitalism, and Socialism, the advent of workers' control, filled with youth and fire, sure of its victory. The world is choosing between the dying and the be-coming. The propaganda of the deeds of Socialism is conquering.

The Pope Be Damned

Pope Benedict wrote a letter the other day to one of his pals in graft, Cardinal LaFontaine at Venice. The Pope seems to have opened up quite a bit upon the "agitator" in this epistle. Naturally enough, the Pope is against all agitation that threatens his own power and the class of parasites whom he represents here on this earth. The Pope well knows that unless a method is found whereby to stop the prevalent unrest in the world's industries, the whole capitalist class is doomed and with it grafting, the hypocritical so-called Christian church.

The Pope knows all this, would that the workers realized its truth as clearly as he. Knowing it, he is zealous that the wool be keept well over the eyes of the workers and they be lulled to sleep with the anaesthetic of such religious dope as is administered by Popes, preachers, priests and the rest of the sky steering fraternity.

The Pope is dreadfully opposed to "class hatred" and "violence." That is, he is opposed to the working class becoming imbued with any such sentiments—it might go very badly with the class of loafers for whom the Pope speaks if the workers got too restless—hence his admonitions against class hatred. We quote a paragraph from the news article dealing with this latest manifestation of the Pope's desire for justice to the workers.

"Only the church can effectively deal with present day evils with justice," the letter said. It further invited the wealthy to give liberally and act more in accordance with the spirit of equity than cold justice. He also said that labor should not make unjust demands at the present time."

Black reaction was never more clearly depicted than in this first sentence. Roger W. Babson, speaking of the power of the capitalist class, says, "we have the schools we have the pulpit." And he did not distinguish between the protestant and the catholic pulpits either. The church indeed, will give justice to the workers. Its sole purpose is to keep intact the present capitalist system of slaves and masters, of robbed and robbers. It is the tool of the master class to make more subservient those whom it exploits—all in the name of Jesus, a carpenter agitator of Nazareth.

The Pope invites the wealthy to give liberally and to assume a spirit of equity toward the workers. The Pope knows well how to safeguard the interests of the bourgeoisie, even better than they themselves—but then that is what he is paid for. What he says to the bourgeois in effect, is this: The proletariat is getting sore. It thinks that it isn't getting a fair divvy. Of course it is, your justice cannot be questioned, but at the same time, it is better to assume the role of benefactor by charitable acts which may satisfy the mob than to ignore its protest and allow it to come to a head. I advise you to scatter a few sheckles among the multitude and thus quiet their ravings. This will keep your graft intact from any assault on the part of the mob."

This is a pretty cheap method to win by. Considering that the gifts of the bourgeoisie represent the blood stained products which have been withheld from the workers, it is about the cheapest method we know of to prop up the decaying system. Giving to the worker as "charity" a measley portion of what he has been robbed of is perfectly in keeping with the general hypocritical policy of the church. It is logical advice from an institution as rotten as is that thru which the Pope functions.

The letter concludes with an admonition to the workers to remain faithful to the church and forbids the clergy participating in labor agitation. To this we wish to answer that if the workers remain faithful to the church — which they won't—they won't have any problems to solve, or any thing else, And if the clergy are to ignore the labor problems how is the church to solve "effectively" these same labor problems?

But who in hell is paying any attention to a Pope any way?

Moral Victories of Sovietism

While the capitalist press continues to prophesy the day after to-morrow fall of the Russian Soviet government and to belittle such physical victories as it has been able to gain against its counter-revolutionary enemies and the hypocritical "democratic" Allies no cause in the world today has to its credit such a list of moral victories as has Sovietism.

The interdiction of freedom is in itself a moral victory of great portent and force. Herein the law of compensation operates with signal success. The loss in advantage gained thru actual participation in freedom of action is at least equalled in the moral force gathered because of this interdiction.

The Soviet Constitution was not allowed publication in England. But the moral force of Sovietism grew until the dock workers responded with a refusal to load the "Jolly George" with mumitions with which to kill bolshevists. Freedom of speech, assembly and the press are always opposed by privileged ruling classes. Such opposition and refusal has always kindled the fires of revolt and lent to such revolts a moral and righteous force which has aided in firing the cause with the flames of intense, even religious fervency.

Thruout the capitalist world the opposition to Sovietism is paramount. State, Church and School are united against it, all the forces which capitalism can muster have been and are now being brought into play against the principles and ideas which Sovietism has laid down for the salvation of the workers. Its literature has been burned and destroyed, its adherents jailed, tortured and murdered. These persecutions have but added to the ranks of the adherents of Sovietism. A million inquiries about Sovietism are now asked where none were asked before and are to be calculated among the moral gains of Sovietism. Prosecution and denial consume themselves.

These moral victories of Sovietism are forming a basis for greater physical victories and thus in the end will denial of human liberty be defeated.

EMMA GOLDMAN AND THE SOVIETS

By Mary E. Marcy

From more than one source it has reached our ears that Emma Goldman is not at all satisfied with Soviet Russia and that she yearns for the good old days in America before the war when bored society ladies derived a thrill from hearing her discuss sex problems and advocate "Free love" with the lid off. In those affluent times a lady who disliked to soil her hands with the drudgery of honest toil could always be assured of a group of gushing satellites who were willing to pay for the privilege of being entertained.

We knew perfectly well when Emma was deported to Russia that she was not going to like it there. For she never did understand the laws underlying historical progress, nor the economic structure of society, nor the evolutionary trend of society. And she had about as much real use for the working class as John D. Rockefeller or Judge Gary.

She does not understand what has happened during the past five years nor what is transpiring in the world today. She does not really want a workers' revolution, and she says that industrial communism is tyranny. The conditions of everybody are too levelled up, as it were. In fact after seing Soviet Russia during war-time, when the Russian people are compelled to sacrifice personal comfort and leisure and the Arts, in order to protect themselves from the armies of the capitalist countries of the whole world, her thoughts turn back longingly to the "good old days" that are never coming back, anywhere, anymore.

Emma Goldman does not know that we have had ANARCHY in production for the past seventy-five years and that all the conditions of hunger, war, despair, failures of the credit system, financial disasters are but the full fruits and blossoms of the sort of thing she prefers to Communism.

For many years in all the modern anarchistic, or capitalistic, countries we have had production begin and production cease solely at the dictates of a few owners of industry whose only thought was, NOT of the needs of society, but of whether industry yielded a sufficient quota of profits for their own personal appropriation. Shops opened and closed; railroads were built and operated or were permitted to fall into disuse, solely on the basis of whether or not they yielded sufficient profits to the capitalists.

And this anarchy in industry, in production and distribution, brought about the great war; killed off ten million young men and maimed ten million more; ravaged whole nations, and it is this anarchy, planlessness, individualism—run—mad that is to-day causing the collapse of the world's credit system; causing inflation and rising prices, that is choking off industry. It is anarchy or capitalism which is to-day unwillingly digging its own grave, destroying the foundation of the existing system and making revolution as inevitable as the stars in their courses.

It was anarchy in prodnction and distribution and in finance that caused the collapse of the Czar's regime' and that is causing the disintegration of the civilized world to-day—unbrideled, capitailst anarchy.

But Emma does not know that industry and production are anarchistic in Europe and in the United States, nor that the credit system has failed nor how the workers are exploited. She does not care that world—Capitalism is warring upon Russia and that in the face of the collapse of the old system the Russian workers have not had time to rebuild in peace but are forced to carry on their educational work and their great plans for socialized industry in the face of the combined capitalist armies of the world.

All that she seems to be interested in is the fact that in Russia people have lost their old time liberty of being able to graft off the ignorance of the people and that she is in a land where it is necessary to become a useful citizen or to go hungry.

There are several kinds of freedom that nobody is able to enjoy in Russia to-day and this is precisely what has made Soviet Russia the target of all the reactionaries all over the world, from the millionaire owners of industry to the petty grafters who prey on society. To-day, provided you are a healthy man or woman, you eat according to the work you do, according to the service you perform. Everybody who is a useful member of society is allowed his share in the food and clothing and pay in Russia. But nobody any longer is free to live off the labor of others or by the exploitation of men and women in any manner whatsoever.

The coming days may be rather difficult for the social parasites who do not understand the events of the times. They do not realize that CAPITALISM, or anarchy in production, has failed, and is bound to succumb in chaos and utter rout because of its own contradictions.

We are going to have world revolution, not because of the aims of any class, but because, through the failure of the capitalist credit system, capitalism is becoming unable to carry on production. The same money is deposited over and over again in the banks, and the bank deposits are increasing more than twenty times as fast as the gold supply. So that the banks are in a constant state of insolvency. They are no longer able to lend sufficient money to carry on business enterprises, to maintain industry. They are compelled to curtail credit when the United States, for example, needs hundreds of millions of dollars to be expended in extending and rebuilding and improving the railroads alone. They need either to print more unbacked paper money or to hold more and more money in the banks to partially protect their depositors.

Industry in being CHOKED OFF by Capitalism, not by the revolutionists, and every student of history knows that when production ceases, the inevitable result is revolution in self-preservation for the mass of the people.

And when Anarchy, or Capitalism, brings CHAOS, nothing on earth will lift society out of the disaster but SOCIALIZED production and SOCIALIZED PLANNING. When it actually becomes impossible to produce for PROFITS, men and women will either have to starve to death or RESUME PRODUCTION on the basis of HUMAN USE AND HUMAN NEEDS.

And so the socialism of Marx and Engels is on its way. No matter whether you are glad or sorry, no matter whether you may be working for it, or die trying to prevent its coming, it is as certain as the approach of the reasons.

We are bound to have a socialized world., socialized production and distribution — not because we do or do not, want it, but because Capitalism is going to leave the whole world high and dry in utter chaos. There is only ONE WAY OUT!

WILL HE DO IT

WASHINGTON.—"My policy with respect to all the Socialist papers whose mailing privileges have been revoked or restricted is this: So soon as the war is legally and technical over, I will instantly restore those privileges—but not until then."

Postmaster General Burleson in these terms announced what he called his final policy toward the Milwaukee Leader, The New York Call and other newspapers and periodicals whose liberties he has infringed under the arbitrary powers conferred on him by the espionage act.

"They are now harmless, I believe, and have a right to spread their miserable doctrines," the postmaster general said "but it is not within my discretion, once the mailing privileges are withdrawn, to restore them before the constituted authorities shall declare the war to be formally over."

"Does the law provide in terms that you must wait until the technical ending of the war?" Burleson was asked.

"No, it may be even worse than that," he responded. "For the law directs me, when I find a paper has broken it, to restrict its mailing privileges—that is all. Nothing is said about restoring them at all, or ever.

"It might be construed that they are forfeited forever. "But, he added, "I will not construe it that way, but will restore their full rights on the day that peace is declared.

"I don't like these miserable sheets," he continued. "I believe their teachings are all pernicious, but I have no rancor in my heart toward them—none at all, I have not acted arbitrarily. The evidence simply piled up against them, and I had no other course. I revoked the rights of every one of the Socialist papers complained of, except one—some paper in Kansas—and in that case, although I thought it one of the worst of the lot, I could not see that it had actually violated the law. So I let it go."

"Any person under the age of thirty, who, having any knowledge of the existing order, is not a revolutionist, is an inferior". Bernard Shaw.

The Revolutionary Situation in Italy

By George Halonen,
Written for The Federated Press.

Even the Press dispatches state that the Italian situation is critical and the recent cabinet crisis has proved it. Nitti resigned, but as none of the bourgeois parties dared to take the responsibility of forming a new cabinet, he again and again took the post of premier, until finally Giovannia Giolitti was found ready to attempt to form a cabinet.

As early as 1914 the Socialist Party of Italy predicted that the imperialistic policy of the bourgeois would necessarily lead to general misery and that it would create a revolutionary movement among the masses. Recent revolutionary activities have surprised even the party.

The present social—political crisis is such that the only solution is revolution. The capitalist class understands that and it is prepared to face the music. Ex-Premier Nitti, its most eloquent and diplomatic spokesman, has taken steps to fight the increasing power of the workers' party. Nitti does not resort to gag-laws and suppression. On the contrary, he has taken a very friendly attitude towards the socialists who have 150 representatives in parliament.

"Our socialists are real politicians" says Nitti, in order to tame the socialists. "They constitute a real power. To them belongs the future."

But the socialists have refused to take places on parliamentary committees and commissions because they know that the time for reforms has been outlived and that the masses, not satisfied with reforms within the capitalist system, are fervently preparing for a revolution.

The present time is a period of great strikes. In Turin a strike of 200,000 metal workers took place which continued 28 days. The workers demanded recognition of their soviet or council. The strike was to be the beginning of a general revolution, but this did not succeed as the armed forces of the exploiters were too strong for them.

All over Italy the peasants are dissatisfied because of their miserable conditions. The farm workers of Parvia and Novarra are striking, often using extreme measures.

Industrial as well as agricultural workers are striking and sometimes the strikes are not bloodless. Some time ago a socialist was murdered in Decima. The workers declared a protest strike. As a result six workers were killed and thirty injuerd by soldiers. Of the Modena workers who protested against the military rule of Decima, five were killed and fifty injured. This catastrophe was followed by a protest strike in Bologna and the workers of Florence, Genoa, Rive, Trieste, Parma and Piacenza declared a 24 hours general cessation of work as a demonstration against the tactics of the militarists.

The dissatisfied workers are demanding that the Socialist Party declare a revolution. This desire of the impatient masses is shared by many trade unionists. The Socialist party which is thoroughly revolutionary is against a revolution at the present time. "Avanti" the organ of the party, says, "The labor organizations must fight for victory and they must not enter into premature revolts. We must be ready for the right time."

The Executive Committee of the party has declared the following:

"The Executive Committee of the Socialist Party is of the opinion that the present difficulties and strikes indicate that the situation will continue to become more critical and of necessity revolutionary. We therefore deem it necessary for the proletariat to prepare for united action in order to crush the reaction and to overthrow the capitalist government."

"Avanti" explains in a leading article that the events in Sestri and Turin where the workers were defeated by armed forces shows that the socialists have not yet sufficient power. The bourgeois state is armed. The socialists are not. The tendency of the Socialist party is not against revolution but it wants preparation, even arming of the workers, before it gives the signal for revolution.

The soviets or councils form a part of the preparation. At the meeting of the national council of the party which took place in Milan April 18-21 it was decided to urge the forming of workers' councils in places where the socialists are strong. This resolution was adopted by 94,736 votes against 21,950. A resolution providing councils all over Italy received 8,000 votes.

The chief purpose of the Socialist party in checking the revolutionary activity of the masses is to organize and discipline them so that when the time is ripe for revolution, the party will be in a position to direct the revolutionary movement from a central point. The May Day proclamation indicated this very clearly. The party urged the workers to demonstrate for revolution, for Soviet Russia and for their own councils but above all for discipline, revolutionary discipline, discipline of human beings and masses. The highest aim is victory for the dictatorship of the proletariat and for the realization of communism.

Italy is on the verge of great social upheaval—a social revolution.

RUMINATIONS OF A REBEL

By Tom Clifford.

In the June "Cosmopolitan" I ran across the following bit of bourgeois gush penned by Meridith Nicholson: "America's need for leadership was never greater than now — not in state craft alone, but in things spiritual, in education and kindred departments of the social structure." Sounds nice, doesn't it? One would think from reading the foregoing that "spirituality" had a place in capitalist ethics. During the last four years the bourgoisie, through their courts, have jailed practically all the men and women in this country that had "vision" and dared give expression to their ideals. They sent Eugene V. Debs to the penitentiary because his great soul cried out against wholesale murder, and thousands of others are languishing in prisons for demanding a change in social conditions that would afford them opportunity to develop themselves spiritually. The bourgeois has no conception of spirituality. The gross things of life occupy his undivided attention, and woe be to man or woman who interferes by word or act with the institutions that guarantee to him unlimited license to plunder his fellows. Yet the magazines are full of this hypocritical cant while the game goes merily on.

I saw a letter the other day from a workingman in Buenas Aires to a workingman in Cleveland announcing that the workers of South America were boycotting United States products. And what do you suppose is the reason? Glory be, it is in retaliation for the outrages committed against the workers of this country on May Day, 1919. How is that for an exhibition of solidarity! More power to their elbow! "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" is not bad philosophy. This is a telling blow delivered just at the time the bourgeoisie of this country are so badly in need of markets. I wonder how long it will be until the workers of the United States develop the same degree of class consciousness.

The Soldiers' bonus bill has been passed by the House with the understanding that it is to be chloroformed in the Senate. Leave it to the capitalists to see that the bill is quietly laid away in the Senate committee boneyard. Same old game of "passing the buck." There are just two methods possible to provide the funds necessary to meet the proposed bonus, and the politicians realize that neither is practicable at the present time. One is increased taxation; the other the flotation of a new issue of bonds. To the politicians the former is unthinkable because of the fear of a political reaction by the people that would relegate these gentlemen to private life, while the latter would never be permitted by the big financial interests, for they realize that the bonds could not be marketed among the workers, as were the Liberty issues, and consequently the burden would have to be borne by themselves, and they are now carrying, through absorption of Liberty bonds, all the governmental securities they can stand. Besides it would augment the currency inflation to a point that might precipitate the financial crisis they are even now frantically trying to avert. But now comes the Cincinnati Post with a brand new scheme to solve this vexing problem. The Post suggests that the I. O. Us given to Uncle Sam for the billions loaned the Allies be exchanged for bonds to be issued by the debtor nations, and that these bonds be distributed as bonuses to the soldiers. Here is high finance with a vengeance. Great Head, that editor.. As I pointed out recently, there is not the remotest hope that these "promises to pay" would be any better asset than the bonds issued by the Southern Confederacy during the Rebellion, and no one knows that better than the pencil pusher who evolved this utterly preposterous proposition. And yet, when I remember how the government swindled the soldiers of the Civil War by paying them off in depreciated greenbacks worth but 33 cents on a dollar, I shall not be surprised if the same bunko game is played on the soldiers of the World War. It doesn't matter much, anyway. The workers are used to being skinned.

Are there any persons excited over the Republican National Convention, If there are they are carefully abstaining from putting themselves in evidence. During ten days lounging in hotel lobbies I have heard just one comment on the convention, The prevailing topics of conversatian are base ball, horse racing and high prices. No one seems to care a pickayune who is nominated for the Presidency by either the Democrats or Republicans. This apithetic attitude toward "politics" is extremely alarming to the politicians, for it makes a hurrah" campaign, which is their long suit, practically impossible. It is a portentious sign. Out of the ferment of present day society will emerge sober thinking, and then—something will happen.

THE MONEYLESS MAN

Is there no secret place on the face of the earth
  Where charity dwelleth where virture hath birth,
Where bosoms in kindness and mercy will heave,
  And the poor and the wretched shall ask and receive?
Is there no place where a knock from the poor
  Will bring a kind angel to open the door?
Ah: search the wide world and find if you can
  Who will open the door to a moneyless man.

Go to the halls where the chandelier's light
  Drives off with its splendor the darkness of night;
Where the rich hanging curtains in a shadowy fold
  Sweep peacefully down with their trimmings of gold,
And the mirrors of silver take up and renew
  In their long lighted vistas, the bewildering view.
Go there in your patches and find if you can
  A welcoming smile for a moneyless man.

Go to your church; with its cloud-reaching spire
  Which gives back to the sun its same light of fire;
Where the arches and columns are gorgeous within,
  And the walls seem as pure as a soul without sin;
Walk down the long aisles, see the rich and the great
  In the pride and the pomp of their wordly estate;
Walk down in your patches and find if you can
  Who will open a pew to a moneyless man.

Go to your Judge with his long flowing gown,
  Where, with scales in hand, weighth equity down;
Where he frowns on the weak and smiles on the strong
  And punishes Right while he justifies Wrong.
Where the Jurors, their lips on the Bible have laid
  To render a verdict they have already made.
Go there in the court room and find if you can
  Any law for the cause of a moneyless man.

Then go to your hovel; no raven has fed
  The wife who has suffered too long for bread.
Kneel down by her pallet and wipe the death frost
  From the lips of the angel your poverty lost;
Then turn in your agony and look upward to God
  And bless while he smites you with chastening rod,
And you'll find at the end of your life's little span
  There's even no welcome in Heaven for a moneyless man.

STILL THIRSTING FOR BLOOD OF AMERICAN "SLACKERS"

By Linn A. E. Gale.

Nero, immortal in the annals of infamy and watching the helpless people of ancient Rome burn to death, never smacked his lips in more hellish glee than would the munitions-makers, profiteers and imperialists of the United States if they could imprison, torture and butcher the American "slackers" who are still in Mexico.

No clan of cannibals ever lusted more furiously for the blood of their victims than do the financial dictators of the American government lust for our blood.

They forgave the Germans long ago. They never had any intention of hanging or punishing the kaiser. Such talk was bluff to kid the people. If the German empror had been killed because he lost this war, President Wilson's turn or King George's or Lloyd George's or Clemenceau's turn might come later. They had nothing against the Kaiser as an individual, despite their lying assertions. They simply wanted to dominate the markets of the world and to do so it was necessary to trash Germany. Some other time it will be necessary for them to clean up England and Japan in order to maintain supremacy of trade. Altho they were dead in earnest in seeking commercial mastery. they have no desire to be so harsh with the enemy as to affect the stability of the capitalist system. Repeatedly they have shown that they prefer kaiserism any time to Communism and workers' control of industry. But the men who own the wealth of the United States have never forgiven us "slackers". They never will. They hate us with all the fury of fiends. They size us, torment us, mangle us and finally slaughter us and make an example of us before the world.

An Exemple For Future Objectors

American capitalism wants to show every American that this is what will happen to any man who dares think for himself—who dares refuse to fight in capitalistic wars—who dares to prize human life more than the gold of millionaires, the epaulet of a soldier and the brutal mandate of a degenerate government. That's why American capitalism has never ceased to try to get the fugitives back from Mexico. That's why it has resumed trading with the terrible "Huns" that it was a little while ago so savagerly denouncing and centers all its venom and virulence on the "slackers."

For the "slacker" is a menace to capitalism providing he uses his freedom on alien soil for the purpose of propagating Communist teachings. Those who simply came to Mexico to save their skins, who had no conscientious or class-conscious objection to the war except that they didn't want to get hurt, who got jobs or opened stores and began to make money here like "good citizens,"—they are all right, from the standpoint of capitalism. Wall St. has no special enmity against them. There are lots of men in the United States who did the same thing in a little different way—who escaped military service by pull or bribery. While the government didn't like such doings as a rule for it wanted to have plenty of men to do the fighting, it wasn't much concerned about it. "Slackers" who came to Mexico in such a quiet, inoffensive way, have frequently gone back to their home towns and been unmolested or at the worst, spent a few months in jail and then gone scot-free.

But the "slacker" who was against the war because he was a Communist, a Socialist, an I. W. W., or a Pacifist, is a danger to the dying system, a danger to the designs of Wall St. Such "slackers" not only fled to foreign soil but they commenced an active and effective propaganda in favor of Bolshevism. They tried to awaken others to the criminality of a system under which wars are necessary. They tried to imbue others with their own spirit of rebellion so that when the next war comes, there will be still more who will refuse to obey the dicts of the international murder trust. And they were very successful, stirring in thousands a spirit hitherto unknown and filling them with that imperishable zeal for a cause that armies and empires cannot kill.

City of Chicago, attending the convention session in the morning and a meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the party in the afternoon. In the evening he was at a restaurant in the same city with a party of comrades. On November 15th, another date definitely fixed, he attended a meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party in Chicago as could be verified by twelve other members of the committee.

As to the checks which the informer claimed to have seen in the file supposed to contain Fraina's reports, any one familiar with modern accounting methods would smile at the proposition that returned checks should be filed in the individual file of the person to whom they were issued.

When the investigation was completed those present were asked to state whether they were satisfied that Fraina had been exonerated, and all but two members of the Bureau agreed that such was the case. The other two persons still had some douts although admitting that there was no clear case.

The stenographic report of the hearing was later submitted to the Executive Council of the Communist Party and the Translator-Secretaries representing the Language Federations in the National Office and it was their unanimous verdict that Fraina had been exonerated.

The "Call" endeavors to base its insinuations upon the fact that Fraina was not arrested last November, while others were and that he was able to leave the country. Those familiar with the facts know that Fraina was in hiding for a month before he left the country and that he left secretly, as many other persons have been able to do.

Publicity is given to the facts in regard to the Fraina charges in order to show the reprehensible tactics which the Socialist Party publications are ready to resort to in order to discredit rival organizations. In this matter the "Call" and other Socialist Party papers which have copied its articles have outdone the slimiest work of the capitalist kept press.

Predatory Wars, Oppression of the Workers and the Beginning of the Downfall of Capital

— BY N. BUCHARIN. —

During the last few years, in every capitalist country, small capital has almost vanished; it has been swallowed up by the big sharks. Formerly, many separate capitalists were fighting for customers; now when there are not many more individual capitalists (for almost all the small ones have been ruined), those that remained have united, organized and are in control in every country you may metnion just as the landed proprietor controlled his estate formerly. A few American bankers rule over all America, just as a single manufacturer formerly controlled his factory; a few French usurers hold the French people in subjection; five large banks control the destiny of the entire German people. It is just the same in the other capitalist countries. For this reason it may be said that the modern capitalistic states or the socalled "Fatherlands" have become enormous factories, which are ruled by a combination of property holders, just as formerly every seperate capitalist ruled in his own factory.

It is not surprising, therefore, that these trusts, the State combinations of the different bourgeoisies, now carry on that same battle with each other, which formerly was waged by the separate capitalists; the English bourgeois State battles with the German bourgeois State, just as formerly in England or in Germany, one manufacturer might battle with another. Only now, the stake is a thousand times higher, and the battle for the increase of profit is carried on with the help of human lives and of human blood.

In this struggle, which takes in the entire world, the first ones to be destroyed are the small and weak contries. First come the small colonial peoples weak, occasionally wild races, who are destroyed piemeal by the big predatory states. A struggle then ensues between these predatory states as to the division of the "free" territory, that is, the territories which have not as yet been stolen by the "civilized" states. Then begins the struggle for the redivision of the territory which has already been stolen. It is clear that this struggle for the redivision of the world must be bloodier and more bitter than ever before. Monstrous giants, the largest states of the world, armed with the most thorough death-dealing machines battle with each other.

The world-war, which broke out in the summer of 1914 and which has not yet ended, is the first war waged for the decisive redivision of the world between the monsters of "civilized" robbery. It drew into its whirlpool the four gigantic rivals, England, Germany, America and Japan. And the war is being waged to decide which of these robber alliances will be successful in forcing the world under its bloody iron heel.

This war everywhere aggravates the already hard lot of the working-class incredibly. The workers now have unbearable burdens heaped upon them; millions of the best workers are simply slaughtered on the battle fields; hunger is the lot of the remainder; those who dare to protest, are threatened with the remainder; those who dare to protest, are threatened with the harhest punishment. All the prisons are overflowing; the authorities hold the machine-guns in readiness for use against the workers. The rights of the workers have disappered even in the "freest" countries: to strike is not allowed; strikes are punishable as treason. The workers' press is gagged. The best workers, the most devoted fighters for the Revolution are forced, to hide themselves and to found their organization in secret, as they did during the rule of the Czar in Russia hiding from the host of spies and police officials. It is no wonder that the workers not only groan under such consequences of the war, but even begin to rise against their oppressors.

But the bourgeois States themselves, that start this fearful slaughter, begin to rot at their roots and to putrify. The are sunk in the bloody morass, which they created by their hunt for profit, and there is no way out for them. To go back with empty hands after such an expenditure of money, objects and blood—cannot be done. To go forward to another horrible risk—that too, is almost impossible. The war policy leads into a blind alley, from which there is no way out. For this reason, the war is prolonged endlessly, even though there is no decisive result. For the same reason, the capitalistic system begins to rot, and sooner or later, must make way for a new system in which there is no place for the madness of a world-war for profit.

The longer the war lasts the more do the warring powers weaken. The flower of the working people either perishes, or lies in the trenches eaten up by lice, busy with the work of destruction. Everything is destroyed for the war; even brass door-handles are confiscated for war material.. The most necessary things of life are lacking, for the war has swallowed up everything like an insatiable wandering host of locusts. Nobody produces useful objects—they are only used up. For the fourth year, the factories which formerly produced useful objects, are turning out nothing but shrapnel and grenades. Without men, without producing anything that is really necessary, all countries are reaching such a state of decay, that the people are already beginning to howl like wolves on account of hunger, cold, want, misery and oppression. In the German villages which formerly used electricity, the people are burning pine splinters for there is a lack of coal. In proportion as the misery of the people grows, life is being extinguished. In such well-governed cities as Berlin and Vienna, it is not safe to go on the street at night; everywhere robberies are being committed. The German bourgeois papers are complaining about the insufficient number of police. They do not wish to see that the growth of the number of criminals is due to the increase of misery desperation and rage. The cripples come back from the front and find universal hunger at home; the number of homeless and hungry grows in spite of the excellent organization, for there is nothing to eat, but the war keeps going on, and is constantly demanding fresh sacrifices.

The more difficult the situation of the warring states becomes, the more friction, dissension and disunion will arise in all the strata of the bourgeoisie, which formerly marched together, hand in hand in the interest of their common goal. In Austria, the Czechs, the Ukrainians, the Germans, the Poles are tearing each other's hair. In Germany, mostly because of the conquering of new-provinces, the same bourgeoisie (the Esthonian the Lettish, the Ukrainian, the Polish), the bourgeoisie which invited the German troops in, is now forced into a violent dispute with its liberators. In England, the English bourgeoisie is engaged in a death struggle with the Irish bourgeoisie, which has been held in subjection by the English bourgeoisie. And out of all this confusion, the working-class raises its voice ever louder, that working-class which, by the whole course of its development, is forced to face the problem of crushing the war and of throwing off the yoke of capitalism.

So the time of the decomposition of capitalism and the time of the Communistic Revolution of the working-class is approaching.

The first breach was made by the Russian Revolution of October. Capitalism decomposed earlier in Russia than in any other country because the burden of the world-war pressed more heavily on the young capitalist government of that country. Russia did not have such enormous organizations of the bourgeoisie as England, Germany and America. For this reason, it was not equal to the demands which the war made upon it, nor could it cope with the mighty attack made upon it by the Russian working-class and the poorest peasants, who lifted the bourgeoisie out of the saddle in October and transferred the power into the hands of the party of the working-class, the Communists—the Bolsheviki.

Sooner or later the same fate will overtake the West European bourgeoisie. The working-class of Western Europe is joining the ranks of the Communists in ever increasing numbers. Everywhere the organizations of their own "Bolsheviki" are growing: in Austria and America, in Germany and Norway in France and Italy. The program of the Communist Party will be the program of the Proletarian World Revolution.

QUAKERS TO SEND MEDICAL RELIEF TO RUSSIA

CHICAGO—Relief will be sent to Russia from Chicago, by way of the English Quakers. This announcement, together with the fact that the United States Department of State has continuously refused to grant celarance papers to American vessels carrying medical and other relief to Russia, was made at a massmeeting in the Chicago City Club held July 1 by the Committee on American Relief for Russian Women and Children.

Graham R. Taylor, once a Red Cross worker in Russia, stated that last April the American Red Cross was ready to extend its activites into Russia. "But something must have occurred politically to cause a change in its plans," he added. "I think that the Red Cross officials ought to be given a chance to clear themselves before the American people, or else ought to be given the opportunity to begin relief work in Russia."

Resolutions, submitted by Professor Robert M. Lovett of the University of Chicago, called upon the United States government to permit relief work in Russia to be conducted, to grant clearance papers for American vessels bound to Russia for relief work and to permit the American Red Cross to extend its activities into Russia. Isaac Don Levine read the exclusive Federated Press report stating that Herman Tucker had been killed while attempting an aeroplane demonstration over the Democratic Convention in San Francisco in favor of the blockade on Russia.

Miss Jane Adams, as chairman, announced that the committee already has received $3,000 from eastern sources to be diverted to this cause. She stated that when the drive for relief of women and children in all near eastern countries is started in September, an attempt will be made to include Russia.

Raymond Robins Unveils Forms of Long Lost Liberties

Cleveland Public gets glimpse of once fond favorites in meeting at Public Square.—A letter about it from the Editor.

Dear Comrades:—

Raymond Robins, swarthy, even Indianesque of feature, protagonist of what he terms "Americanism," held aside for an hour last Saturady the veil which has long shrouded from Cleveland proletarian gaze the form and features of Misses Free Speech, and Free Assemblage, once famous American twins. That the audience which surrounded the exibition was an appreciative one was evident throughout and especially when the speech was concluded and it was given chance at the speaker with questions

That the fair ladies were in perfectly good, respectable company was assured by a banner over the speaker's stand which proclaimed that the meeting was under the auspices of the City Club, an organization of bourgeois liberals. Nevertheless, the "proles" who made up a good portion of the audience, in spite of an evident haunting feeling that they were commiting a crime, cast many furtive glances upon the almost forgotten features of their Lost Loves and gave them more than one rousing welcome, and kidded the speaker as well.

Robins wants free speech re-established in the United States. He wants the old fashioned spirit of a fair show for all opinions to again permeate the government and public policy. "The Bismarkian policy of 'blood and iron' for false socialistic ideas made 4,000,000 socialists where there were only 300,000 twenty years before," said Robins. "The Czar had the Black Hundred and the Okhrana, the secret police, a ruthless crew which Palmer, Lusk and Sweet can never hope to equal, but they are gone and Bolshevism rules Russia," was another of his statements in protest against the use of force against ideas. Since Robins has reiterated time and again that he is opposed to socialism, we hasten to give him credit for learning some politics from history.

Introducing the "Peepul's Choice"

Entente's Support of War Against Soviets Strengthens Russia, says Krassin

Peasants, Bourgeois and Intellectuals won to Soviet rule by Polish Aggression.

Gregory Krassin, Soviet Envoy to London, who has established business offices in New Bond street and has been interviewing Lloyd George and other British goverament officials with the aim of establishing commercial relations between Britain and Russia, has just returned to Moscow. While the exact reason for his return to Moscow is not revealed, it is considered that mooted details of future commercial relations have called him home for conference with Lenin.

Before he left London, Krassin was interviewed by a reporter for the Paris paper, Liberate, which we publish herewith. The interview contains evidence of the strength of the Soviet Government at the present time.

"It was a great mistake on the part of the Entente to believe that we could be crushed by armed force. Each military blow struck against us permitted us to remedy the defects of our governmental machine," said Krassin.

Defeats Never Cause of Disorder.

"While it has been believed in Europe that uprisings would follow defeats of the Red armies, such is proved to be a profound error. There have been here and there moments of disorder, but our defeats were never the cause. I will explain that. At the beginning, after our revolution, our military situation was desperate. We were attacked and you remember we proposed amicable settlements by intermediary of the Scandinavian countries. That failing, we appealed to the working classes. Even among us there were many persons who doubted the success of this appeal. However, the workers of Moscow, of Petrograd and of other cities came flocking to us full of enthusiasm. They constitute the body of our present day solidarity, of which I advise you not to doubt.

"Another example—certain peasants were discontented with us for various reasons. In the first place the peasant is not a Communist. One must be as utopian as the Social Revolutionaries to believe that. Even at this moment they do not like the Soviet regime. Remember that last Spring the troops of Denikin were marching ahead. They had taken from us all the rich wheat fields. There remained for us only several provinces, Tamboy Penza, Voroneje, Kurks, Saratov and Simbyrisk from which we could get wheat and homes.

"The result was that the terrible effort we were forced to make bore heavily upon the peasants in certain districts. But we had no choice. We had to fight. The discontent of these peasants was such that in some quarters they offered armed resistance. But there again the Entente saved us. As Denikin advanced the peasant saw that his behavior towards him was a hundred times worse then ours. In our requisitioning we took from the rich peasants all the wheat they did not need. We took fifty per cent from peasants in modern circumstances. We took nothing from poor peasants. The officers of Denikin took everything, beating peasants and even their women. They submitted them to humiliations of a moral order when they did not burn their villages. Thus, for exampel, throughout the Urals the peasants flocked to us in thousands, abandoning Denikin's ranks. When news of these methods spread among the peasants they changed their attitude entirely. They did not become Communists but came to the conclusion that among all possible governments ours was after all the best for them. We guaranteed them against the return

WHAT THE COMMISSION SAW IN RUSSIA

By Ben Turner. (Chairman of the British Labor Delegation to Russia)

Editorial note: The return of the Brittish Labor Delegation from its mission of investigation to Russia was the signal for the capitalist press to launch an attack upon the Soviet system made up garbled and misleading reports. The Toiler is glad to be able to give its readers the following official report by the Chairman of the Delegation.

The reception of the British delegation in Russia was most enthusiastically hearty. The Trade Union bodies were chiefly responsible for the welcome arrangements. The Russians were evidently delighted that a responsible group of people had arrived from another country to investigate the truth about things, and held out warm hands of friendship to us.

HAS THE DELEGATION BEEN MISLED?

All the stories of organized camouflage to deceive us are nonsense. No greater preparations were made for us than would naturally be made to welcome a friendly delegation coming to a country which had been closed for so long to the outside world. The assertion that the streets were specially cleaned and hardships hidden in order that we might not learn what the actual conditions are, may be dismissed as so much moonshine.

The Soviet representatives were quite open and frank and wanted us to see the worst as well as the best. They made our work of investigation as easy as they could. We had absolute freedom to go where we desired, to see whom we desired. We were permitted freely to enter mills, workshops, factories, public institutions, and private homes.

Many of the delegates had letters of introduction to persons who were known to be opposed to the Soviet system—members of the Social Revolutionary Party, Mensheviks, intellectuals, and others. The Soviet representatives were quite hurt when they were asked if visits could be paid to these persons. "We place no restrictions upon you at all", they replied. "Visit whom you like. Ask what questions you like. There is nothing we want to hide."

ANTI-BOLSHEVIKS INTERVIEWED.

Visits were paid to numbers of Russians holding anti-Soviet views. We went unaccompanied by any Soviet official or Bolshevik sympathizer. For interpreters we were very well placed. A number of our delegates could speak French and German, which many of those whom we interviewed spoke, whilst Mr Roden Buxton both understood and spoke considerable Russia. Where other interpreters were necessary we were not limited to Bolsheviks. We frequently had Mensheviks to act in this capacity.

The reports that Russia is in a condition of savage anarchy are totally untrue. The suggestion that one cannot go about the streets without seeing indications of murder and rapine is simply ridiculous. We could walk about the streets of Petrograd or Moscow, day or night quite as freely as one can about the streets of London.

THE HUNGER DUE TO THE BLOCKADE.

The chief thing that hurt us was the evidence of the hunger in the cities, in Petrograd more so than in Moscow. The shops in Petrograd are mostly closed; many of them are boarbed up and make the streets look ragged and forlorn in contrast to the glamor of our streets. The lack of food stuffs and the consequent hunger is due to the long years of war, internal eruptions, breakdown of transport, lack of materials, and worn out machinery. The Allies' policy of the blockade and military intervention is, of course, chiefly responsible for these things.

The hunger in the towns is in strange contrast with the seeming prosperity in the villages. Every landworker has his own plot and produces his own food. The surplus he is supposed to sell at controlled prices to the towns.

There are no land owners; the land is the property of the state, but no rent is charged. This land occupancy may easily drift into peasant proprietorship unless the spirit of Co-operation, Socialism, Communism—call it what you will—enters into the life of the people of the villages. It is possible that there may be a contest between the townspeople and the villagers when external wars have concluded and the internal unity arising from the common dangers and difficulties is less operative. On the other hand, however, the education policy of the Soviet Republic is undoubtedly making communists of the young folks in the villages, and the future is theirs.

WONDERFUL HEALTH ORGANIZATION.

The health organization of the Soviet government is marvellous. Russia has sufferred terribly from cholera, typhus, smallpox, influenza, and other diseases. War always brings pestilence and famine and Russia has had them to the full.

The Bolsheviks have met these difficulties by herculean measures, despite the lack of soap and madical requisites consequent upon the blockade. Notices emphasizing the importance of cleanliness and fresh air are posted everywhere; in public places, trade union offices; they are printed on the theatre programs. "Lice is the enemy of Socialism", one of the placards reads. Hot water is compulsorily supplied at every station, on the steamboats, and in the trains, with facilities for the bathing of contact cases. Consumptive sanatoria, rest houses, convalescent homes, and old age homes (with no workhouse restrictions) are other features of their health service. Two million school children are fed, clothed, and housed.

POWER OF THE TRADE UNIONS

We visited the headquarters of the substantial offices, with good equipment substential offices, with good equipment and large staffs. There are typewriters, telephones, and all the other requisites that go to make up efficient office work. They take great pains in the preparation of statistic, diagrams, and in recording what has been done and planning what should be done.

The trade unions have a bigger purpose to fulfill under the Soviet system than here. They take part in the actual government of Russia as well as in the government of their respective industries.

The trade unions, separately and collectively, fix the hours of labor, the amount of overtime, and, in consultation with other departments, the wage basis. A part of the wage is the ration of bread and other food stuffs, which are distributed through the machinery of the trade unions. trade unions organize co-operative buying for such goods as are not rationed. Further, as food is difficult to get from trade unions organize co-operative buying for such goods as are not rationed. The trade unions also fix the physical productivity possible in the trades. They recognize that after five years of warfare and hunger, with worn-out machinery and lack of the best materials, on ductivity is possible.
ly one-half or one-third of the normal pro-

In addition to all these things the trade unions are responsible for the organization of education and recreation. The great opera houses and theatres are now open to the people and the trade unions allocate the tickets to their members at reasonable rates. By this means the workers have an opportunity to enjoy art and music and drama to a degree not thought possible in the old days.

In co-operation with other departments, the trade unions are responsible for the housing of the workers. A very large number of the old wooden shacks in which the work people previously lived have been pulled down, and the large houses which formerly belonged to the well-to-do have been converted into workers' dwellings. Every worker now has a home. This housing scheme has been developed from the double point of view of health and home-sacredness.

The Russians have found that by rationing housing in this way there is ample room for all. In the large houses each family has separate rooms, but there is a communal dining-room. Some of the homes into which we went were exceedingly beautiful and well kept. Constantly on Soviet property, such as the commandeered houses, one found these words displayed: "This is your own property. Look after it well." The injunction seems to be obeyed.

THE "RED TERROR".

The Soviet government abolished capital punishment last February, but owing to fires and explosions due, they say, to Polish incendiaries, they reintroduced the death penalty during May. The bolsheviks do not attempt to deny that they have used repressive measures. They say that, so long as a great part of the world is plotting against them, they must have exceptional powers to arrest counter-revolutionaries, monarchists, and officers of the old White Guard who act as agents and spies for the enemies of Russian. They say, "We are surrounded by war, and we are going to protect the revolution by all the means possible." The extraordinary commission is above ordinary law, but its members assured us that they always give the prisoners a trial and provide the indictment within 24 hours of arrest.

The members of the delegation were given every opportunity to see the British prisoners and the concentration camp. The Soviet representatives pointed out that they had done no more, so far as interning persons of "enemy", nationality was concerned, than was done by the British government during the war.

THE POLISH OFFENSIVE.

All the Russian people believe that the Allies and the British Government are supporting the Polish offensive. Petitions were frequently presented to us by the workers in the factories which we visited asking us to do all that we can to secure the end of the Allies, policy of the blockade and military intervention, and peace between Russia and the rest of the world. The Polish offensive is rallying the people in support of the Soviet government. The bulk of the people are not communists, although a great number of those who live in cities are. Even the opponents of the theory of Soviet government, however, say that they will do nothing to upset the present government so long as the Polish attack continues.

We saw the executive of the All-Russian Soical Democratic Party, sections of the Mensheviks, and a number of professors and such-like people who were neutral. "Give us peace externally", they said, "and we will secure peace internally." I don ot think that there is any danger of a renewal of civil war in Russia. I believe that, in a few years' time, perhaps with some modification of the Soviet form of government, or a broadening of its basis, Russia will become one of the first really great nations of the world.

Do you really want the dope?

Well the American Plan as conceived and wished and hoped for by Detroit Employers is nothing more nor less than a plan for the open shop. Some would call it a plan providing for organized scabbery.

"Considering what whiskers have done to Russia, one understands why it is called a safety razor." Very, very funny, but when one considers what czarism and capitalism have done to Russia, and then contrasts that with what sovietism is doing, hampered of course by the allied blockade and the allied capitalists of all the earth one wonders why the S. Here is a real gem, "The communist's theory that one has a right to take what he has not earned has put many a poor burglar in jail." Very funny—but that is not the communist theory. The communist theory is that no one has a right to take that which he has not earned. Capitalism is supported on the theory that it is right to take that which it did not earn. All capitalists take profits. Profits come from surplus values. Surplus values are the difference between the value of laboring power and the value of labor's product. Very, very funny Mr. Post but we would really like to know whether you were just inexcusably ignorant?

How does it come that the national prohibition provision of the constitution does not apply to a Republican convention?, asks our local blatter. That's an easy one. Probi. is for producer. The delegates to the convention were non-producers so naturally the provisions made and provided were winked-at. Some winkers— some winkers—the present bunch of law enforcers.

Why do the Democrats travel all the way to Frisco to learn the popular will? If the administration will restore free speech to the country they can learn the popular will without traveling so far. Why go so far to fare so worse?

Mr. [illegible]

Mr. Roger Babson, [illegible] big business, has broken [illegible]. This time he announces the [illegible] fact that labor has been whipped. In one of his latest bulletins furnished to employers, Mr. Babson says:

"There is no doubt about it—labor is beaten. Mr. Gompers was at his zenith in 1918. Since then he has steadily lost power. He has lost power with his own people, because he is no longer able to deliver the goods. He can no longer deliver the goods for two reasons. For one thing, peace urgency has replaced war urgency and we are not willing to bid for peace labor as we had to bid for war labor. For another thing, the employing class is immensely more powerful than it was in 1914.

"He has then an organized labor force more numerous than ever before. Relatively twice as many workers are organized as in 1916. But this same labor force has lost its hold on the public. Furthermore, it is divided in its own camp. It fears capital. It also fears its own factions. It threatens, but it does not dare.

"We said that the employing class was immensely more powerful than in 1914. There is more money at its command. Eighteen thousand new millionaires are the war's legacy. This money capacity is more throughly unified than ever. In 1914 we had 30,000 banks, functioning to a great degree in independence of each other. Then came the Federal Reserve Act and gave us the machinery for consolidation and the emergency of five years' war furnished the hammer blows to weld the structure into one.

"The war taught the employing class the secret and the power of widespread propaganda. Imperial Europe had been aware of this power. It was new to the United States. Now, when we have anything to sell to the American people, we know how to sell it. We have learned. WE HAVE THE SCHOOLS. WE HAVE THE PULPIT. THE EMPLOYING CLASS OWNS THE PRESS. THERE IS PRACTICALLY NO IMPORTANT PAPER IN THE UNITED STATES BUT IS THEIRS!

"English labor has come out of the war with great gains. During the war the United States work- [illegible] neck and neck. We forgot England's long supremacy's start of us. There is [illegible] labor force in the world. English labor was ready to wring advantage out of the war; United States labor wanted to do so, but it had not lived the life needful to that end.

"What, then, are we going to do to our opponents? When, in 1918, we gritted our teeth and said that we were going to show them where they got off, we had no very definite aim in view beyond just words. Now that we have indicated successfully the point of disembarkation, the question arises: What are we going to do about it?"

If it were not for one thing we could agree with Mr. Babson, but unfortunately for himself and his clients, Mr. Babson has confused Mr. Gompers and labor, apparently believing that they are one and the same thing. This is not to be wondered at in the case of an individual accustomed to think of the labor movement in terms of its so-called leaders, but it makes his estimate of the real situation somewhat unreliable.

If it is any consolation to Mr. Babson, we are quite willing to inform him that, in the opinion of close observers of the labor situation, the trade-union movement is not licked, but has simply quit. Old age has crept upon it and it finds itself unable to stand the pace set by modern economic conditions. Mr. Gompers may be licked; as to that we do not know, but we do know that he no longer represents the sentiments, views and wishes of what has been called the bona fide labor movement. If the whipping of Mr. Gompers is a victory, let the employers take all the comfort to themselves that they please.

Estimates of social progress, measured by the influence of certain leaders, are apt to be misleading. Social currents, move sluggishly and it is often true that changes in the viewpoint of the masses requires much time to be reflected in a change of officialdom. When it does manifest itself, it usually appears as the arbitrary action of individuals to those who do not understand the manner in which social progress comes.

This is true of the American labor movement. There are forces at work whose strength cannot be gauged by [illegible] of industrial organization, that the "whipping" of Gompers means the rise of a militant, intelligent leadership that will truly reflect the sentiments of the mass. It means a change from rule from above to rule from below.

Again, the one correct method of estimating the strength of any movement is to judge it by its average intelligence. The workers have been acquiring knowledge in the last three or four years that is already of and will be of more value to them in the struggle, and much of the education has been forced upon them by the section of the groups to whom Mr. Babson caters. For instance, the old confusing and fallacious doctrine of identity of interests between exploiter and exploited has been almost completely shattered. The belief that modern government was an impartial agency, standing between labor and capital and representing some mythical entity called the public, has been replaced to a large degree by the knowledge that modern government is merely a creature of the financial and industrial interests and that its principal function is to assist these interests in their work of exploitation.

Trade unionism, as exemplified by a Gompers, came into being as the result of certain needs. It can no longer supply human wants or induce the working class to believe that it is supplying its wants.

Mr. Babson may cheer his clients with the information that Mr. Gompers has lost his influence and call it a victory for the exploiters if he so chooses. Actually, he is announcing the beginning of a new and glorious era for labor.

FOOD FOR RUSSIA WAITS ENTENTE CONSENT.

According to George Seldes, staff correspondent for the Chicago Tribune and now stationed at Hamburg, "In the Scandinavian harbors there are today many thousands of tons of meats and fats destined for Russia, but little has gone to that country on account of continued disturbed conditions."

The "disturbed conditions" referred to by the correspondent are none other than the refusal of the Entente powers to recognize or trade with Soviet Russia.

Collins [illegible] himself with the [illegible] the fire. He pretended to burn his fingers, and swore viciously. This oath was only a [illegible] for the emotion of happiness, for it was now [illegible] to convince Jack that he ought to throw his lot with the radical movement. This had not been an easy task. The best workers are not enlisted in a day. Brain [illegible] of a profound nature cannot easily be swerved from one channel of pursuit into another. Jack's mind was drawn to natural phenomena, generally out side of the sphere of human activity, and Collins had come to realize that to bend such a mind into new paths of activity demanded more logic and argument than he possessed.

Realizing that the emotions are often more forceful stimuli to human action than the processes of reason, he had hit upon probably the only thing which was capable of working a change of attitude in the boy's mind. So it happened that Collins had brought from out of the bourgeois world, the spark which rendered the boys latent social energy, kinetic. It was Olive Anderson who as a purely emotional influence, caused the boy to decide in favor of an agitator's life.

This decision pleased Collins immensely. He felt, that if he could succeed in landing the boy in the midst of terrific industrial problems, he would then inevitably cast his lot with the industrial movement.

Rudolph, too, rejoiced in what he considered a mutual victory over Jack's natural tendencies, altho he was not so keenly aware of what had been the catalyzing element between Jack's brain and the class struggle. He knew that Collins had sent Jack's notes to a girl in North Dakota, and he rather suspected that a reply had been received, but further than that he knew nothing. On account of his attitude toward woman-kind in general, both Collins and Jack had refrained from discussing such matters in his presence. He could therefore not realize that this had anything to do with the boy's change of attitude. For it must be said that from such a correspondence Rudolph would expect nothing, if not a negative result.

While he was greatly pleased with the boy's decision to enter the class struggle, he did not like the idea of him going to the mines. He wanted him to follow agricultural work. "I tell you Ed," said he, addressing Collins, "It is alright for the kid to go to the mines, but you must not forget that he is enthusiastic just now, when the whole mining world is seething with trouble. But wait until the trouble is over and things quiet down a bit as far agitation is concerned, especially if Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone are acquitted, then he will put all his mind into the work of mining, and the first queer crystal he sees he will turn geologist instead of agitator. Prince Kropotkin raised the wolf on bread and he was a good wolf for five years but one day he strayed among the chickens and immediately became a wolf. I fear the same thing for Jack. It is true we have fed him up on the class struggle. I agree, we have it under his skin, but I don't believe it has soaked thru. We can't deny that his natural bent is toward the study of nature in general, more than it is toward the study of society. I would rather see him follow agricultural work. He grew up in it. It contains no novelty for him. He, I believe would rather study the slaves than the slavery, and the migratory workers are the place for him. I tell you I don't like to see him go into the mines."

Jack listened to all this, but made no direct comment. There were two forces at work in his brain. It was as if simultaneously he beheld two visions. In the one he was opening the stratified pages of the earth's rock bound history and laboriously spelling out the secrets of the world's childhood, and in the other, he saw himself in the midst of a struggling crowd, that was toilsomely working its way hither and thither in the darkness. While among that crowd, there were a few men and women, who were forever straining toward the light. These few, were in the mass but not of the mass. The mass seemed to instinctively prefer the darkness. Perhaps they only moved as with the tide. And yet the few that strained toward the light, sought to climb the heights seemed to have a slight influence on that mass. These few, gave their time, their strength, and in many cases their lives, that the darkness in which the mass moved might become a little lighter, that the thoughts that entered the minds of the mass might be a little clearer, a little happier, a little nobler. He half closed his eyes and leaned back in his chair while Rudolph was speaking. He hardly heard what was said but sat silently watching the vision of the human masses bearing among them a few that were different. For all the world they looked like sheep on a mountain side. A great drab grey mass, with here and there a black speck. But in the human mass the black sheep reacted different from the others. Within them were the souls of eagles. They loved the light, altho their straining toward it seemed almost futile. How pitifully few they were! How few they had been through out the ages, in comparison with the thoughtlessly drifting crowd.

He tried to call them by name, these Haywoods, these Pettibones, these Debses, these Manns, these Liebknechts, Marx, Lassalles, Breshkofskies, Emmets, Browns, Lincolns, Garrisons, Voltaires, Savanno-Rolas, Christs, Gracchi, Cornelias, Ninos, Theresas, Socrates, Spartaci, Solons. What lights they were! What glories centered around the names of these black sheep of history. Of course they had been forced to do what they did by the pressure of their time. If that were true then why did not the pressure equally affect the mass? There was a difference. The black sheep of history were positively heliotropic to [illegible] They were not different [illegible] cally from these variations, whose names have withstood the [illegible] time. They only react slower, and therefore die, and are forgotten. [illegible] and consequently fear the light. He smiled at his decision but he knew that Olive was going into the Mass and he decided that she should not go alone.

These, and kindred thoughts ran through his brain with lightening speed as he leaned back in his camp chair, and mentally reviewed the long line of immortals. After all, he concluded, it is great to be a black sheep. They at least inherit immortality in the brains of those who hate them while they live. The mass had even worshipped some of them after they had killed them. Kersey Graves tells of sixteen crucified saviours. This, too, was wonderful. Perhaps more wonderful than the phenomena of birds and beasts. That nature should have given to mankind this long train of martyrs and prophets of the coming day. He remembered an article he had read in the newspaper. In it was the report of a speech made by Rabbi Wise of Portland, Oregon, in which he said, "the race of God's prophets is not yet extinct." The phrase was as music to his ears. Unconsciously he placed Olive Anderson amongst them. He watched her slender form move far up the shining path of fame. He had no doubt but what she would be a Ninos, a Cornelia, or a Joan of Arc. Of course this was an exaggerated concept. The youthful brain is wont to distort and magnify when under the spell of feminine attraction. It was enough that he beheld her so for it perfected his decision to join her and to walk up the path of truth together.

It must be said however that romance not entirely formed his decision. He carefully counted the costs of being a black sheep and decided that it would be worth the price to suffer during ones own life if by so doing, more joy could be brought to succeeding generatins. The agricultural field was not now a battle ground. The struggle was hottest in the mines, and there was where he would go, and stay until he had learned mining and the miner's needs.

When Rudolph had ceased speaking Jack simply said, "I am going to study the miners and their industry and after that, labor and its problems. I believe that after all man is the most interesting beast in the woods."

"You would have no influence with the miners until the fuzz is off your chin. You could not teach these old birds anything. You are at home among agricultural workers. You understand their psychology. Why not go there?" insisted Rudolph.

"I go where the battle is thickest," Jack retorted. "I may not be able to lead but then there may be a chance to serve, any way there is where I go."

Collins, who had been busily preparing a mulligan over the camp stove, now turned to Rudolph and said. "Say Rudy would you mind going out to see if the boat is alright. I'm afraid that the storm last night may have blown it loose. Any-way, go and see about it, while I get the grub ready for dinner."

"Yeah,! and I'll go and get some wood," announced Jack.

When Rudolph had gone down the hill, Collins said, "If it's any of my business Jack, would you mind telling me what it was that changed your mind? Was it her letter?"

"Yes, that was partly it," Jack agreed, She told me that she could not understand why we stayed in the woods, when men were dragged from their homes, and women and children were caused to suffer because they demanded what was their due. Then I've been thinking about the fact you brought out the other day. When you said that we are only a link in the chain of the human race. And what is more, if we really have a message for the world, and it does any good to tell it, then we should be on the job."

"I knew she would do it," the big man said almost reverently. "When do we start?"

"Just as soon as we get our clothes ready and the stuff disposed of," answered the boy, as he walked out of the cabin, and into the woods.

As soon as Collins was alone in the cabin, he hurriedly opened Jack's suitcase and abstracted the last letter he had received from Olive Anderson, putting it in his inside coat pocket. He then fixed his fire, and, when Rudolph returned he told him to watch the pot while he took a walk out into the forest. He went over the cliff and far back (among the trees) where he sat down upon a log and read the letter.

"My Dear Boy:" it read, "I surely enjoyed your letter. Especially of your descriptions of your camp and of your studies, but more than all did I appreciate your brief mention of the labor struggle now going on in the west.

Shortly after you were here, I received a copy of a paper called "The Appeal to Reason." Perhaps you sent it to me. I do not know. But if you did not send it, or are perhaps unacquainted with it, by all means you should have it. It reads just like you talk.

I cannot understand why they should take men from Colorado to Idaho for a crime they could not possibly have committed. I am following it all carefully and I am amazed at the wickedness going on in this world. I feel like saying that all one has to do is to scratch a human being no matter how civilized and you will find a savage under the skin.

I cannot understand how you can be contented with a quiet woodland life when injustice cries to heaven. But then it may be that you are in the thick of it and do not tell me because I am a woman, who must be [illegible] in ignorance in order to keep sweet.

Soviet Children's Homes Appeal to Mothers

By John Clayton.

PARIS.—"The Russian soviet government is nationalizing the children of Russia. We are taking the children from their homes and placing them, thirty children in each group in special homes. However, we take the children only with the full consent of the parents, and the children are not deprived of the parental influence."

Mme. Kollontai—Comrade Kollontai she is called in Russia—the first woman commissar of Russia and head of the department of child welfare, was speaking to me in Moscow.

More Than Half Children

"Today more than half of the children in the larger towns and cities in Russia are living in state institutions. At first parents were skeptical about our system, but our first homes were so successful that now there is a large waiting list of mothers in all the places where we have these homes. I believe in time every child will be raised in this manner. We have lifted the curse of household slavery from the mothers of the poor."

All For the Children.

"All for the Children," has been the motto of the soviet Russia government during the economic difficulty. How far it has been carried into effect can be seen from the happy, healthy faces of the youngsters one meets everywhere in Moscow.

Many are wearing clothes which passed the beggar stage years ago but so is everyone in Moscow. But they at least are warm and well fed. The soviet government has taken its role of parent seriously. It has found that by providing homes where the kiddies can live in groups of perhaps thirty it not only is better able to feed them and make them warm and comfortable than if they were scattered in individual homes, but it has been able to relieve mothers who work of much of the drugery of home life and permit them to perform the industrial tasks with greater efficiency.

The organization of the communist state is such that every adult, especially under the conditions of hunger and economic breakdown which prevail, is required to do his or her share of useful labor.

At Age of 3.

"The woman who works," said Mme. Kollontai, "cannot do her duty as mother and at the same time accomplish efficient work unless she sacrifices all her time to these two objects, or is given aid in the routine work for her children. That is why we are urging mothers to bring their children into the state group homes when they have attained the age of three. No coercion is used, however, and indeed none is necessary, for the parents are in no way cut off from their little ones. They can see them at any time, and can take them home when and for as long a time as they wish.

"Those for the younger children—to the age of fourteen—are always mixed homes, boys and girls alike. For the older children we have not yet adopted a rule.

No Individual Toys.

"The children grow up in an atmosphere which develops good citizens for a socialist state. There is no attitude of master and child but a comradeship which does the heart good to see. There are no individual toys or property. All is the common possession of the home, and the children soon drop out of the habit of speaking of 'my book' or 'my doll,' using instead 'our toys.'"

In religion the children are left entirely to the discretion of their parents. No religious training is included in their work, but in its place they are taught the essentials of social morals and the fundamentals of natural history.

A Fine Meal.

It was my privilege to have lunch with the children of one of the larger homes one day, and a happier little crew I have never seen anywhere. As for the food, it was the best I have had in Moscow. I got up from the table for the first time since I arrived there feeling that I had all I wanted to eat.

Mme. Kollontai is one of the veterans of the Russian revolutionary movement. About 35 years old, she was educated in the aristocratic Smolny institute in Petrograd—Smolny, around which so much of the history of the revolution has been written. She is well known in the United States, having made two lecture tours through America under the auspices of the left wing of the Socialist party in 1915 and 1916.

The social welfare work, which has for its aims the proper care and development of the children, begins with the mothers themselves before the advent of the babe and continues until the child has attained an age of 16 years.

At this stage the work divides itself into two divisions. The first is for children who remain at home with their parents, the second for those children who live in group homes at state expense.

Care for Children.

The working mother whose child remains in her care is relieved of the responsibility of caring for it during working hours. Kindergartens are provided where the child is looked after, fed, and his education begun. When he has attained an age of 8 years he enters the public schools, and there

RUMINATIONS OF A REBEL

By Tom Clifford.

That a bunch of job seekers such as compose the Democratic (!) Convention at San Francisco is permitted to outline the policies of a nation of 120,000,000 people and select a candidate for President is the height of absurdity. There is not a single delegate at that gathering of politicians actuated by any other desire than to further his own interests politically, with never a thought for the welfare of the nation at large. They have sucessfully played the game so long they imagine it can go on forever. However, they are facing a condition at present that bodes ill for the continuance of their autocratic rule. For the first time in the history of the natin, notwithstanding the strenuous touting of the capitalist press, the public refuses to be enthused and evince not the slightest interest in either the platform or the candidate. Can it be that the truth has at last penetrated the thick skulls of the working class that the declarations of these politicians are mere pretense and they refuse to be longer bunkoed? Let us hope that the apathetic attitude of the masses indicates some serious thinking and that they are about ready to throw these hypocritical dissemblers into the discard. We shall know more about it in November.

To read the scathing dennunciations of profiteering in the newspapers one would naturally presume that these "conservators of the public welfare" are themselves content with ordinary profits. Not so, my unsophisticated friend. While they are vociferously shouting "stop thief" to draw your attention away from their own rascality they are mercilessly gouging the public for all the traffic will bear. Advertising rates have been boosted 300 per cent and the retail price has been doubled. The Sunday papers, carrying practically nothing but advertisements, are foisted on the public at the "modest" price of 10c. It takes some nerve, not to say business finesse, to hold up the advertisers for the limit and then induce the rube readers to come gayly cavorting across with three times the cost of production. Believe me, when it comes to profiteering the sugar profit monger in his wildest dreams never gets within hailing distance of ye virtuous daily newspaper.

A writer in the Saturday Evening Post deplores the vast differentiation in articles in common use, and urges standardization in the interest of economy. What peculiar mental slant some people have! Here is a fellow citing a wide spread evil in present day society, apparently ignorant of the fact that waste is a cardinal virtue of the profit system. He appears to labor under the delusion that articles are made for use instead of being produced for profit. It is the enormous waste in production through duplication of effort that forms the working basis of capitalism. It throws open the field to unlimited competition, with profit as the dominant incentive, and a "go-as-you-pleas," without regard for the welfare of society as a whole, is the disastrous result. I suggest that the literary gentleman take a course of reading in economics.

I note that a capitalist controlled college down east has conferred a degree upon Gen. Pershing. I presume the reason, therefor is, distinguished services rendered to the master class of this country in the World War. He did his part in saving their financial bacon; hence the acknowledgement. They believe, with Sammy Gompers, in "rewarding their friends and punishing their enemies." Pershing, their friend, is decorated and given a degree, and Debs, their enemy, is sent to prison. Some day when the working class garner some sense, the exponent of justice and humanity will receive the laurels.

Harding and Coolidge, Republican candidates for President and Vice President, are working overtime in attempting to convince the public that they stand for the "glorious institutions of our fathers," etc. They imagine that such meaningless catch-phrases have the same potency as in other years. What the people now demand is an institution that will "toot." These gentlemen are due for a rude awakening. Once a politician always a politician.

The difference between a vagabond and "free" Americans of the proletarian type is that the latter is somewhat surer of a supper and bed, but has no real freedom, while the former is per chance, not so sure of these two requisites of a continued and happy existence but has freedom to burn. The vagabond is no one's slave—which we take to be one of the delights of vagabondage. When he becomes one he ceases to be a vagabond. The "free" wage-slave ceases to be a slave only when he becomes a vagabond. Of course one in a million or so climb out of the slave class into a "higher" one of exploiter of slaves but his class is so small as to be practically negible.

If the American wage-slave should ever awaken to the facts of his true economic condition he would relieve himself of the greatest burden of false opinions that ever a slave class was imbued with. True to his political, school and church training, the average American wage-slave believes himself to be the incarnation of freedom. He does not know that the essence of liberty is economic in character. He has not learned that as long as he can earn his living only by the consent of an exploiter whose ownership of industry gives him the power of witholding a part of the product, he is virtually a slave, tho no chains bind his limbs. To be allowed to work, which means to live, only with the consent of another, who reaps a toll by giving that consent—can any one imagine a slavery more real than this?

Ah, but the American worker can quit his master! Sure, he can quit, and then he can immediately hunt for another one—unless he has the courage to become a vagabond. And few have, all initiative having been bred out of us by our capitalist training.

The American worker is sadly lacking in his economic education. While he has been absorbing the teaching of the ruling class, filling his stunted brain with erroneous teachings cunningly calculated to keep him mentally and physically enslaved, the development of industry has forged a condition wherein the masses of mankind are mercilessly exploited while their opportunities for emancipation by "rising" out of the slave class have become practically non-existent.

It is high time the American proletarian realized his true condition. It is time he quit kidding himself with the idea that he is a free man while every attribute of slavery is his. He must realize that between vagabondage and bondage there lies only the thin thread of PERMITTED employment — at a slave's wage, just enough to keep him more or less fit to work and reproduce a new generation of slaves to take his place in the shop, mill and mine.

Only in the learning of this lesson and the application of Communist knowledge and tactics to this problem can the American wage worker lift himself out of the serfdom of today and thereby abolish forever the system which creates out of humanity a mass of enslaved and exploited workers on the one hand, and a class of idle, vicious and parasitical shirkers on the other.

Principles vs Personalities

The candidacy of Eugene V. Debs upon the Socialist Party platform will prove one test of the revolutionary character of the socialist and communist elements in the United States. No circumstance in the history of socialism in this country is comparable to it. Debs' spiritual leadership of the Movement heretofore is unquestioned. His standing in the Movement, due to his personality, is unique: no other individual has ever been held in such high esteem — and it may be said that no other party member has been called upon to make such sacrifices as he. The very circumstance of his being now in prison for advocating pro-labor causes, lends to him an added veneration freely tendered by all.

Debs' acceptance of the nomination by the Socialist Party was based upon the false belief that it would tend toward unity of the revolutionists and the moderate or reform socialists. Perhaps nothing else would have centered upon the platform and brought into such sharp relief before the minds of socialists the contrasting character of Revolutionary Socialism and reform socialism as his accepture of the nomination tendered him by the Berger and Hillquit reformers at New York. Instead of uniting these opposing groups, his candidacy will on the other hand, prove a wedge which will drive them further apart as they logically should be.

Human mass endeavors are naturally bound up with individuals, who leave upon these movements the marks of their personality and character. Such strong characters become a part of the movement in the minds of multitudes. They become one as it were, and often the attachment which binds the mass to the movement also binds the mass to the individual. Such a one had Debs become.

There are times however, when a sharp distinction must be made between such leaders and the Socialist Movement; times when they become antagonistic and to follow the leader is to betray the principle. Such a circumstance has been brought about by Debs' acceptance of the nomination for the Presidency upon a platform of reactionary and reform socialism. The choice must now be made between supporting this traitorous brand of socialism thru voting for Debs and refusing such endorsement. Many socialists of more or less "red" variety have tendered their vote to Debs as a mark of respect for his high qualities and his long fought battle for labor fully as much as they have for socialism. Declare as we might that a vote for Debs is a vote for socialism, we know it was not always true. Even less now, can it be claimed that a vote for Debs in 1920 is a vote for socialism, unless the socialism of Schiedeman, Ebert and Noske is meant. The socialism of the revolutionists of the world is not represented in the platform upon which Debs has consented to stand even while repudiating it. We are confronted with a clear case of Principles vs Personality. How many thousand times have we said "no socialist will sacrifice principle for personality?" The question now is, DO WE MEAN IT? Are we going to stand with those and for those who have betrayed our principles merely because a personality has consented to that betrayal? No, we will not. Instead will we work the harder for that socialism which means the emancipation of the workers rather than their betrayal by vicious reformist Socialism.

Poland's Collapse

The forecast of Colonel Roustam Bek, that Poland would soon collapse before the supriority of the Red advance to be followed by a political and economic revolution, seems about to be realized.

Such news dispatches as have appeared, and they have been very few (in line with the policy of the capitalist press to publish nothing favorable to Russia) have all borne tidings of the retreat of the Poles on the whole of the 600 mile front.

"Only the establishment of a Soviet in Warsaw can stop the Russian advance", is Colonel Bek's statement. That he spoke with knowledge and authority is seen in the activities of Polish representatives at London, who, with alarm, have petitioned the League of Nations, thru its secretary, Sir Eric Drummond, to seek means to end the war. The development of grave internal dangers coupled with the crumbling of her battle front have filled her leaders with the gravest apprehensions.

That the defeat of Poland will be followed by revolution and the establishment of Sovietism, seems, in the light of recent European history the logical outcome. The miseries of the people, headed high by the imperialistic war of her land hungry bourgeoisie may foment such economic and political turmoil as only the soviet system can rectify.

While the drive on the Polish front has become one for "safety first", the Polish government Liberty bond loan in the U. S. A. proceeds at a snail's pace. If the situation in Cleveland is a criterion of the national drive, then indeed is it beset with difficulties. Sentiment for and against the loan among Cleveland Poles is about evenly divided. There are as many cheers for a "Soviet Poland" as for a Polish Bourgeois Democracy. The committee in charge of the local drive, altho strongly supported by a widely read Polish daily has had extremely hard sledding. This is partly due to the fact that the priests of the Polish churches have refused to bless the loan with their benediction, altho repeatedly urged by the committee to appeal to the congregations to invest in loans. It appears that the priests have failed to hear the voice of God in the cry of the Polish bourgeoisie for munitions to carry on an imperialistic war.

The investment of $59,000,000, the amount of Liberty bond sales in the U. S., in French munitions and war supplies has raised a storm of protest. Many purchasers of these bonds claim that they invested with the understanding that their money was to help in the reconstruction of Poland in supplying machinery and aiding the suffering people. Now to learn that it was used to buy munitions to carry on an imperialistic war, has justly incensed them.

The Red's advance is reflected in the slowing up of the loan drive here among the Polish business interests. They apparently know a failure when they see it. Last week the committee sent out urgent invitations to 700 business men to attend a meeting for the purpose of putting the loan over the top. A mere handful were in attendance. When asked to sign up for bonds, they replied, "oh, we are not Polish, we are Ukrainians". Since Ukrainia is now an ally of Poland in the war against Russia, this may be considered a sample of the patriotism that animates the bourgeoisie.

A statement by the secretary of the Cleveland committee in charge carries a significant bit of information. Commenting upon the slowness of the loan drive, secretary Dangel is quoted as saying, "Checking up our more than half a million dollars of sales shows that the greatest amount of Polish patriotism has come from the ranks of the wage earners."

Sure. The Polish bourgeoisie are the same kind of cattle as those of other nationalities. They regard the workers as merely the means by which to enrich themselves without any risk, financial or otherwise. It is not enough that the Polish workers should pay the blood cost—the financial burden also must rest upon those who are so fortunate as to escape slaughter. It's the same old capitalist game of "you fight and pay—I'll profit" which the ruling class has always played upon their dupes.

Church and Neutrality

"The priest must take no active part in industrial strife but must preach peace always", wrote the Pope.

Preaching peace in the midst of fierce industrial, class war is about the most useless function a human being can perform. To ignore the struggles of the masses for bread and liberty against the inheritors of the earth and the power therein, is to betray the masses and to strengthen the power of tyranny. The church which refuses to partake of the struggles and problems of the great suffering and exploited masses of the world is deserving of the condemnation of the masses and is fit only as a means to prove the utter inadequacy and unfitness of the church as at present organized to function in the interests of the disinherited.

As a matter of fact, the Church is not, nor can be neutral in the class struggle. "Ye who are not for me are against me," applies with truth to the Church in the class struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie. There is no neutral ground. Between robbery and Right there is no compromise. The Church is either for the workers and against the exploiters or it is for the exploiters against the workers.

Up to the present time it has, as an institution, stood squarely for the exploiters, tho at times attempting to camouflage its position with a mantle of assumed neutrality. Neutrality in such instance is a lie which serves only to convince that growing throng already outside the influence of the church of its innate depravity and capitalistic leanings.

As the class struggle grows fiercer, assumes more well defined lines and takes on more and more the character of open physical conflict under the pressure of terrific economic conditions, then, will the Church be forced to throw off its cloak of neutrality and stand forth either as the apostle and spokesmen of Labor or as the filthy harlot of capitalism. It cannot evade being drawn into the vortex of the industrial whirlpool that is now engulfing the world and all social institutions.

Neutrality in the class struggle is even now a lie, let those who claim it be know for what they are.

LABOR

Out of chaos, out of murk
I arose and did my works.
While the ages changed and sped
I was toiling for my bread.
Underneath my sturdy blows
Forests fell and cities arose,
And the hard, reluctant soil
Blossomed richly from my toil.
Palaces and temples grand
Wrought I with my cunning hand.
Rich indeed was my reward—
Stunted soul, and body scarred
With the marks of scourge and rod.
I, the tiller of the sod,
From the cradle to the grave
Shambled through the world—a slave!
Crushed and trampled, beaten cursed;
Serving best, but served the worst;
Starved and cheated, gouged and spoiled,
Still I builded, still I toiled
Undernourished, underpaid
In the world myself had made.

Up from slavery I rise,
Dreams and wonder in my eyes,
After brutal ages past,
Coming to my own at last.
I was slave—but I am free!
I was blind—but I can see!
I, the builder—I, the maker,
Slave and serf and clod no longer,
Know my strength—and who is stronger?
I am done with ancient frauds,
Ancient lies and ancient gods —
All the sham is overthrown,
I shall take and keep my own,
Unpassioned, unafraid,
Master of the World I've made.

—Berton Braley.

Non-deportable Aliens

The above title might well fit the following poem in which Miss Fischer expresses what is undoubtedly the viewpoint of thousands of socialists, in whose "Mayflower" blood still beats a rebel pulse. It is taken from The Freeman.

KINFOLK—1620 AND 1920.

By Katherine Fisher

In the house of my kinfolk I am an alien.
Our Mayflower blood, once heretical,
rebel,
Flows now in their veins, orthodox,
Tory.
Only in mine the old freedom
Beats the new barriers.

My mother-tongue in the mouth of my kinfolk
To me is foreign,
Praising law perverted to tyranny,
Condemning a juster order
Because justice is strange, involves changes

But native to my heart is the speech
Of the Italian weaver on strike,
Exhorting his comrades.
Tho I understand not his words,
I understand him.

And closer to me than sisters
Are Jewish girls, orient-eyed and voluble,
Garment-workers, loyally standing together,
Daughters, like me, of a pilgrim line,
Of a people persecuted, exiled, pioneers of liberty.

With these I am at home;
In the house of my kinfolk I am an
alien.

BETTER CONDITIONS MAKE FOR MORE PRODUCTION.

FARGO, N. D.— Contrary to predictions of mine operators that the new mining code enacted by the farmers' legislature in 1919 would cut production and drive many mines out of business, through the eight-hour provision, the actual production of the largest mines in the state has doubled and the small mines have all increased their output.

These facts are taken from the reports of an investigation by John Hanwell, mine inspector.

Mr. Hanwell declares the mining force of the state is shrinking, but says the men are so well satisfied with the better working conditions brought about by the enforcement of the new law that they take greater interest in their work.

THE WHITE TERROR IN HUNGARY

By Ernst Levy, European [illegible] Correspondent [illegible] Federated Press.

I.

VIENNA, May 31—(By Mail)—The downfall of proletarian dictatorship in Hungary, caused by the fact that the Red Troops had been defeated in open battle by the Rumanians whom counter revolution had called in to help, was followed, after a short democratic intermezzo, by the first period of White Terror. It lasted until the Rumanians evacuated Budapest on November 16th, 1919, and was characterized by the strange feature that the Rumanian troops were able to give the disarmed Hungarian workers some protection against the raging vengeance of the Bourgeoisie and especially of the Hungarian officers.

The second period of White Terror in Hungary is stamped by the personality of the Supreme Council's representative in Budapest, Sir George Clark, who, with unrivalled hypocrisy, played into the hands of the oppressing classes every constitutional and diplomatic advantage for enabling them to go on with the White Terror on a larger scale. This period lasts until the first meeting of the National Assembly and the election of Horthy as Governor on March 1, 1920, and differs from the previous period by a considerable increase, and above all, the systematization of White Terror. All political acts of this time, elections for the National Assembly, and the election of the governor by the National Assembly—may all be considered as functions of this Terror.

The third period lasts from March 1 until the signing of the treaty of Neuilly, expected shortly. This period is marked by serious attempts to deny and conceal the facts of the White Terror. Instead of decreasing, the terror shows a tendency to grow.

Yet the appeals of the tortured Hungarian workers have reached their comrades in western countries and the latter have, after all, been strong enough to extract from their respective governments the semblance of a protest against the terrible methods of Budapest. It was at the end of March that the Hungarian premier, Dr. Simonyi—Semadam, read to the National Assembly, a letter from the president of the Hungarian peace delegation, Count Albert Apponyi calls upon the country to reestablish legal conditions, warning it that the deeds of terror committed had changed the mood of Paris, not unfriendly towards Hungary in the beginning, to its reverse. He said the continuation of terror would but definitely estrange from Hungary those occupied territories for which the Hungarian peace delegation had demanded a plebiscite.

This letter, which seems to have been sent by wish of the Supreme Council, brought no results whatsoever. The White Terror went on as before, and even seemed to increase daily. Meanwhile the endeavors to throw sand in the foreign peoples' eyes were intensified. Impudent invitations followed for those workers' organizations who had tried to plead the cause of the victims with the present rulers of Hungary, to come and see that there was no such thing as a White Terror. These invitations were accepted—a fact which rather disconcerted the lords of Hungary. First came the delegates of the Socialist party of Italy, Alceste Della Seta and Arturo Vella, both of them members of the Italian parliament, who reached Hungary in the last week of April. Then there came, led by Colonel Wedgwood, member of parliament and leader in the Independent Labor Party, four delegates of the British Trade Unions: William Harris, Fred W. Jowett, G. H. Stuart Bunning, and Joseph B. Williams. They have just returned from Budapest.

The Toiler has received copies of "The Hungarian News", an information paper published by the Hungarian Socialist Information Bureau at Stockholm for the socialist press of the world.

Concerning conditions now extant in Hungary under the rule of the bourgeoise after their victory over the communists, depicting the awfulness of the White Terror we reprint a few excerpts.

TO THE WORKING CLASS OF ENGLAND.

COMRADES:—

You know how the Hungarian socialists are being treated by the White Guard government of the Hungarian bourgeoisie. During the last two months 127 legal murders were executed,—other than numbers of socialists illegal and secretly killed.

Twelve thousand working men are interned, without sufficient food. cover, clothes, horribly treated, tortured, flogged, their eyes struck out.

In several cases prisoners have been maimed, burried alive, and stabbed to death with bayonets.

In spite of those horrors an English burgess is vile enough to tell his superiors that there is no terror in Hungary. In these days corpses are fished up from the Danube every day, Hohler sends the "highcommissioner" a report which unmistakeably proves that there exists a strong solidarity between the English bourgeoisie and that of Hungary.

The English delegation of workers which has already left will soon be able to ascertain if terror exists or not.

GRIEVIOUS DOCUMENTS.

Budapest, May 15th, 1920.

A Hungarian paper edited by social-democrats in Vienna publishes the following documents:

In November the police got a report that three socialists had been killed in the military prison. — At the barracks of Kelensold two corpses were found which were killed by the officers and then hidden. — The paper also is in possession of a document which undoubtedly proves that the manufacturer, Menalt, was buried alive by the Danube detachment. By some bandits also six comrades—all of them honest and brave combatants—were murdered.

All those occurances were reported to the police. However, without any result whatever. No inquiry was started, and Captain Pronay is still an officer of the national army and Horthy's best friend.

120 [illegible] PROSECUTED.

Budapest, May 14th, 1920.

The furiousness of the Hungarian executioners does not diminish. On 12th inst. a communist process was opened against some comrades charged with complicity in the execution of some counter-revolutionaries at Szolnok. More than 120 persons were prosecuted, and possibly the scandalous Hungarian "justice" now will sentence several of them to death.

A POWERFUL PROTEST AGAINST THE WHITE TERROR IN HUNGARY

Budapest, May 15th, 1920.

The social-democratic post official, Oskar Levai is in Budapest charged with murder.

Levai belonged previously to the Red Army, and then he had to bring into execution all death warrants against soldiers of his detachment. Because of those "crimes" he is now treated as a murderer. It is proved that he acted on compulsion, but this fact is not at all mentioned by the prosecutor at court.

The post officials of Germany, Italy, France, and Belgium have by wire informed the Hungarian government that the telegraphic and telephone communications with Hungary will be broken, in case Levai will be executed.

THE TREATING OF THE HUNGARIAN CHILDREN.

Budapest, May 16th, 1920.

Eighteen persons in Budapest were recently dragged out of their homes, and then quite disappeared.

A paper states that nearly all proletarian children in Hungary are shut out from the charity institutions and even from the places for feeding arranged by the foreign missions. The Hungarian workers' society for the protection of children, which had nothing to do with politics at all, was dissolved without any reason being given.

EXECUTIONS WILL BE DONE IN THE COUNTRY.

Budapest, May 16th, 1920.

The police court of Budapest got a secret order from the government in which it is charged to bring some of the communists now prisoned — those who surely are to be sentenced to death—into the country, so that the execution may not be easily known among the public.

THE LEARNED ARE PERSECUTED.

Budapest, May 16th, 1920.

The Hungarian Academy of Sciences has at its last meeting expelled the following members, well known in all Europe:

Oscar Asboth (Slavic philology), Bernhard Alexander (philosophy aestetics), Emanuel Beke (mathematics), Ladislaus Eber (art history), and Adolph Lendl (zoology), because they did not leave their posts when communists were in power Further, the faculty of philosophy at the university of Budapest refused the former popular deputies Joseph Pogany, George Lukacs the former section leader of the educational commissariat, Bela Forgarasi their doctor's degree, although Hungarian Law does not authorize denial of doctor's certificates as a punishment for common crimes.

British Labor Demands Self-determination for Ireland

SCARBOROUGH, England— Full self-determination for Egypt and India and a just settlement of the Irish question were demanded June 25 by the British Labor party conference in session here. The Irish plank called for the establishment of a constituent assembly to determine the form of government to be adopted by Ireland, without any condition or limitation imposed by Great Britain, and the complete withdrawal of the army of occupation.

At the sessions thus far held, there unanimously passed resolutions calling for revision of the peace treaties, for recognition of the soviet government of Russia, abstention from direct or indirect attacks upon Russia, full freedom of trade with her. The abolition of secret treaties and control of food and raw materials by an international body were demanded

The conference decided to send a joint deputation composed of members of the Labor party executive committee and the parliamentary committee of the Trades Union Congress to call upon Premier Lloyd George and insist upon the necessity of immediate peace with Russia and the lifting of the blockade. The committee was also instructed to lay before him the report of the Labor party delegates who have been investigating the White Terror in Hungary.

The British Socialist party delegation urged the calling of a national conference for the purpose of organizing a general strike; and Robert Smillie, who received a tremendous ovation, swept the whole meeting by his declaration that something more than a deputation to the Premier would be necessary to carry out the demands of the conference. Should the deputation be rebuffed, he said, a special conference should at once consider plans for a nationwide withdrawal of labor.

RED ARMY RELEASES MINERS

MOSCOW—(via Helsingfors)— The Labor Council has decided to mobilize all miners between the ages of 18 and 50. All miners will be released from the army and transferred to the mines.

The Soviet government has recognized the newly formed republic of Eastern Caucasus and its provisional government. Diplomatic and commercial relations are soon to be opened.

The "work week" in Belashow resulted in a triumph. During the week 22 river boats were repaired. The metal workers have voluntarily prolonged their working day to ten hours.

FIND TAYLOR "GUILTY"

SAN FRANCISCO—John C. Taylor, fourth Communist to be tried in Oakland, has been found guilty. After eight hours deliberation, the jury finally agreed that he advocated force and violence. This, in spite of the fact that Secretary of Labor Wilson has ruled that the platform of the Communist Labor Party roes not advocate force and violence, and that membership in that organization is not sufficient cause to deport an alien. Taylor was sentenced Monday, June 21 and will appeal.

Eleven "Criminal Syndicalists" are serving sentence in San Quentin, two are out on bail and one is awaiting the transfer. Of these, not one has actually committed any act of violence. John Craig of Sacramento was sentenced to five years after pleading guilty. J. E. Dolson's retrial has been postponed to some time in September. J. E. Snyder was to come up July 1 in Oakland.

All the deportation cases have been dismissed, due to the efforts of Frederick Dubovsky, attorney.

PALMER'S CASES STILL FALLING

NEW YORK—Many of the raided 100% perfect cases of the Department of Justice are dwingling to zero. The Department of Labor has notified Harry Weinberger, Max Gendlin, David Orlick, Lona Chenovsky, Jonnio Lapedus, that their warrants of arrest have been concelled and their bonds released. Many of these had originally been arrested without warrants, and warrants obtained later; some had been beaten up in the raids.

In the case of Voto Mariani, long held on the state charge of criminal anarchy, arrangements have been made whereby he was discharged without bail on that charge, and ordered deported to Italy as an anarchist. This is just what Mariani desired. He will be deported shortly.

Carl Voss and Emile Foltman who had long asked to be deported to Germany, and who had been kept a long time in jail, have finally been deported to Germany while Thomas Martinez who fought deportation to Mexico on the ground that his life would be in danger, has been released on bail.

Old King Canute

Lived ages ago
He had so many courtiers
Who praised him so much
That he thought at last
He could do
ANYTHING!
So he set up his throne
On the shore of the sea
When the tide was low
And said: "Go BACK, sea!"
"For I am KING!"
Then the tide turned
And the little waves
Were coming NEARER,
But old King Canute
Kept waving his scepter
Over them.
Saying, "I command you, waves,
NOT to ADVANCE!"
Then one little wave first
Sneaked up one side,
And another little wave
Sneaked up on the other,
Paying no attention to the words
Of the King.
For they were drawn
By a POWER
Greater than Old King Canute!
High and invisible
The call of the MOON
Kept pulling them up the sand,
And before very long
The king had to run
For his LIFE
And it isn't on record
Whether his throne was saved,
Or engulfed in the flood.
It all depended, I guess,
On whether he MOVED

Somebow or other
I can't help thinking
Of old King Canute,
When I see our rulers
Waving the bills and injunctions
Over the railroads,
Saying complancently:
"Go back STRIKES!
Don't any of you workers
DARE TO ADVANCE!
For WE are government!"
And first one little strike
Sneaks up on one side
And another little strike
Comes on the other side,
But still the senate waves
Its mighty scepter
Over the switchmen.
Saying: "Go back! Go back!"
But THEY are drawn by a power
Higher than government,
Planted ages ago
In the spirit of MAN
And it isn't on record yet
If even the mighty throne
Of CONGRESS
Is to be saved

Entente's Support Strengthens Russia

of the old land proprietors. I assure you that at the present time the peasants not only accept us, but they love us, and that is a source of great power. They feel that they amount to something in our state. For instance, our president, Kalenine is a peasant of the Province of Twerska, who continues to own his own piece of land and returns to it frequently. It is the peasants who now enable us to resist Poland, and who will enable us to resist Poland as long as necessary.

Bourgeois Rally to New Regime.

"That brings to me the third great service that the Entente has rendered us. It is bringing to our aid a great part of the former Bourgeois and Intellectuals. In permitting Poland to start against us an entirely useless war, the Entente persuaded a great number of our former adversaries to rally to us. This factory manager, this General, that engineer, began to see that we were actually the only force in Russia able to resist the foreign assailants. If Poland fights long enough you will see every one in Russia united with us."

"But how about your reverses on the Ukrainian front?" Krassin was asked.

"Fine business," he answered. "Who ever saw Russian ready at a given moment? We always begin by getting beaten. Then, as soon as we have learned our lesson, we come back in marvelous style. Poland has not been sincere with us. We have proposed peace on several occasions. Her Nationalist Government pretended it wished to negotiate, but all the while was preparing the offensive ordained by the Entente."

"But the Poles maintain it is the Russians who lack sincerity," the interviewer remarked.

"That is untrue," affirmed Krassin. "What do you think we ask of Poland? We are delighted at her independence, for which the Polish people fought so long and so heroically. Even if we are fighting her we do not wish at all to destroy Poland. However, Poland under one pretext or another wishes to continue the war. At present it is a question of the Ukraine. However, from December of last year up to March of this year we were proposing peace to Poland, and we would have accepted a proposition for the withdrawal of both armies from the Ukraine and for a plebiscite.

"Then there was the story of Borisor, which shows in tangible manner the bad faith of the Polish government. It demanded that the peace pouparlers take place at Borisor. It did not wish any armistice except at the spot where peace was to be discussed. Borisor was the most vulnerable spot on the Polish front and at this time the Poles were preparing their offensive against Kiev. We proposed all sorts of places for meeting but they refused. They would go only to Borisor. We refused.

"Above all we continue to wish for peace, for continuation of war hinders our economic recovery. We can with our present resources keep up the war for years without being beaten, but that will increase the burden of privations which we have so long borne. That is all the Entente accomplishes in throwing the Poles against us. For that country were it not for the aid of the manufacturers of munitions and arms would not think of fighting us on its own resources. But despite our privations the Entente obtains a result which is only negative —it reconciles with us a great part of our former adversaries in Russia.

"On the other hand the people of other nations, and especially France, deceive themselves in believing that we wish to carry on propaganda in other countries. There are men among us who believed that Soviet Russia could endure only through a world revolution. The events of the last few years have clearly proved that the Soviet regime can endure in the midst of a world of capitalist Governments. We now accept this state of things and our engagements with foreign states are sacred."

I for one am going to Colorado this summer and learn the truth about all this, if I have to go barefoot, ha, ha."

The rest of the letter dealt with personal matter relating to her school work, and other common places which need not be recorded here.

When he returned to the cabin Collins wrote the following note.

"My Dear Mis Anderson:—

I am glad to notice that you have entered into a correspondence with our friend, Jack Thurston. I feel that your words have inspired him to greater and nobler efforts in behalf of humanity.

The boy has a wonderful mind, and will grow up to be a power in the world, especially if he has some one to spur him on. Already they have brought a wonderful effect. He has dedicated himself to the cause of human [illegible]. Greatfully and sincerely,

Basis of Free Government.

Robins said three fundamental principles underlaid free government—"Americanism," as he persisted in calling it. He named them as:

Religious freedom, political freedom and the right of private property and economic freedom in industry. The audience appeared to believe that the rose would smell just as sweet under another name as "Americanism". Perhaps that was because they were mostly Internationalists. Just what he meant by economic freedom was rather cloudy but in answer to a question, he stated that "some American workers receive less than they produce and some receive more, but if a majority believe they are not getting justice and refuse to change the system, they have only themselves to blame."

Robins favors the exploitation of the workers as long as the workers don't object. But if they do object we would their objections to take a perfectly legal course, not at varience to the rules of the capitalist political game.

Robins favors the ballot and its freely permitted use as the proper method to institute all changes in government. He is violently against the use of force, but when the point was raised by a questioner as to what steps should be taken when legal means were overruled by governmental use of violence, he admitted that under such conditions, the use of force is necessary.

That Robins' audience was composed largely of socialists and communists was evident the minute questions were allowed. Here are some of the questions and answers.

How should the war debt be paid? By the profiteers.

Would you release Eugene V. Debs if you had the power? Yes, Debs was guilty according to the law but for political expediency I would not have sent him to prison. He is more powerful for wrong in jail than out. That the audience frankly disagreed with Robins statement, that Debs was guilty was evident by the applause that greeted his name.

What do you think of the action of the New York Legislature in ousting the five socialists? It was the most un-American action in the political history of the country.

Why should not the American workers do what the Russians have done to re-establish free speech in this country? The conditions are different. The will of the majority has not been thrust aside like it was in Russia. This answer brought forth a round of protests. How about our two socialist councilmen? How about our socialist school director? the audience shouted, referring to the action of the local Chamber of Commerce in directing the ousting of socialist officials in Cleveland during the war. How about Albany and Berger, they answered back.

Do you think our soldiers should have been sent into Siberia and do you favor the blockade of medicines and hospital supplies from America? I was always against the sending of American troops into Siberia. It was an act in violation of our historic American policy. I favor the sending of medicines to Russia.

A Butting of Heads Against Stone.

To one who has read "Raymond Robins' own Story" of the Russian Revolution, listening to his speech is like reading for the second time the concluding chapter of that cleverly written and intensely interesting book. Robins is one among the army of intellectual liberals who has enlisted in the futile effort to turn back the tide of financial and industrial evolution. His philosophy is one in which the underlying economic forces which rule human society do not exist. He is battleing for that which has forever vanished from the face of a capitalistically ruled world. He is seeking a renaissance of an age that is past, utterly unknowing of the principles of economic evolution. Robins does not know that the principles of "Americanism" have been cast aside by the ruling class, not because it is "wicked" and soulless, but because the raging class struggle which has developed with the intensification of the industrial processes, creating two utterly opposed classes, necessitates the extinguishing of popular liberties if the present ruling class is to survive.

It is no mere coincidence that liberals such as Robins are allowed the freedom which would be denied any class which really threatened the power of the ruling class. Their pitiful pleas for the return of a dead age may well be listened to and tolerated by the ruling class. The Garys, the Morgans, the Guggenheims know that the processes of industry and the social system will not be turned backward—and a little freedom is fine bait for some fish which might be hard to land without a little playing.

No, we take it that Missess Free Speech and Free Assemblage will not be allowed in company of the rude proletarians and communists on Cleveland's Public Square—unchaperoned by the City Club by permission of the Chamber of Commerce.

Hie ye, fair Damsels, to your Nunnery behind the portals of the Chamber of Commerce! But if you are coming out on parade each Saturday noon as the City Club promises, we shall be present and shall see if there dwells not a sly twinkle in the corners of your eyes.

We suggest that our readers may learn a great deal about Russia from Robins' book which can be had for $1.50 by addressing The Toiler.

U. S. LIFTS COMMERCIAL BLOCKADE AGAINST SOVIET RUSSIA

The Wilson administration, due to the insistence of American manufacturers and exporters, officially lifted the American commercial blockade of Soviet Russia on July 7th. That the lifting of the blockade, which has been responsible for the starvation and deaths of thousands of innocent women and children in Russia is the direct result of an accepted basis of trade relations between Great Britain and Russia, is now apparent in the reports of Russian delegations on their way to England for the purpose of preparing for the resumption of trade. Merchants here have no desire to see the rich field of Russian commerce invaded solely by the astute British.

The authorization for the resumption of trade between American exporters and Russian carries with it no recognition of the Soviet government. True to its hypocritical character, the Wilson administration seeks to perpetuate the idea of a difference between trade relations and "recognition". It will probably maintain the fiction to the last moment of the administration's term of office. But the Soviets have little to lose from non-recognition. What they want is locomotives which the Baldwin Locomotive Works are ready to supply by the hundred and the machinery, medicines and other necessities needful in the reconstruction of Russia's civil and economic life. American manufacturers have these supplies ready for delivery, they have been waiting and pleading with the State Department for months to allow them clearance papers for shiploads of these products. The government has withheld consent until the Red Army battered down the last hope of capitalism to reestablish itself in Russia — the Polish offensive. With the Polish Army in rout, the government must accede to the logic of events and permit the beginning of trade.

That the whole world stands ready to trade with Russia now that the United States and England have consented, is accepted. Scandinavia especially has desired to trade with Russia for many months, but the fear of the Allies has compelled her to take no offensive step. Italy has already, so it is reported, sent cargoes to Russia in exchange for Russian goods. It is not likely that other nations will follow the stupid policy of the Wilson administration, but will allow full freedom of passenger traffic and mails to Russia followed shortly by official government recognition of the Soviet government.

The resumption of trade relations with the world is the greatest victory for Sovietism. In spite of the terrible handicaps of an economic and political revolution, preceded by a war which reaped a toll of 6,000,000 men; of counter revolution and attacks against her by the Entente allies; with a worn out, destroyed economic and industrial machine to which difficulty was added a blockade of all her ports, the Soviet government, the government of the Russian workers and peasants, has survived it all for two terrible years. With an indomitable courage it has beaten its enemies on every side, and has won the confidence of the masses of Russia. The opening of trade relations is a tacit acceptance of the strength of the Soviets.

Every revolutionist may hail with joy the establishment of these potential relations between Russia and the capitalist nations. They mean the ending of many terrors that have beset and hindered the development of the true Communist State, chief among which are the hunger and dearth of medicines, and the lack of machinery. With these supplied, will Sovietism be strengthened and the power of the Revolution be multiplied.

Hail to the Revolution. Hail to Russia, victor over capitalism!

Proclamation to the Workers of All Countries to Stop White Terror.

The complete text of the call for an international boycott of Hungary for the purpose of forcing the White Guard Government of that country to cease its terrible persecutions of Socialists and labor leaders, issued by the International Federation of Trade Unions from its headquarters in Amsterdam on June 3, is found in a copy of Het Volk, the Dutch Socialist organ. Late reports from Vienna say that the boycott, which went into effect June 20, is being carried out by Austrian, Jugoslav and Polish railroad men and telegraph and postal employes and is fairly effective. The text of the call, which has only been briefly quoted from in the cable dispatches, reads:

"To the workers of all countries:

"The International Federation of Trade Unions has, decided to boycott Hungary, beginning Sunday, June 20, and to put a stop to all traffic with that country.

"It is nearly a year since the socalled order-loving elements in Hungary got possession of the Government. From that moment on, the labor movement there has been exposed to an oppression and persecution the like of which has never been seen in the history of the labor movement, and which actually exceeds the horrors in the Czaristic Russia that has been overthrown.

"Mere membership in a trade union that is nonclerical is enough to cause one to be thrown into jail, and an anonymous denunciation is sufficient to have a person kidnapped and locked up in the internment camps.

"Already at the beginnig of the current year there were 9,000 men and women in the concentration camp at Hajmaster, 4,000 at Ospel, 2,400 at Zalaegerszeg, 2,000 at Eger, 3,000 at Cegled and 2,000 at Komaron Sandberg. Altogether there were some 50,000 men and women locked up. The jails in the cities are overflowing, the prisoners and the interned men are exposed to the most horrible and refined cruelties; at the beginning of this year 5,000 workers had already been executed. Thousands and thousands have been murdered by bands of officers without any form of law. Other thousands have perished of hunger and illness. The reactionary detachments of officers are all powerful. He who falls into their hands is lost. Their victims are martyrized and slain. There are cases well authenticated by sworn witnesses of unlucky wretches being scalped alive, of others whose arms and legs were broken, of others who were forced to consume offal, of others who were emasculated or similarly multilated, and of others who were compelled to practice canibalism.

"Husbands and fathers have been tortured and killed under the very eyes of their wives and children. Women and girls have been outraged before the eyes of their husbands and fathers. Every day men and women of the fighting working class disappear, and are only found as corpses, after having been beaten or shot to death, and often horribly multilated.

"The International Federation of Trade Unions has protested against these horrors to the Hungarian Government and to the Supreme Council of the League of Nations, and demanded that measures be taken to put an end to all these horrors. It has done no good. The White Terror reigns in Hungary the same after as before. The Supreme Council of the League of Nations evidently cannot, or will not, put the necessary pressure upon the Hungarian Government. The latter cannot, or will not, curb the horrors in its country; it either closes its eyes to them or encourages them itself.

"From official documents of the Hungarian Government that have come into the hands of the International Federation of Trade Unions it is evident that this Government incites the Judges to condemn even prisoners whose guilt is hot proved by the evidence, and that it pays rewards of from 20,000 to 250,000 crowns for the making harmless—that is, the murdering—of labor leaders living abroad.

"All these facts are known and established. The Governments that are acquainted with them do not wish to intervene; perhaps they applaud the wiping out and murdering of the labor movement in Hungary.

"The International Federation of Trade Unions takes over the task of the Governments and calls upon the workers of all countries, beginning June 20, to refuse to perform any work that might, directly or indirectly, be of benefit to the Hungary of the White Terror.

"From June 20, 1920, no train may cross the Hungarian border, no ship may enter Hungarian waters, no letter, no telegram, may be sent to, or received from, Hungary. The entire trafic must be stopped. No coal, no raw materials, no foodstuffs, no letter and no telegram may enter the country any more.

"During the war the ruling class in the belligerent countries fought its adversaries with the economic boycott. It did it after the war, and it is still trying to do it for the purpose of overthrowing the Russian labor Government.

"The International Federation of Trade Unions calls upon the working class of all countries to now make use of the same means, now that it is a matter of halting the bloody rule of the Hungarian Government and of saving the lives and liberties of thousands and thousands of comrades in Hungary.

"Comrades, transport workers, seamen, railroad men and officials, postal, telegraph and telephone workers and officials, workers in all other trades, respond like one man to the call of the International Federation of Trade Unions!

"From Sunday, June 20, on do not do another stroke of work for Hungary!

"The boycott by the working class against the White Terror!

"Long live international solidarity!

"W. E. APPLETON, President.

"L.JOUHAUX, C. MERTENS, Vice Presidents.

"EDO FIMMEN, J. OUDEGEEST, Secretaries."

Jury Secured in Communist Cases

Trial of 127 Communists in Chicago to proceed. Twelve men satisfactory to both sides finally found. Sixty days required. Fifteen hundred veniremen examined.

CHICAGO, July 9.—The trial of 127 Communists and Communist Laborites, for which two months have been consumed in securing twelve jurymen, will proceed. For sifty days the prosecuting attorneys and the defendants have stood in the Cook County Court examining panel after panel of prospective jurymen, 1,500 in all, attempting to find in this multitude twelve men satisfactory to both sides who will carry in their hands the fate of 127 men, charge under the laws of Illinois with conspiring to overthrow the government by organizing the Communist and the Communist Labor Parties at Chicago last September.

Not all "conspirators" present.

Of the 127 for whom indictments were issued, thirteen have never been arrested, for the very good reason that they have not been found by the authorities. Among these are John Reed, noted author and newspaper man, whose recent imprisonment in Abo, Finland, aroused great interest in revolutionary circles. Reed was charged with smuggling, considerable diamonds and money was found in his possession. At latest reports he had been fined and released.

Four women who were also arrested will be tried after the present case is concluded.

That the Chicago case will be an historic one in the annals of American labor is assured by the legal talent which is participating, the defense being represented by Mm S. Forrest, Clarence Darrow and Wm. Cunnea.

Russian Communists Anxious to Unite American Revolutionists.

— By John Clayton. — in Chicago Tribune.

Declaring the revolutionary movement in the United States, if all factions are united, will gain a tremendous impetus and become a real menace to capitalism there, the communist leaders of Russia are bending every effort to unite all the radical parties under the banner of the Third Internationale.

I hadn't been in Moscow for twenty-four ours before I became aware of the presence of many American revolutionists, including representatives of the two communist parties, the I W. W. and American Socialist.

During my stay in Moscow a contract was drawn up between the leaders of the Communist party of America and of the Communist Labor party of America, signed by them, and sent to the United States for approval. The president of the Third Internationale, Zinovieff, inspired this union as part of the revolutionary body's plans for unity in the United States. Late in March a representatnve of the Socialist party came, bringing the application of this group for membership in the Communist Internationale.

Message Scores Socialist Party.

Zinovieff gave me the following message which he said had been forwarded to the Socialists:

"The executive of the Third Internationale believes, if there is no difference between it and the American Socialists, there is no need of a separate Socialist party in the United States, and he calls on the American Socialists to unite with the American Communist party.

"Before we can admit this body to membership we must have guarantees that the officials at its head who are responsible for the American Socialist support of the European war and who sold the working classes to the militarists be excluded from the honest revolutionary ranks. We know the platform of the leaders like Morris Hillquit. We consider them traitors to the revolutionary movement."

Zinovieff on I. W. W.

Speaking of the I. W. W., Zinovieff said:

"As yet there is no official connection between the I. W. W. and the Third Internationale, but, knowing their policy, we are confident it will not be long before the I. W. W. will be united with the communist movement. The executive of the Third Internationale has issued an official proclamation through the organ of the Communist Internationale to the American proeltariat represented by the I. W. W. and we are confident they will give a satisfactory answer to this proclamation. The mistakes of the I. W. W. are those which radical reform movements have made throughout the world. They refuse to step into the arena of politics, but if they will study the Russian Communist party they will see it is not a political party in the ordinary sense of the word, and they will try to repair their mistakes."

Work Against Gompers.

Among the labor unions in the United States the Communist party has been propagating an extensive insurrection against Gompers and his fellows, declaring them the tools of the capitalist class. Representatives of insurgent unions are finding their way into Russia to study at the communist propaganda school. The Third Internationale has a department of reorganization of trade unions on purely revolutionary lines. Zinovieff declares they will soon be ready to form an Internationale of trade unions which he confidently predicts will be supported by the American labor unions.

"Many business are feeling the pinch of hard times—manifested in one way or another. Orders withdrawn . . . reduced profits with high overhead, and so on." You hard times are upon us—(we businessmen). The foregoing was taken verbatim from an advertisement which appeared in the W. G. N. (World's Greatest Newspaper—some call it) the Chicago Tribune of June 13th. It was headed, "Unspeeded by Cancellations".

More important still, does Standard Oil own any Harding stock?

Force and violence — there is the subject matter of the last two paragraphs. In conclusion we might add—and then again we might not!!!

The other day I had an argument with a patriot, one of the howling shouting flag-waving, stay-at-home-and-profiteer sort who cheered the boys as they left and forgot them when they were gone, who gravely assured me that under no circumstances were force or violence to be permissable. I thereupon asked him if he approved of the police force. He did. What would a police force be like if it could not use force if necessary? Armies and navies are efficient just in proportion to their ability to use force and (if necessary) violence. You see, Hy it is this way—force and violence is justifiable if used against you, but all wrong for you to advocate or use.

Besides who can imagine a presidential candidate in overalls?

Now that both the old parties have nominated their choice for the presidency, let me suggest a simplified form of election—let them place the names of Harding and Cox on a ballot and instruct the voters to designate their choice for the presidency, then give the presidency to the one receiving the most votes and the vice-presidency may go as a consolation prize to the defeated candidate. By following this simple plan, big business will be assured of having their man in the chair and Ohio can keep up its reputation of being the mother of presidents. For the common people—after election as before they will still have to work for wages, when they can find the work to do—and will get as wages the bare cost of their reproduction. All the surplus values will go—after election as they do now before election—into the pockets of the parasite class.

Both presidential candidates are "safe and sane". By that term we mean they will both support "our existing institutions," including jails penitentiaries, churches, wage-slavery and the institution of private property. Neither of the candidates can be considered visionary—by which is meant they have no idea or ideal of a better system of society than the present competitive system of wages and slave relations. Bah! Let's go fishin'.

The fish hold no democratic elections. They are honest about it. It is a plain case of big fish catch the little ones and eat 'em. No camouflage, no politics.

The other day I picked up a sheet torn from the May Pictorial Review and read the close of an article entitled, "a fair field in sex." The author closed her arguments with the following. (I can quote the sense if not the exact words) "the reader will please note that nowhere in this article have I advised women to beg men to give them a fair field, but rather have I tried to show that women must TAKE what should be their rights—take them first and argue about it afterwards." As I read the article I wondered what would happen to Gompers and a host of other labor-ites if labor should in no case BEG for a fair field and no favors but should TAKE what they know to be their own. Wow-ie!

There is the matter of the Saturday half-holiday. Suppose the workers, instead of petitioning the king or some similar potentate to GIVE them a half holiday, just suppose they would all get together and TAKE Saturday afternoon off? The whole world would be benefitted and no one would be loser.

In our town we had a meeting and after some rousing speeches a thousand working stiffs signed up to buy a home on the installment plan—say definitely a 2c less interest and more principal, same to be kept up in $30.00 a month, $29.89 interest and 11c principal each month. Now we've got a thousand slaves cinched. The more the pay into this scheme the more docile they will become. Where a man's coin is there will his heart be found also. I will not vouch for the accuracy of the above figures—but will bet my last jitney the principle is explained.

CHRISTIANIA, Norway, June 1.—(By Mail)—A cable just received from Moscow brings the text of a manifesto issued by the executive committee of the communist International (popularly known as the Third International), in which the date for the second international communist congress is set for July 15, and the following program is announced for the sessions, which are to take place in Moscow:

1. Report of the Executive Committee.
2. Reports of delegates from the different countries.
3. The present situation and the International.
4. Parliamentarism.
5. Trade unions and workmen's councils.
6. The composition and role of the Communist party, with special reference to the acquisition of power by the proletariat.
7. The economic policy of nations.
8. The land question.
9. The attitude of the communist International toward the new tendency of "center" groups of accepting in theory the communistic platform and the conditions of membership in the Third International.
10. By—laws of the communist International.
11. Women's organizations.
12. Young people's groups.

It is further announced in the manifesto that the right of representation is extended to all communist party groups, and trade unions which have officially affiliated with the Third International.

All groups and organizations which subscribe to the principles of the communist International, but which are opposed to the party in their own country that has affiliated with the Third International, are also invited to send representatives to the congress, which will then devise a formula as to what voting power shall be accorded these groups.

Syndicalist and industrial organizations of workers which have been in touch with the executive committee are also invited.

The executive committee urges all participating groups to nominate in advance the members who shall represent them on the incoming committees of the party, and to make arragements by which it will be possible for the persons so chosen to remain in Russia for some time after the congress.

The manifesto closes by stating that the tremendously rapid spread of communistic ideas over the whole world makes necessary the calling of this congress, which will issue clear and positive declarations concerning all the questions on the agenda, and which will indicate the guiding lines for the world revolution of the workers.

[illegible] "I would have enjoyed having this gentleman with me when I visited some of the children's hospitals and sanitariums in Moscow.

The tuberculosis sanitariums occupy former villas of wealthy Moscow merchants and aristocrats in the summer park colony a few versts from Moscow, and here one forgets for a moment the difficulties of life in Moscow in contemplation of a remarkable work well organized and well done.

Equality for Children.

"The government believes," said the cheerful young woman doctor in charge of one of the larger sanitariums for treatment of bone tuberculosis, "that every child, irrespective of parentage or social condition, has its right to life and health. It is our duty, if nothing else, to see that these little ones are put straight and given the same opportunities other youngsters have. There is nothing philanthropic about the work."

Perhaps there is no philanthropy, but there certainly is a vast amount of humanitarian spirit in the organization of these clinics and hospitals, and a great deal of love in the hearts of the women who are directing them.

Technical Models of Kind.

In technicque they are models of their kind. The largest and best equipped villas have been chosen, those which provide open verandas and balconies where the children can spend most of their time in the sunlight when the weather permits.

The impressive thing was the cheerfulness of the littel ones and the spirit of comradeship which exists between them and their leaders.

In order that they should not fall behind in their school work they are given daily lessons, the bedridden ones being supplied with swinging desks across their beds on which they do their work. They are carefully watched to see that they do not overdo their strength, but it is surprising how much quicker than the average are the minds of these little sufferers.

The Failure of the French Strike

By Marie A. Czaplicka.

The events of the first of May of last year in Paris marked the awakening of the labor movement of France from the nationalism of the war, and the even more intense nationalism of the peace. The complete reawakening, however, has come only with the first of May of this year, and the general strike which accompanied it. Though the strike movement could hardly be called a success, and finally died out three weeks after its inception, its importance must not be under—estimated, for it marked the beginning of a new spirit and a new policy in the trade-union movement of France and more particularly in the central federation of labor organizations, known as the Confederation Generale du Travail, or more familiarly the "C. G. T."

The C. G. T. exhibits a local coloring as strong as that of France itself compared with other countries and this national flavor is not greatly influenced by the diversity of political opinions among its members. Before the outbreak of the war in 1914 there was a decided conflict over policy between the reformists and the revolutionists, which was intensified by the war itself toward which the majority of the members of the C. G. T. assumed a favorable attitude. The reverberations of the issue of Second or Third International, of Berne or Moscow respectively, have been felt to a considerable extent within the fold of the C. G. T., but the influence of all the political international issue has been greatly mitigated by the strict insistence of the organization on a non-political policy within its ranks.

The C. G. T. has thus far been more successful in its national policy than in international action. An outstanding achievement is the Eight Hours Bill which was passed by the French Chamber on April last. On the other hand the general strike proposed as a manifestation against the intervention in Russia and Hungary, which was fixed for July 2, 1919, proved a total fiasco. The recent strike is another proof of the French character of the C. G. T. The question about which it chiefly revolved was that of the nationalization of the railways which is generally considered in France to be of the greatest importance. The railroad system of France is urged need of reform from every point of view. The welfare of the system has been sacrificed to the interests of capitalist contractors until there is now a permament deficit which keeps the whole railroad system in a backward condition of operation and development. Such a state of affairs would justly have encountered general disapproval, and it is to the credit of French labor that their view of the situation has been more free of reactionary bias than that of either the Government or the Chamber, although it is certainly to the interest of the French state no less than that of the railroad unions that consideration be given to the nationalization program of the C. G. T.

A complete program of nationalization has been worked out by the Econmic Research Cmmittee of the C. G. T. which includes many of the best thinkers on social and economic questions. It proposes to entrust the management of the railroads to an impartial body composed of the representatives of all classes. In the administration of the railroads the labor program recognizes the necessity of supervision by the "economic collectivity", representing the interests of all the shareholders rather than that of a few influential individuals. Herein lies the chief point of difference between the present system and the one which has been proposed. The C. G. T. program further provides for a central organization of administration combined with a decentralization of executive power and control. The technical side of the program envisages a complete overhauling of the physical equipment of the roads and the installation of all kinds of modern devices with a view to the technical standardization of the various subsidiary railroad lines. In the negotiations on the question of wages the railroad unions are to have an equal voice with the Central Board of Administration, but the strike nevertheless remains as a weapon of last report to be used by the workers in defence of their rights if discussion fails to adjust the dispute. And finally all the reforms proposed are according to the plan to be carried out under the present regime without destroying the continuity of the service.

An alternative plan of reform has been brought forward by the government as a counterbalance to the influence of the labor program. According to the government plan all changes are to be brought about within the structure of the existing system. The extent of the collaboration of the workers is ill-defined, but the government program agrees with that of the C. G. T. on the all-important reform of unification of the existing system, which is especially emphasized by the government as it is by labor.

The reorganization of transportation is the first serious step taken by the French government of the labor movement toward reconstruction. It is suprising that the government has allowed the deterioration of the the railways to proceed so far in view of the important role which they played during the war, when they were a decisive factor in the determination of victory.

The situation is therefore clearly such that the strike of last May may be considered to have produced important results, in spite of the fact that the press speaks slurringly of its collapse as adeath from anemia, and represents the general public as full of indignation against the strikers.

From the standpoint of labor solidarity the strike has been a vonderful success and has shown a remarkable discipline in the ranks of labor. Many workers participated in it who were not making any local demands of their own, a rather unique experience in the French labor movement. Such is the opinion of M. Ernest Lafort, Socialist deputy of the Loire and incidentally one of the few advocates of anti-alcoholism. On the other hand his statement is contradicted by the fact that some of the strikers went over the heads of their leaders. For France like other countries is in need of changes within the labor organizations. The leaders of the trade unions or "syndicats" are the most popular representatives of the movement, while the socialist deputies in the Chamber are preoccupied with political questions, rather than the industrial problems which are the first concern of the C. G. T.

When, however, the Government at the climax of the strike announced its intention to dissolve the C. G. T. or suspend its activities, no protest was heard in the Press except that representing the socialist point of view, and the first attack on their measure came with the reopening of Parliament from M. Paul Boncour, the Socialist deputy of Paris. So that after all perhaps M. Merrheim, the head of the Metal Workers Union and one of the leading intellectuals of the labor movement, was right in his statement that without this strike there would have been no effort for the improvement of social conditions in France.

When compared with similar movements in other countries as for instance Great Britain, the French strike seems to have met much more opposition from the government and much less from the public. The so-called Civil League which supplied the workers to take the place of the strikers is not an enthusiastic body of volunteer patriots, and its name would seem to to indicate, but rather a group of casual strike-breakers interested in the daily pay they draw for their services in the strike, and unwilling or unable to take a permanent position. On the other hand the arrest of almost all the popular leaders and the provocative display of military force would indicate a greater degree of anxiety on the part of the Government than a million unarmed strikers should have been able to produce.

From what has been said it is clear that the strike was in its general character an affair of internal politics in France. The cessation of hostilities against Soviet Russia was indeed included among the strike demands, but received no advertisement in the strike meeting nor in the Socialist press, nor on the other hand in the debates in the Chamber on the subject of the strike. The rapid changes which French foreign policy has been undergoing recently have produced a chaotic impression upon the mind of the average Frenchman, but the majority is still more impressed with the destructive than the constructive activities of the Soviet Government. The present intransigent policy of the French government however is certainly stimulating the movement toward fraternization with all elements both within the country and outside who are being persecuted by the official activity and publicity.

The next four months were more than eventful. Jack and Collins went from one mining camp to another getting work, stirring agitation, and being fired (discharged). They managed to do just work enough to keep themselves supplied with food and clothes while they preached the doctrine of industrial solidarity to the workers in various mining camps. One of their first stops was at Wardner of "bull pen" fame. Here Collins, who was among other things an experienced miner, got work under ground with Jack for a helper.

As was their custom they immediately began to talk the need of organization to their fellow workers, with the expected result that they were summarily discharged.

From Wardner they went to Kellogg, a near by town of equally odoriferous reputation. News of their coming had evidently preceeded them, for when they applied at the superintendent's office for work, he told them curtly that their kind was not wanted in Kellog, and he advised them, "to beat it, and beat it fast." He informed them that there had been enough discontent sown among the workers, and that he for one, would see to it that no anarchists and trouble makers came to, or remained in the camp. "The employees are the best friends the laboring man has," the mine chief roared. "I believe in American freedom; in the personal liberty of every man to choose the condition under which he will work, so take warning and get out."

While the superintendent spoke, Collins looked at him with a glint of malice in his steel grey eyes. It was evident that mere words would not frighten the big man, for he made no reply to the superintent's implied threats but simply advised him to take a swift passage to a lower region and a higher temperature. After leaving the superintent's office the two went to a hotel where they rested until the evening.

At seven thirty they picked up a box in an alley, and setting it up in front of a boarding house, Collins began to talk to a group of miners who were congregated on the porch. They did not succeed in getting very much of a crowd, for the well known reason that every man with a cent's worth of manhood, and intelligence above that of a Digger Indian had been run out of the district by the militia and the Pinkerton thugs during the strike of 1903. The men who worked there now, were nearly all "Missourians," that is to say, a hopelessly scabby and ignorant lot. At least that is what the word Missourian signified to the few intelligent miners who were still there working on private prospects.

While a few men stayed and listened to what Collins had to say others went away to tell their boss that there were a couple of agitators in town, a thing that could not then, or cannot now be tolerated in either Kellogg or Wardner.

Just as Collins was warming up to his subject, and Jack had unpacked a bunch of "International Socialist Reviews" six men drove up with a car and invited them to take a ride, making their invitation urgent by the use of a couple of full grown revolvers.

Jack looked at the small crowd of miners to whom his partner had been speaking, but they showed as little concern for what might happen to them, as if they were a group of female moose watching a battle of bucks for the right of herd supremacy

It surely looked to the boy as if they were hopelessly out numbered and that to resist would be useless But Collins took an entirely different view of the matter. "Are you officers?" he asked the men in the machine.

"It is none of your damned business what we are," said one of their number, a square faced red headed, plug ugly, as he jumped out of the car and came toward them, as if to take them by force.

"We are here to enforce law and order, and to do it either by stringing you up or running you out of town. We have not decided what we will do." explained another, who was now holding a gun near the big man's stomach.

"Well," answered Collins coldly, "if we are to die, one place is as good as the other, and you will be as good company in hell as any I know." So saying from his vantage point on his soap box, he kicked the fellow who had him covered with the gun under the chin, while imitating his companion Jack, kicked the one who covered him in an even more sensitive part of his anatomy, causing his adversary to fling up his hands, thereby loosing his weapon, which Jack caught as it flew out of the gun man's hand. Quick as a flash he fired a shot into the rear tire of the machine, and before the other gunmen realised what had happened, both he and Collins had darted into an alley, and running over a mine dump, they entered the woods, dodging several bullets fired after them by the men who had been in the car, but who now gave chase on foot.

When the two had reached the woods Collins hurriedly told Jack that the best thing they could do, would be to climb one of the second growth firs and hide among the branches. This they did as soon as they had sufficiently outdistanced their pursuers. This did not take them long for both were in splendid physical condition and the approaching darkness was friendly to them. In less than ten minutes after they had left the box they were up among the evergreen branches of the trees, while their pursuers passed almost directly under them.

From their place in the trees they could over hear much of what the gunmen said. Their remarks angered Collins and amused Jack. Much of what their pursuers said were, threats of violence, interspersed with words of praise for the clever way in which they had effected their escape. One boasted the loss of his gun, which he said had three notches on it, meaning that he had killed three men. Jack felt of the handle and sure enough the gruesome tallies were there. The boy was almost tempted to shout that he would like to put on another notch at the former owner's expense, but his bump of caution was too large.

The gunmen wandered far afield in search of their intended victims, in fact they scoured the whole neighborhood until well after dark, then they returned to the town, after which the two companions descended from their arboreal refuge, and made their way to a little Finn colony nestling in a wild mountain canyon near the village of Ennaville, a little to the west of the town of Wallace.

They decided to stop for a few days with these friendly people and wait until they could get new supplies from Spokane, for all their literature, which after all is the best amunition for the agitator, had been lost in the melee. And that was not all, their suitcases, containing much of their personal effects, were as yet at the Kellog Hotel.

During the few days they stayed at the Finn colony, Jack wrote a full account of what had happened to Olive Anderson, who by this time was eagerly watching every mail for news from the boy. Oftentimes she enjoyed Collin's occassional notes quite as much as Jack's elaborate and carefully studied accounts of what was taking place. For Collins living the life of a revolutionist could make the meaning of the struggle much plainer than Jack who only studied it.

After about four days Collins and Jack went back to Kellog and took the suitcases from the hotel. The proprietor told them that the man whose gun the boy had taken away had been teased so much by the others that he had left camp. To which Jack replied, that he was sorry this had happened as he wanted to return the gun to its rightful owner. Only now he decided to keep it until such a time as he met him again, when possibly he might need it. Nobody molested them at Kellogg and they left on the afternoon train for Wallace, where they met with a group of miners, who were Western Federation men, and who were going up to Burke to work in the mines. They insisted that Jack and Collins go with them and get a job, so as to be able to assist in crystallizing what ever union sentiment they could find into a form for effective organization.

They did find work at Burke and stayed on the job until the end of May. The trial of Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone now engaged Collin's attention. He decided it would be a good thing for him and Jack to go to Boise, and see and hear what was going on. He told the boy that the Nevada, Arizona, and Colorado mines were well organized in their capitalistic union and that consequently they would put up a bitter legal fight, with the formidable forces brought into play by the master class.

There were several things which made the prospects of a trip to Boise very alluring to the boy. One of these was the fact that Rudolph, who had gone to Spokane, when Jack and Collins started for the mines, had written that he would in all probability be in Boise, and write up the trial for a Jawish paper back east. For the present he was employed in a second hand book store on Stevens Street, where he could commune with his beloved poets, with only an occassional customer to interrupt him. Jack liked Rudolph and his mode of thinking immensely, but it was Collins who held him by the sheer force of personality.

The next reason was that the trial offered him a chance to learn more about man; it would increase his stock of knowledge, and for the increase of knowledge he seemed to live. With him the acquisition of information was an end in itself. He lived to know. In this he differed from Collins who lived to do, and for whom knowledge had little value except as it aided him in doing the things he considered worth while.

There was yet another, and perhaps it was the greatest incentive, to the boy in making the trip. It would be made on foot, over what is perhaps the most picturesque mountain trail in America. He would see new rocks, new formations, new animals, new birds and plants; these things were food to his mind And he would hear the trial, the great legal battle, where he might study the play of passion in the hearts of strong men. In the court room he would behold the mental conflict of interests. He would see and hear the classes struggle for supremacy in industry, which was but an initial phase of their ultimate struggle to survive.

There can be no doubt but what the boys discussion to fight in the class war was eminently sincere for his training had taught him that due to his economic position he really could not escape his part in it yet, his mind was not adapted to the thought processes it demands. And hence, he habitually reasoned in other terms. He was like an eagle with mighty wings, who felt conscious of a power to soar above the clouds, and yet who for some ideal's sake, resolved not to fly. With Collins all this was different. He thought in terms of economics, he spoke the language of sociology, he dreamed in pictures of organized masses. He wanted to go to Boise for no other purpose than to be able to say to the workers, "I was there. I saw and heard the battle. Such and such are the tactics of the masters. I know, because I have heard and seen them in action, on the job, and in their courts." With Collins the class struggle was an intellectual conception; with Jack it was primarily an emotional appeal.

With these different, and yet to an extent, similar motives, he joined the journey to Boise, arriving on the opening day of the historic trial.

Palmer Being Probed

The turbulent political tide has cast up various and considerable flotsam and jetsam these past few weeks. It seems that the desires of the ambitious politicians to sacrifice themselves upon the altar of service for the "people", has led some of them to very questionable methods whereby to accomplish their laudable ends.

Aside from the matter of the Wood campaign funds — which is not at all unusual nor new, we have the matter of Mr. Palmer's candidacy. It seems that Mr Palmer failed to keep his agreement at San Francisco in allowing some 254 delegates to run wild instead of turning them to McAdoo at the proper moment. Of course this is an unpardonable sin against the administration and rumors are rife in Washington that the skids are being greased to slide Mr. Palmer out of the Cabinet.

Meanwhile the Senate committee investigating primary campaign expenses at St. Louis, has focussed its official lens upon charges against Palmer made by the Woman's High Cost of Living headquarters, a government agency. Succintly stated, the charges are these as made by miss Olive Bruggeman, former executive secretary. Mr. Palmer, the charges state, established 2,000 headquarters in all sections of the country from which publicity for the reduction of the high cost of living was sent out. These headquarters, aside from being used for the purpose intended, were turned into Palmer booster clubs for the furthering of his nomination for the Presidency. Republicans were fired from jobs therein and democrats installed as a further aid to Mr. Palmer's ambitions. The well known fact that the Department of Justice has been more active in aiding Mr Palmer's candidacy than in carrying out its official duties, does not add to Mr. Palmer's chances of escaping punishment.

However, if Mr. Palmer had by some hook or crook won the nomination the whole Democratic machine would have stood solidly behind him and he would have been heralded broadcast as the quintessence of purity and the savior of the nation. Having lost the nomination and in the losing aroused the administration's ire, most any thing is likely to happen to our famous Destroyer of the Reds.

The Poles in Rout

The past week's dispatches prove what has long been expected and prophesied by those best able to interpret the movements of the Polish and Bolshevik battle fronts. Under the steady hammering of immense Red Army forces, the Polish front has moved steadily backward. Its location from day to day is a matter of conjecture. City after city has been evacuated to the pressing tide of Trotsky's well disciplined and equipped cavalry and infantry.

The capitulation of Poland to the Soviet forces may be expected at any moment, so intense has become the Red drive. That the Red forces intend to move straight to Warsaw is conjectured and the possibility of such a move is conceded now that their strength is proved.

Meanwhile the power of the Polish army dwindles. It is in rout and there appears no solution except capitulation. A losing battle is being fought in which the last reserves of Poland are being inducted. The inevitable has occurred. Poland's imperialistic ambitions have received the answer they deserved. It is only to be regretted that she could not foresee the result as early as did the Allies, who have only nominally supported her these past few weeks. Had she due sense, many, many lives would have been saved. As it is, she has but added to her internal miseries that of defeat. But if the workers of Poland are able thru that defeat and the people's miseries to overthrow the bourgeois government and establish the Polish Soviet, then only, will they reap a profit from their experience. That it is among the probabilities is without question.

Modern Myths

The reading of the daily papers since the nomination of the two major parties, candidates convinces us that the making of Myths comprises one of the official duties of the capitalist press. No sooner had the nominating votes been counted than the candidates blossomed forth in its pages as reservoirs of wisdom, statesmanship, and all qualities necessary to the office of President. Their records from babyhood to the moment of going to press have been opened and no flaw found therein. Photographs of the candidates as nursing babes, school boys, young men, and politicians; together with those of their wives children, dogs, cats, horses, houses and what not, have been pictured before a surfeited public in a manner calculated to fill its mind with the idea that two super-men had at last been chosen to lead the people out of the wilderness in which it now bewails and laments.

The capitalist press calculates with what surprising accuracy, the aptitude of the public to forget the events of the recent past. The same old game of Myth—creating has been carried on at each campaign for lo, these many years; yet, at each succeeding election the worn tricks are brought out of the political lumber room and with [illegible] care are exhibited again before the stupid gaze of the gullible multitude. Well does the capitalist press know its audience.

Granted two months time in which to work upon the public mind, the public daily press will have men, women and children fired into a frenzy of political fervor over the personalities and qualifications of these two paper-mache dummies of capitalism. The same thing has worked before, it will work with equal success again. Who does not recall the Wilsonian Myth? And who, other than a politician nursing a hope of a political job will not concede the point that the Myth has become but a moth eaten rag flapping senselessly in the breeze, a mere scarecrow?

The two candidates, now hailed as saviors by the two political wings of the same interests, are befitting the platforms upon which they hope to ride to victory thru the ignorance of the great American voting mule. Like their platforms neither can be credited with vision, character or the qualities of leadership. Neither have anything to offer the wage earners of America except the continuation of their slavery and a tighter rivetting of their fetters. Nevertheless, these same deluded slaves will march to the polls and with hosannas bow the neck and bend the knee to these Myths, created by fraudulent newspaper publicity.

Dope for Dubbs Only

We sometimes wonder if the capitalist press takes itself at all seriously. Its contradictions are so palpable and its sins so culpable that we must marvel that it should for a moment do less than cynically smile at its bluff, bluster, bragadocio and frauds.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer, in speaking editorially of the opening of trade relations with Russia, says: "Little or nothing will be sent because Americans will not take the risk of dealing with forsworn irresponsibles.... So it appears that the unreliability of the Bolsheviki and their record of faithlessness will be quite as effective as a government embargo to keep American goods out of Russia" Ignorance of actual facts cannot be assumed by the editor for such a statement. In previous editorial statements, he has intimated a knowledge of the growing demand among manufacturers for the permission to trade with Russia. The truth of the matter is, that the Plain Dealer Editor has misconstructed the desires of manufactureing interests in this country or has allowed his animosity to Sovietism to dictate the above untrue assertion.

Let us see what the manufacturers themselves say in respect to whether they will do business with Soviet Russia or not—whether they consider themselve as taking such tremendous risks at the hands of "irresponsibles". Just how welcome to Cleveland manufacturers is the granted permit to ship to Russia is seen in the statement of Mrs. J. G. Hammond, secretary of the Foreign Trade Department of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, "At least fifteen Cleveland firms have been waiting to send machinery to Russia", is her statement to the Cleveland Press.

Is it likely that fifteen of the largest manufacturers of Cleveland would wait for months to ship goods to a people whom they considered a bad account? Well, hardly. To socialists generally, and to a great number in particular, it has been long known that thousands of contracts involving millions of dollars worth of goods have already been signed by America's greatest manufacturers and the agents of the Soviet government in this country for delivery to Russia. The desire of Cleveland manufacturers to take adventage of the Russian market is equalled by the manufacturer of every other industrial center in this country.

However, we conjecture that the P. D. Editor writes his anti-bolshevist dope for consumption by the Henry Dubbs only.

We Must Go Too

In these days of high cost of existence and intensified commercialized living there is some excuse for a popular and widespread belief that by segregation of the individual from society the vicissitudes of modern 'civilized' life may be evaded; that we may step aside at will and "let the world go by." This erroneus concept is held chiefly by those who have not as yet experienced a try out of their theories. Millions of common folks, after half a life time spent in a vain and inglorious effort to beat the game of modern living, are casting about for some method, means or manner in which to get away from the terrific, endless nightmare into some secluded spot away from it all, where, in security and peaceful repose, they may pass the remainder of their days nearer to Nature and in accordance with the natural bias of human beings.

Such a desire arises from too much "civilization," a "fed up" condition as it were. After a twenty year battle with adverse and unnatural circumstances, the body grows weary, the soul sickens and the natural reaction occurs—back to Nature becomes the cry and the obsession. Thousands are seeking this Elysium every day in the year. But where one has found it, it is safe to assert that nine hundred and ninety nine have failed in their quest.

Nature herself, seems to have been backed off the map these days, so far reaching have become the tenacles of modern life. Into every nook and cranny extend the long arms of this octopus, this man killing, life destroying monster that sucks the blood and shrinks the souls of untold millions the world over. Into the mountains and the valleys, deep into the forests, upon every plain, extend the telephone, the railway, the paved auto road, those feelers and establishers of the new order, that has been slowly but surely creeping upon the virginity of this land. And where they reach, there is established another autpost of capitalistic civilization. There a new field is opened for the exploitation of another people; there is erected the machinery for the slaughter which feeds the system.

Man is by nature, a social being. The hermit life is as barren and desolating as is the life of the modern city wage slave. Both are unnatural and both are destructive of the best in man.

Man is a social being. A world of hermits is unthinkable. A world wherein each is for himself and by himself is equally impossible. To go forward, no matter thru what zone of disorder, to better things beyond is the inevitable course of human life and association. The evils of our modern life are not to be cured by attempted evasion. Even tho it were possible for a large number of individuals to escape from the social whirlpool, the whirlpool would still remain a source of peril to others and to generations coming after us.

The evils of society are social and cannot be solved by or for the individual, but only by the efforts of masses acting in unison. Whether we will or no, we are compelled by the very nature of man and the character of the society evolved by man's association with his fellows to solve social problems in a social way. We cannot dodge nor evade the [illegible] of the race. The struggle to survive compels us toward association. The good in the social system, we enjoy in common, likewise must we bear the evils in common until such time as we will by our social will and intelligence evolve a better civilization.

We cannot "let the world go by", it won't do it. If it goes at all, we must also go with it, for that is the law of our life.

They Are With Us -- Not

"They are with us—the bourgeois liberals, when the time comes they'll be with us." Ever hear a socialist say that? Very likely you have many times. It is one of those thought-the habit of repeating, which are belied by facts as well as probabilities. "They're coming our way" is cheerfully vouchsafed when some better or worse known liberal makes a statement bordering upon the revolutionary.
fully vouchafed when some better or worse known liberal a statement bordering upon the revolutionary.

Some socialists will recognize the materialistic basis for human mass actions with one breath and deny it with the next, which is just what is done in making such foolish statements as above indicated. Presumably, the wish is father to the thot, socialists are mostly proselytes and when there are indications that one has won a new convert, he is apt to forget his A B C of socialism in a moment of rapture that another brand is snatched from the burning.

The United States, especially, contains a very large group of this character, business men, educators, large farmers — all members of the middle class with middle class ideas and ideals. The chief difference between them and the real capitalist class is the difference between a million dollars and one tenth as much. The middle class would be perfectly contented and satisfied with the capitalist system and the enslavement of the working class if its status in society were not in jeopardy. But as the rise to power of the greater bourgeoisie also makes grist of it as well as the wage slave class, it duly emits howls in proportion to the pinch of the grinders.

When one examines the "liberalism" of these bourgeoisie, then we begin to realize how woefully shy of any thing revolutionary is their creed. Their demands for the re-establishment of free speech, press and assemblage; of the enforcement of the laws in line with Constitutional provisions: what are they? The most that can be said is that they are curbs which they would place upon the development of capitalism. In other words, their liberalism is only a set of rules by which they might legally and without fear of imprisonment tell the truth about the class whose puppets they are, the big capitalists. For many years the battle has been raging between the petit and the great bourgeoisie. Twenty four years ago the petit bourgeoisie went down to defeat in the political campaign. It has never been able to "come back", nor will it. Finance capital holds the world in the hollow of its hand.. The petit bourgeoisie has been forced to adopt the practice of crumbgatherers at the table of finance capital. Their liberalism consists in a desire to re-establish the political and economic condition of 30 years ago, no more.

To assume that the liberal bourgeoisie is with us — the revolutionists, is to fly in the face of facts of recent history. Where were they when the Bolsheviks took power in Russia? It was they who sabotaged, who refused to give their services to the people's government. Only as they learned in time that the Bolshevists were in power to stay, did they accept places in the government and in the industries. In other words, only when they were whipped by the proletarian power did they cast their lot with the proletarians. So will it be elsewhere. The liberals of the bourgeoisie, big or little, are still bourgeoisie, with the instincts, desires and qualifications of their class. They will not change over night and on the morning of the proletarian victory cast their lot with the victors. But only by the logic of that victory will they fall in line and be of service to us. Only when they are whipped will they be worthy.

Lines

He flashed by in his glistening new Super-eight
And swirled around to a dead stop before me.
"How do you like the lines?" he gloated.
And I thought of the lines that gave him who had not earned it, that toy;
Lines that bound the limbs of those on Bayonne
That their food might be his fuel;
Lines of soldiers and a bleeding crowd at Ludlow;
Bread lines filled with hungry children
And hopeless, hulking, dark-browed men,
Lines of fear and lines of privation.
Class lines!
And one line was a hempen rope and taut
For one end was attached to a bridge
And the other was around a human neck.
How did I like the lines??? I didn't care for them.

SOCIALIST CLASSICS

One cannot learn the meaning of Communism by reading only a pamphlet; nor can he act an intelligent part in the workers' struggles if he consents to remain merely a superficial student of Socialism. Study of the Socialist classics is necessary. These are the foundation stones of the Socialist philosophy and tactics.

[illegible] Expelling Bolshevists and Exiles

By Linn A. E. Gale.

Mexico City.—Despite the fact that the New York Times correspondent here proposed to General Obregon the extradition of all American political exiles back to the United States, and despite a steady stream of lying reports sent out by newspaper men here, nothing of the kind has been done.

There are several Radicals in the administration who declare emphatically that while Obregon did not care to flatly refuse extradition, he has no intention of granting the request. Others who make no pretense of radicalism, however, say the same thing. The general impression is that the government wants to play "safe'' with both the capitalists and the Radicals, and will do nothing aggressive to anger either side, on the theory that it can then jump on the band-wagon of the winners at any time that international conditions seem to warrant it. A sort of ''progressive liberalism'' will, therefore, be in vogue for the present. While it will mean scant amelioration of the condition of the masses, neither will it mean any persecution of them or of labor organizations,—not yet, anyway. Workers say this is all they ask just now. They do not want to try to set up Soviets yet — they are not well enough organized. But in a year or so, if they are left alone and permitted to construct a powerful industrial movement thru the Mexican I. W. W., they will be in a position to wrest power from the bourgeoisie.

A great hullabaloo was recently mare in certain newspaper articles emanating from Mexico City, in which it was stated that four Russian Bolshevists had been jailed and would be deported. As a matter of fact. the four were not Bolshevists but merely youths who fled from Poland and eventually found their way to America. Reaching Mexico they unwisely went to the Russian ''consul'' who is a hold—over from the czar's regime and not only without any authority to represent the Soviet government, but actually a treacherous scoundre who works hand—in—hand with the American embassy. With characteristic perfidy, the ''consul'' had the lads arrested on a trumped-up charge and they were held a few days in the local police station. It is probable that the consul's real object was to bleed them for money as this is his customary mode of procedure. He has frequently sold fake Russian passports and then tipped off the American authorities so they could catch the unfortunate purchasers in Havana or elsewhere after they left Mexico. In any event, when the truth concerning the affair was brot to the attention of the officials, the boys were released.

Most dependable of all the information as to the government's probably attitude toward slackers, is the statement made by President De la Huerta to one of the members of the Chamber of Deputies. A Hindu who escaped the wrath of the British government a couple of years ago by fleeing to Mexico, received a notice to appear before an official in the attorney general's department and was astonished to note that his real name appeared on the summons. He had been using an assumed name during his stay here, as a protection against possible attempts of the British government to ''get'' him, and his real name was known to very few persons. Answering the summons, he was questioned by a clerk in the office in question, asked if he was a Bolshevist and interrogated regarding his activities here, then allowed to go without being advised of the purpose of the inquiry or the probable result. A Deputy who had an appointment to see the President, was asked to look into the matter and accordingly took it up with De la Huerta who unhesitatingly and emphatically responded that any such procedure was entirely unauthorized and that the government would not expel anybody, regardless of his political or economic beliefs. He added that evidently one of the government clerks was trying to scare the Hindu in question and hold him up for such money, and that the matter would be probed thoroly.

Meanwhile, the newly organized Mexican I. W. W. is going ahead with an extensive work of organization, as also is the Communist Party.

The Bolshevists and ''slackers'' are still alive and doing well in Mexico. Altho they cannot read the future, they are not fearful about it.

As a rule the Mexicans, even the anti—Socialists, are rarely inclined to obey the dictates of foreign capitalists or their governments. They have felt the iron heel too often. It is doubtful if Wall Street will ever be able to exact extradition from any government of native Mexicans but if it ever should succeed in seating a government that would obey it in this regard, the political exiles here are hopeful that the Mexican Social Revolution will be so near at hand that the dastardly project will never be consummated.

Until then, the Mexican Bolshevists will center their every energy on the upbuilding of an industrial organization so powerful that in its vise—like grip, capitalism will not be able to emit even a death—peep.

The White Terror in Hungary

— By Ernest Lorsy, —

II.

The visit of our Italian comrades was remarkable in more than one respect, I had the opportunity to question them thoroughly after their return to Vienna about their impression and intentions. I found them deeply moved by what they had seen and determined to do all they could to secure to the Hungarian workers the assistance of the workers in other lands in fighting against their tortures. The Italian Delegates took the Hungarian Premier to task about some of the cases selected from the gigantic mass of documentary evidence which has been collected. The premier gave them evasive, embarrased stammering answers. They wanted to visit these cellars of Budapest hotels, where the innocent victims of officer-terrorist troops are daily ill treated and killed by choice tortures, but the prime minister declared it was beyond his power to authorize the entrance into these military torture-chambers.

The Italian delegates further asked for an explannation of the death sentences that had been passed and executed on a number of communists by the exceptional courts not formed according to law. This has been promised but not ful-filled. The verdicts in question are shocking and may compete with the worst judicial murders known in the criminal history of nations.

The delegates wanted to see Kecskemet, one of the towns where the officers of the terror-troops dragged out of prison several hundreds of perfectly innocent workers (here their number was 397), who were imprisoned without warrant in the prison of the lawcourt, tortured, castrated and finally killed. They were not allowed to do so. They wanted to talk, in the prisons of Budapest, to the former People's Commissioners, awaiting trial. They got permission to do so, but then the minister of justice was disavowed and the permission to visit the prisons revoked. No information could be given by Hungarian authorities to the Italian delegates as to the whereabouts of numberless murdered persons; they simply insisted that they never heard these names.

Of course Della Seta and Vella wished to visit the numerous confinement camps, where the relatives of the imprisoned or murdered socialists as well as person of socialist or in any way radical convictions together with small profiteers — the big ones are free and highly honored — are kept imprisoned and slowly starved to death. Against these prisoners not even the Hungarian attorney general had been able to find the slightest pretext for any kind of indictment.

Out of the twelve large confinement camps the one next to Budapest, Hajmasker, was fixed up in state for the occasion and was to be shown to the Italians. Previous to that long expected visit things there may have resembled the bustle in a barrack right before the visit of the general in commend. Great masses of food, chiefly flour- bags, had been heaped up to give the impression how well the interned were provided for. These flour bags had arrived in motor-cars from Budapest on the eve of the Italian visit.

The two delegates asked the interned how they were treated. Their faces betrayed that they yearned to speak but just as much they dreaded the issue if they did. At last a man stepped forth and volunteered the following:

The prisoners did not dare to talk because last time, when they had answered the question of a British Red Cross Mission, they received 50 strikes each. None of them knew why they were there, none of them had yet been tried. Food was miserable, scarce, irregular and disgusting. They were starving. They were regularly flogged by the guards, mostly with the flat of the swords, sometimes with sticks, with rubber batons, with dog's whips, with leather straps, with iron-braced pickets and sometimes with the palm of the hand. They were tried to a stake as a punishment. The man showed the Italians the stakes which were used for this purpose.

The Italians discovered two scourges studded with lead and a "nagaika", which had been forgotten there by the guards in their hurry. The other interned prisoners corroborated these statements. Among them there were some old men absolutely helpless, and some pregnant women very near their time, who had been interned to take revenge for not being able to find their husbands, brothers or other relatives who had managed to escape.

The Italians tried to comfort all these poor people. This was a welcome pretext for the Hungarian authorities to set an end to this disagreeble visit. They had reported to them by the military escorts of the Italian delegates, that the latter had tried to make communistic propaganda in Hajmasker, and forbade them the visit of any more public institutions. The delegates protested through the chief of the Italian Diplomatic Mission in Budapest against this stupidly concocted statement. As a matter of fact they had, for the sake of their missien as well for that of the interned, stricly refrained from any word that might have been misinterpre. d, and had left directly after inspecting the camp.

This visit has had two sequels. The first, a sad one, happened in Hajmasker. As soon as the Italians were gone, a review was held. One of the officers inquired: "Who is the man who spoke to the Italians? The man reported himsalf and stepped forth. Instantly armed officers and soldiers rushed on him and knocked him down. He died of his injuries after thirty-six hours. This incident is warranted by the confession of a soldier, who, by order, had helped to ill treat this brave man and who, tortured by remorse, has since fled from the confinement camp to Vienna. This man, an absolutely reliable eye-witness, has told us a lot of other horrible details about life in Hajmasker.

The other sequel to the Hungarian sojourn of the comrades, Bella Seta and Vella happened in Italy—and probably some more are going to follow it there and, it is hoped, in other places also. The two delegates reported about their experiences in the ''hell of Europe'' at a meeting of the Italian Socialist Party on May 9th. They declared they were convinced that the most barbarously horrible White Terror is raging in Hungary The Italian proletariat knows what it must do. It will appeal to the Labor Parties of all countries. It will appeal to the workers of the world to do all they can to put an end to this disgrace. Besides the delegates have interrogated the Italian government, in order to compel it to abandon its attitude of passuve toleration towards the rule of terror in Hungary.

By [illegible]

Grim necessity has at last driven the American bourgeois government to remove the trade embargo on Soviet Russia. After Great Britain had entered into a trade agreement with Russia, with the prospect of securing the cream of that country's market, continuance of the embargo spelled suicide to American manufacturers. The action was, of course, grudgingly taken, but no other course was possible. Markets must be secured at once if a widespread industrial depression is to be postponed. Signs of its approach are not wanting, and the astute big fellows in industry have insisted that their government come to their relief. It came, all right, even at the sacrifice of pride. Some of the provisions in the new policy are decidedly amusing. For instance, the declaration that ''persons trading with Russia do so at their own risk'' will provoke broad grins, if not hilarious merriment, among the American manufacturers. Since when did governments become so paternal as to underwrite the accounts of their citizens or subjects engaged in trade? Another declaration —'no political recognition is either granted or implied''—will doubtless be be received with consternation at Petrograd. Since Russia is now an industrial government it has little consideration for the empty honor of political recgnition. However, that must eventually come as a necessary concomitant of trade agreement, and any declaration to the contrary is as insincere as it is absurd. ''Thus endeth the first lesson.''

Every citizen of Ohio ought to be ''one-stepping'' about with his chest protruding like unto that of a pouter pidgeon, for hasn't the historical producer of Presidents ''copped'' both the Democratic and Republican candidates! Don't permit any inconsequential question of the competency of either of these ''saviors'' to dampen your ardor or minimize your exuberance,(much less quibble because they are handpicked for you by your masters. Either of them can be depended upon to hold aloft the banner of conservatism, and isn't that the crying need of the hour to prevent the Bolshevics from running amuck and spreading their vicious propaganda among the happy and contented people of this great and glorious democratic country? Just remember how kind and considerate were your masters in assuming the task of selecting the candidates for you, thus conserving your gray matter for the more necessary work of production in the factory, for which, through long experient, you are especially fitted. Don't allow any captious critic to poison your mind by impugning the sincerity of these splendid exponents of ''one hundred per cent Americanism.'' In choosing either Cox or Harding you can't go wrong. Both will be loyal to the interests of your masters, and what more can you ask? They are similar links of sausage from the same bull pup. It is their business to rule and yours to work. This is the constituted arrangement for the preservation of the capitalist state, and if you are so ureasonable as to kick about it, well—then you are not a good American citizen. Sabe?

By the way, the selection of a Roosavelt as the running mate for Cox was a politic more that reflects credit on the perspicacity of the politicians. They know that there are a multitude of worshipers of the big-toothed swashbuckler, many of whom are ignorant of his demise, and will support the Democratic ticket thinking they are voting for Teddy. This statement may appear absurd, but just the same it is the gawd's truth. The politician's best asset is the ignorance of the voters.

The Allied governments are playing in hard luck. It now seems certain that the millions they expended in financing Poalnd's aggressive warfare against the Russian Soviet government have been watsed. The hope that the Poles would be successful is shattered by the developments of the past week. The last card has been played and still the Soviet goes marching on. From day to day the position of the bourgeoisie becomes more insecure by the increasing stability of the workers' industrial republic. On the whole, the developments up to date should be hope inspiring to the workers with vision. The sun of the new day has already appeared above the horizon and is slowly but surely climbing toward the zenith. Let us be joyful, Comrades. Our dream is about to come true.

The British Opium Monopoly

CHICAGO—Ellen La Motte, an American nurse, has just revealed the horrors of the opium evil, in a book titled ''The Opium Monopoly''. The book is based upon Miss La Motte's actual investigations in the Far East, and upon her study of the British Blue Books.

The opium monopoly is a British monopoly. It is spoken of as the opium monopoly in the British Blue Books. India is the source and supply of the British opium trade; and it is from India opium that the drug is supplied to the world, according to Miss La Motte. The revenue derived from opium directly in India alone nets the British government over $15,000,000 Aside from this sum the opium sold under the Excise Department, including opium and liquors, nets the government $50,000,000. These excise duties are collected on spirits, beer, opium and intoxicating drugs. In British pounds the figures were thus:

In 1916—17; Excise, 9,215,899 pounds sterling; opium, 3,160,005 pounds sterling: total revenue, 118,799,968 pounds sterling.

''A nation,'' says Miss La Motte, ''that can subjugate 300,000,000 helpless people, and then turn them into drug addicts — for the sake of revenue—is a nation which commits a cold-blooded atrocity unparalleled by any atrocities committed in the rage and heat of war. The Blue Book shows no horror at these figures, Complacent approval greets the increase of 44 per cent. of opium consumption, and the increase of 67 per cent in the use of other habit-forming druges. Approval, and a shrewd appreciation of possibilties for more revenue from progressively higher rates of duty', knowing well that drug addicts will sell soul and body in order to procure their daily supply.''

One outstanding fact in this study of the opium monopoly is that wherever the British flag waves over subject peoples, whether it be in India, in the South Islands, or even in South America, there opium is sold, as cigarettes are sold in the United States. The British Isles are carefully guarded against opium and drugs, as are Canada, Australia, and South Africa.

Many instances are cited by Mis La Motte in substantion of this contention. Thus she points out that Shanghai is supposed to be a Chinese city. Divided into two sections, one is under nominal Chinese control, one under foreign concessions, known as the International Settlement. Over the latter section China has no control. Although opium has been abolished in Chinese territory, in this International Settlement anyone may buy as much opium as he wishes ''merely by stepping over an imaginary line, into a portion of the town where the rigid anti-opium laws of China'' do not apply.

''In October, 1917, there were 87 licensed opium shops in the International Settlement. In May, 1914, there were 663. In 1907 the average monthly revenue from opium licenses, dens and shops combined, were taels 5,450. In May 1914, the revenue from licenses and opium shops alone was taels 10, 995.... At the beginning of the anti-opium campaign in 1907 there were 700 dens (for smoking) in the Native City and 1,600 in the International Settlement. The Chinese closed their dens and shops at once. In the Settlement the dens were not all closed until two years later, and the number of shops in the Settlement increased by leaps and bounds.''

In 1913, the amount derived from opium license in the International Settlement amounted to taels 86,386. The Statistical Abstract Relating to British India for 1912-1913 shows the export of British opium into the Chinese Treaty Ports, over which the Chinese have no control, amounted to over $15,000,000. This is a tremendous increase.

Evidence also clearly shows that now much of the morphia which reaches Japs for distribution in China passes through the United States. All of the drugs do not pass through the United States. Much of it remains here. The drug evil in New York City alone is well known. To quote again from Miss La Motte:

''The Number of drug addicts in America today is fairly startling. The number is variously estimated in New York City alone as from 10.000 to 100,000. It is said that there may be 1,000,000 in the country.''

She further shows that we cannot grapple with this problem if we ignore the source of supply and distribution and the reasons for immense over-production of opium on the part of the British opium monopoly.

Czecho Troops Arouse Curiosity

By Joseph Corbett,

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Who pays the expenses of the 10,000 Czecho-Slovak troops who arrived here a few days ago and then passed over the lines of the Canadian Government railways to Valcartier camp, Quebec, where they are demobilizing before departing for their own land?

Even the private press of Vancouver asks this question mildly. Labor is asking it volubly and in some quarters answering it with the reply that Britain is paying the bills of the 10.000 smiling soldiers who refused to continue warfare against the Bolsheviki whom they regard as friends rather than enemies.

It is doubtful if ever before has the evidence of the international character of the war on Soviet Russia been manifested so plainly.

Blue Funnel and Dollar line boats unloaded the men here from Vladivostok. Chinese crews manned the boats. A French general still in the old land was in technical charge of the transports, the men told a Federated Press interpreter.

The soldiers wore uniforms supplied by the Japanese. Their rifles were Lee Enfields. Their knapsacks bore the letters ''U. S.'' in large figures on a kaaki background. The Canadian Government railroads speeded them to a military camp and the men themselves have Kolchak money in their possession.

''Bolsheviki Good.'' This was the answer the average curious Vancouverito received on querying the soldiers as to their opinion of the Bolsheviki. The biggest fact that stands out in connection with the arrival in Canada of these men, however, is their refusing to maintain a warfare against a government which world capitalism wants destroyed.

Two hundred and fifty thousand troops of mixed nationality are still left in Russia, the soldiers told the interpreters. These include Germans, Austrians, Turks and others from mid-European countries.

Printing presses were sent to Siberia by the allies together with corps of editors to damn Bolshevism, members of this young returning army assert. It was from this editorial force and these presses that much of the misinformation flooding the world originated.

PREDATORY FORCES RETARD CREATIVES IMPULSE.

NEW-YORK—A significant admission that the machine process, if taken out of the control of predatory forces, could be made to further rather than retard the creative impulse, is made by Frederick L. Acker, in The Architectural Forum, under such conditions, he declared, the world would be made a pleasant place for everybody, instead of the few.

Mr. Ackerman's admission is in direct contrast to the oft repeated assertion that the poverty of the masses is due to the fact that machinery has taken the place of manual work. Says Mr. Ackerman:

''I believe thoroughly that, if the machine process could be lifted out of the control of predatory forces, or if we could bring our social and economic institutions and industrial processes into an harmonious working, we could create out of the machine process a material environment which would be superior, from the social standpoint, to anything thus far created by the architects and builders of the past.

''It might be that an art thus evolved would be rather more rigid. It might be that it would not conform, to our criterions of taste which have grown out of our handicraft industry. If it did not then satisfy us, we could debate the question of what to do with the machine. For the present the problem appears to be that of discovering how to make man the master of the machine.''

MARK TWAIN ON CONSTITUTIONS.

You see my kind of loyalty was loyalty to one's country—not its institutions or its oficeholders.

The country is the real thing, the substantial thing, the eternal thing. It is the thing to watch over, and care for and be loyal to. Institutions are extraneous, they are its mere clothing, and clothing can wear out, become ragged. cease to be comfortable, cease to protect the body from winter, disease and death.

To be loyal to rags, to shout for rags, to worship rags, to die for rags, that is loyalty of unreason, it is pure animal; it belongs to monarchy, was invented by monarchy. Let monarchy keep it!

It was from Connecticut, whose constitution declares ''that all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit; and that they have, at all times, an undeniable and indefensible right to alter their form of government in such manner as they may think expedient.''

Under that gospel, the citizen who thinks he sees that the commonwealth's political clothes are worn out and yet holds his peace, and does not agitate for a new suit is disloyal—he is a traitor!

That he may be the only one who thinks he sees this decay does not excuse him. It is his duty to agitate anyway, and it is the duty of others to vote him down if they do not see the matter as he does—From a Yankee in King Arthur's Court.

MOSCOW.—(By Mail)—(N. Y. Bureau).—That a grave economic crisis is threatening Europe which can only be averted by lifting the blockade against Russia is the assertion to D. Florinsky, a member of the Moscow Commissariat of Foreign Affairs, in a letter of A. Shanfield, American Charge' d' Affairs, in Denmark. Florinsky was formerly a member of the diplomatic corps under the Czar's regime, and recently offered his services to the soviet republic. He was granted an amnesty and given a position in the government.

A Dinner Pail Epic

— By Bill Lloyd —

Written for The Federated Press

Just over in the office is a fellow that I know, not so very bad a duffer, as office-workers go. But because he posts a ledger and wears a soft, white collar, he is inclined to beef around and let an awful holler, because he says that I don't know percentage from baked beans and yet have got him beaten with the paycheck in my jeans. Now goodness knows it strains my check to keep myself in hash, and I don't have to dress up swell nor cut no awful dash. I don't play golf, nor run a car — the clubs are not for me — but when I have made both ends meet, there's little left to see.

If this here system hits me hard — a solar plexus blow —that duffer in the office has got precious little show. What gets my goat is simply this—I give it to you straight—it ain't my fault if his think car is twenty annums late.

If he and his gang over there just ain't got any sense, I just can't see why they should try to pull me off the fence. No matter what the bosses say, that gang will chirrup, "Yes". They're short on idees of their own or even half a guess. They think if they read "System", work overtime, and grind, they'll leave the other feller some twenty years behind. About one in a thousand will really get the prize; the other odd nine hundred will grind on till they dies.

Of course the boss he cashes in on all that eager strife that those poor ginks stake in the game of "Getting—On in Life".

If their poor brains were not so close to the felt pads of their chairs, the'd organize and join with us. Perhaps [illegible] they'll dare!

Communist Trial Gets Under Way at Chicago

CHICAGO.—Characterizing the meeting of the left-wing bolters from the regular convention of the Socialist Party last September as "an agreement or conspiracy to advocate the overthrow of the government of the United States and all states of the Union by force and violance," Lloyd Heth, assistant state's attorney, opened the long-delayed trial of twenty-four members of the Communist Labor Party on July 12th for the prosecution in Judge Oscar Hebel's court.

After the monotony of nine weeks of grilling of prospective jurors, in the course of which some fifteen hundred veniremen were summoned, the actual trial comes as a relief to all the parties concerned. Of the twenty four members of the Communist Labor Party originally indicted, 20 are in attendance.

"We are going to show that the left wing manifesto nineteen times advocates throughout its course a violent overthrow by the laboring men of this government and the establishment of a dictatorship of the proletariat in its stead," said Prosecutor Heth.

"We are going to show," he added, "That in the first paragraph of the platform of the Communist-Labor Party, the defendants state that they stand by and declare themselves in full accord and harmony with the manifesto adopted in Moscow, Russia.

"We are going to show," he added, "That the congress was composed of revolutionary socialists from Europe, Asia, and America that it was held for the purpose of forming a manifesto or program that would outline the means by which constituted governments might be overthrown and dictatorships of the proletariat established, and all nations be governed from Moscow."

Other evidence which the prosecution offers to submit to establish the guilt of the defendants includes the following:

That they adopted the red flag instead of the Stars and Stripes;

That they adopted the seal of the bolsheviks as the seal of their party;

That they opened and closed their daily sessions by singing the "Red Flag" and "giving the yell of the 'bolsheviks'."

That they urged the workingmen to abandon and repudiate forever the hope of conquering the state by legislative means—' they urge him to use unlawful means of any kind and nature whatsoever that may by effective in the annihilation of this government."

It is evident from the opening statement that the prosecution will bring all the way from Seattle, Washington and Winnipeg, Manitoba, witnesses to picture the awful things that are alleged to have happened because the workers in these cities went on general strike.

JULY, 14.—To day was "flag day" in court. The 131st anniversary of the taking of the Bastile was the occasion selected by Assistant State's Attorney Lloyd Heth to attempt to carry the jury by dramatically unfolding a red flag which his agents seized at the home of defendent Edgar Owens, Moline, Ill., last January. Heth sought to show that Owens had carefully preserved the red flag, which was found at his home in a search, while "the American flag was crumpled up in a corner of a closet along with a lot of rubbish."

Heth is a tall young man with the traditional prizefighter jaw. He apparently takes himself very seriously and constantly comes over to the press table to see that the reporters take down what he says. During the morning recess he had himself photographed holding the red flag.

Owens' membership card in the I. W. W. and the Communist Labor party and a charter of the Communist Labor party were admitted as evidence, Judge Hebel overruled the objection of counsel Forrest that "These do not tend to prove the conspiracy charges of the indictment", when Heth reported that "they prove the man is in favor of the revolution."

The prosecution then took up the case against William Bross Lloyd and introduced Francis Irving, a Chicago policeman who testified that on November 19, 1918, he stopped the defendant on a Chicago street because his automobile carried a red flag as well as an American Flag and that he took him to the police station. Forrest objected that this testimony was irrelevent inasmuch as the law violation of which Lloyd is charged with, was not passed until July, 1919 but the court overruled him. George C. Washburn, stenographer in the office of the Chicago police department, read the remarks of Lloyd at a meeting in the Chicago Coliseum November 17, 1918. Objection to this as inapplicable because it occured before the passage of the law was also overruled.

William A. Sadler, reporter on the Chicago Herold Examiner, recalled almost word for word an interview which he had with Lloyd in the Lloyd home last January though he did not have notes with him.

Chicago, July 15.—The manifesto of the Moscow Internation figured prominently in the trial of members of the Communist Labor Party today. Its full text was read to the jury but the document was admitted as evidence in the case of two defendants only, Max Badacht and L. E. Katterfeld who are alleged to have signed it. In the case of all other defendants, it was ruled out on vigorous objection of Counsel for defense Forrest, who insisted it could not be used to show criminal intent.

Additional testimony on the story of William Bross Lloyd's "sedition" speech in Milwaukee was given by Agnes Dunn of the Milwaukee Journal who having lost her stenographic notes recited the speech from memory. Robert H. Howe, secretary to Lloyd testified he had been instructed to send check for $650 to Louis Fraina for helping defray expenses of the New York Left Wing conference of June, 1919.

Detective Sergeant Charles E. Egan testified concerning the display of copies of the Moscow manifesto and the Revolutionary Age in the Radical Book shop owned by Arthur Proctor, one of the defendants. In this trial which is of members of both the Communist and the Communist Labor Party, the Communist Labor Party is being tried first

Will Forfeit Trade if Deportation Threat is Carried Out

Cancellation of contracts for $6,000,000 worth merchandise is the penalty which Boyer, Sloan & Co., of Montreal will pay if Santeri Nuorteva has been or will be deported by the British government.

This is the notification which the Russian Soviet government bureau at Washington forwarded the above named firm last week when news from England reached there declaring that Nuertova, private secretary to Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, had been arrested in London and was scheduled for deportation.

Nuertova sailed from a Canadian port a few weeks ago for London for the purpose of arranging for the financing of huge Canadian purchases of merchandise made by the Soviet representatives at New York for shipment to Russia. The cancellation of the orders would follow his deportation soviet bureau officials declared.

TIBOR SZAMUELY

A Hero of the Revolution

By N. Bukarin.

Every proletarian must and will familiarize himself with this name.

After the fall of the Hungarian Soviet Republic, it was found on the frontier that one of its prominent leaders had met his end. We do not know precisely under what conditions such a valuable life for the working class ceased to exist. The official news was sounded that comrade Szamuely, being arrested by the gendarmes of Renner and the "Second Internationale," who just yesterday were gendarmes of Karl of Hapsburg, had ended his life by committing suicide — shooting himself. Possibly it happened so.

Comrade Szamuely was a proud character of iron will; the probability of falling alive in the hands of his enemies, may have drawn him into this despair. He probably could not conceive the surrender of his revolutionary sword to his foes, but preferred death to imprisonment. Another thing is possible. Are the gendarmes of Renner better than the gendarmes of Noske? Are Seitz and Bauer better than Schidemann and Ebert? And if the German hangmen, who, motivated by an "attempt to escape"—murdered Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, the same could be accomplished by the Austrian hangmen against comrade Szamuely.

The Hungarian proletariat can be proud of this individual. We understand the madness and the anger that the Hungarian bourgeoisie had against our comrade. An unbending will, a rare coolbloodedness, a brilliant and sharp pen and unbreakable energy, those were the outstanding characteristics of comrade Szamuely.

He aquired his revolutionary lesson, as did Bela Kuhn, with us in Russia, and here it was that the writer of these lines made his acquaintance. Before that Szamuely was the editor of the central organ of the Hungarian socialists — "Nepszava". During the war in which he experienced much, as an officer, he was captured. Here he lived under the most unbearable conditions in Manchuria and Siberia. Frequently he was forced to work in the mines in mud and water knee deep. Hard sickness he suffered. He once attempted to escape, but on the Swedish frontier was rearrested by the Czar's gendarmes. At last the revolution set him free.

Since then Szamuely, like a young eagle exercised his wings. There are very few who so selfdenyingly devote themselves to the cause that put the historical strata in motion; like a real revolutionist he was imbued with the art of a revolutionist. He was ready for every deed,—even the unpleasant and unattractive in character—the greatest and the smallest alike. With similar enthusiasm actively engaged in study class work; being the editor of the newspaper he, with that weapon combatted the outbreak of the counter-revolution, he wrote pamphlets, he worked in extraordinary comittees, spoke at meetings or drew the order of the day for other comrades. At any moment he was ready to let his "Mauser" talk from which he never parted. A man of unusual courage, Szamuely always was on the lookout.

TIBOR SZAMUELY.

Generally necrologies are not free from exaggerations. That does not pertain to Szamuely, in relation to him it cannot be exaggerated. I am writing these lines, and imagine before me lovely and wise eyes of my comrade, from these eyes a tired glimpse with sarcastic smile flowing steadily,—tired, nervous, but energetic face. Comrade Szamuely rarely slept more than from four to five hours, the rest of his life was devoted to the revolution.

Many people have I seen,—revolutionists of all countries. But rarely have I found such confidential and devoted comrades as Szamuely. All his life was a beutiful example of revolutionary chivalry. Szamuely died in his youth. There is no doubt that his virtues would develop more broadly. But even what he gave the proletariat in his early years, is unforgetable. Among the other martyrs his figure will be an outstanding one between the two historical epochs—as a symbol in the struggle and Communism.

"Five Years War", Premier Answers Railway Men's Demand

By the Federated Press

LONDON.—"Five years' war and a million causalties" rather tthan recognition of the independence of Ireland, was Lloyd George's answer to a deputation of British railway men who called upon him to urge the withdrawal of the army of occupation from Ireland and the cessation of the transportation of munitions. The Premier threatened to close down the Irish railways unless the men agreed to help him in operation against Ireland.

J. H. Thomas who acted as spokesman of the railway-men said that if the troops were not withdrawn at least a truce should be called. Lloyd George refused to consider withdrawal of the troops.

"If it is a question of setting up an independent Irish Republic in this small group of islands, that is a thing we could accept if we were absolutely beaten to ground," he said. "In the United States Lincoln faced a five years' war and a million causalties rather than acknowledge the independence of the southern states. We should do the same thing."

Bloodshed would follow the government's threatened policy of locking out railway workers who refused to carry munitions in Ireland, Thomas declared. "There is bound to be the most terrible starvation," he asserted. "Of course your troops can wipe out the Irish people, but you will not even then have contributed toward the solution of the problem."

"We really have got to remain absolutely adamant," was the Premiers reply.

(Didn't I read signs like: "Help us win the war for the sake of „humanity, liberty, freedom and selfdetermination of all small countries?—Maybe I was dreaming.— Compositor.)

MOSCOW.—A resolution approving a foreign policy based on an attempt to make peace with other nations and the desire to let every nation decide its fate for itself was passed by the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets at a meeting June 18. The policy was outlined by Tchitcherin, Commissar of Foreign Affairs to an audience composed not only of Soviet officials but of delegates from all parts of the world who had come to the Third International.

The burden of Tchitcherin's speech was an outline of the negotiations of the Soviet government with various nations for thepurpose of re-stablishing peace. In this convention he referred to the ambiguous policy of the Entente nations, which while negotiations were going forward with Krassin, at the same time supported the Poles and fitted out Wrangel. He insisted that the sole aim of the Soviet government had been to make peace with all the world and resume normal commercial relations.

Three Buckets of Blood

Or the astonishing adventures of one, Duckworth by name, erstwhile reporter for the Cleveland "Press" in the land of the Bol-shev-iks.

If the Cleveland Press ever gets away from its timeworn habit of placing the word bolshevist in the same sentence with blood shed and human gore, it will be a happy day for its readers. The monotony is becoming oppressive. In this particular, the Press is following an established policy however of never giving its readers anything new. It is doubtful if it will live to break the rule.

For weeks there have appeared special-articles ostensibly written by one, J. H. Duckworth, a representative of the Press who was sent to Russia to see what he could see of bolshevism. These articles have the ear marks of being written by the youngest reporter in a contest to prove his lack of veracity as a qualification for his job as Press reporter. However that may be, we have followed them with a watchful eye for any accidental elements of truth or probility that may have crept in. But the quest is hopeless. We give it up and we want to tell you why.

Take the issue of the Press for July 15th and let your eye rest upon the illustrated title head of columns one and two. Notice the drawings—right out of an illustrated "Buccaneers of the Spanish Main"; the blood dripping dagger in the mouth of the villain; three buckets slopping over with blood, the agressive figures of the two-gun man. All calculated to be both funny and to leave the impression of bloodshed and murder in connection with bolshevism, sovietism and the Russian people.

The first line will lead you to believe that the story arrived via wireless on the date of publication. This pleasant little deciet of newspaperdom should not worry you as it is common practice to place the date of publication and the name of a foreign city at the beginning of news articles which were cooked up in the reporters' room.

But anyway, this Duckworth got into Russia, past the vigilant Red Guards, who would have murdered him before breakfast, we are led to believe had they caught him. He wanders about Russia at times dodging the terrible Reds and at others consorting freely with them. There are tense moments when we are led to believe that should the Reds discover the identy of our hero the jig would be up and then again he comes out in the open braving the daggers and all and jokingly conversing with commisars and the multitude alike without apparent fear or danger to his presious civilized neck.

But this particular two columns of ten point is especially interesting in that it contains and unusual number of improbabilities. Hero Duckworth meets a bolsheviki from New York in the office of the "Rosta" in Pskov. The New Yorker bolshevist, Medell by name, who is of course, dirty, badly in need of a shave and wearing trousers apparently pulled off a Zarist trooper much larger than himself.

Right here we object to the trend of the story. We would like to know something about that newspaper "Rosta". Is it a bolshevist paper? How is it run? How is the help hired and paid, all alike or some more than others? What is the particular character of the "Rosta" and what in general is its policy? It it up against a paper scaracity as we are in America? A dozen questions arise, in our mind, but no, there is nothing about that. Mr. Duckworth merely sat in the office of the "Rosta" apparently safe, and there met Medell and there the matter of the "Rosta" ends. We think Duckworth is a damned poor newspaper man to lose a chance to tell us all about how bolshevist newspapers are run, and allow himself to be led astray by an accidental meeting with a dirty bolshevist from N. Y. It seems that Medell was at one time on the Commission for the Suppression of Counter Revolution, but having a weak heart he found it impossible to order the shooting of prisoners. However, he bucks up in the next sentence and says he is ready to shoot a bourgeoise anytime—"just like a dog". But Duckworth doubts his statement. He "thinks he returned to Russia for 'pickings' and was disappointed". Can you imagine a bolshevist returning to Russia in the midst of revolution with the hope of other than suffering and perhaps dying? But leave that to Duckworth.

But Medell is still interested in New York. "Is it really dry", he inquires anxiously. Considering that Russia is and has been partly so since the decree of the Czar and entirely so since the Bolshevist emptied the wine cellars of the bourgeoisie in the streets, we do not see the implication. If Medell so loved his American steamed beer why did he leave it for pickings in revolutionary torn Russia?

The scene shifts to the Hotel Palermo. Then there are really hotels in Russia. Having been led to believe that utter disorganization and ruin permeated Russia, it is refreshing to know that hotels are still open to the public and doing legitimate business. Still more refreshing is it to learn that a dinner of "boiled pike" was set before our faithful reporter. Then there is still something to be had to eat in Russia! We are glad to hear it. Medell walks in. As the story continues, Medell has not profited by his brush with Western civilization. He spies Duckworth's boiled pike and immediately snatches it from his plate and devours it on the spot. This in spite of the fact that he at the same time enters into negotiations for treading bolshevist money for Czar money, or any kind mony which Duckworth may have in his possession, and seems to have plenty with which to purchase his own boiled pike. At the best this story sounds fishy.

Then the story bids good by to Medell, the boiled pike, the three buckets of blood and ends in a statement that all bolshevik commissars are eagerly gathering up all the Czar, Duma and Kerensky money they can get hold of, which indicates that a counter revolution is expected, implying that the bolshevists can't last much longer at most.

Ofttimes disillusionments are severe shocks but we trust the Press will recover when it learns that all prostitution is not of the flesh.

Those Polish Bonds — and Recognition

— By Laurence Todd —

Staff Correspondent—The Federated Press.

WASHINGTON. They're sweating blood, at the State Department because the armies of Soviet Russia are encircling Warsaw with a gigantic military pincers that presently may crush that pasteboard republic of junkers like an eggshell.

Seventy-five million dollars of the bonds of this Polish government are lying in the Treasury of the United States, received in payment for locomotives, freight cars—4,600 of them—vast supplies of food, clothing, hospital equipment, motor cars steam cranes, shoes, guns and all sorts of war munitions sold by the War Department Sales Division and the Army Liquidation Commission to the Warsaw adventurers.

These bonds are printed on good paper and in clear ink, and they declare on their face that at the expiration of six years the Polish Republic will pay the $75,000,000 in gold; meantime it will pay 5 per cent interest on them. Couriously enough, the deal was not made in Washington or in Warsaw, but in Paris. And it was made with a private commercial firm, which gave the Polish bonds as payment Delivery of the goods has been made on requisition by the Polish authorities.

This $75,000,000 is divided into two lots. The Liquidation Commission sold American food and other supplies that were already in France for $59,000,000. The Sales Division of the War Department then sold to the same empty-pocketed customer $16,000,000 worth of goods that were in the United States. The shipping board and the Army used Government vessels to carry the goods to Danzig, and received more bonds of the Polish Republic instead of cash for the job. And the Navy sold some goods, also. The returns from this shipping contract and from the Navy are not yet confessed at the Treasury.

Polish military adventurers are not the only ones to exchange printed paper for real food and clothing and machinery. Esthonia and Lithuania and Latvia have each had the same sort of good luck, engineered in the same way—through sale to a private corporation. Even the will'-o-wisp Ukraine "government" secured a contract, but this was finally cancelled because the "security" was considered doubtful.

State Department officials admit that recognition has not been given all of these little governments set up by the Allies on the borders of Russia, but they claim that the United States has a "normal obligation" to the non-Bolshevist people of Europe that makes it perfectly all right to gamble on any of them. Moreover, the sales were made last year, when the chance of overthrowing Soviet Russia by the aid of Yudenitch, Denikine and Kolchak was considered especially good. Now that Soviet Russia has destroyed all of these invading forces of Zarism and is driving off the Polish invasion with a rude thoroughness that promises to leave little left of the Pilsudski adventure, there is anxiety in the War and Navy and Treasury Departments, and more than anxiety in the State Departments. For, what will the voters say, when they realize that 4,600 railroad cars, even though of European gange, and millions of pounds of corned beef and oleomargarine and other essential foodstuffs, have been traded for Polish bonds?

Since the day that Ambassador Francis cabled from Petrograd that the new Bolshevist government was a pack of Jews that would not last more than two weeks, and since Secretary Lansing showed that message to Ambassador Bakhmeteff, with the suggestion that he refuse to [illegible] the Soviet regime, American policy toward Russia has followed the devious course of pride trapped by its own doceit. Desparately the Department disbelieves that Soviet Russia can last "more than a few months", and steadily the armies of Soviet Russia, fired by the faith of universal brotherhood and social democracy, surge westward against the crumbling wall of allied bayonets. Now the ban against trade with Soviet Russia has been lifted, even by the State Department of the United States. And to-morrow—?

Recognition?

There is that stack of bonds—fresh from the hands of Pilsudski.

BILL'S OPINION.

TACOMA, Wash.—"The hammered down, sawed-off, knock-kneed, bowlegged, wall-eyed, lantern jawed I. W. W. or Socialist agitator is too rotten for hell," "Rev." Billy Sunday, sensational evangelist, told a crowd of 15,000 in the Stadium here as he waved his arms while standing on the speakers' table.

We Want You To Help Us Spread the Light.

Here's how. Send us the names and addresses of news stands in your town. Better still, take a copy of The Toiler and interview the newsdealers. Ask them to order a small bundle of Toilers at 2c per copy for a try out.

News dealers are selling The Toiler in other cities. Why not in your town? We want you to help us secure at last one news dealer who will agree to give The Toiler a try out.

If you are one of the live ones, this little job is yours.

Will you do it? The time is NOW.

Send us the names of newsdealers in your town—NOW.

Another Renegade

By H. E. Keas

One more labor magazine has heard the golden call. "Western Railway Journal," published monthly in Los Angeles by The Railway Men's Publishing Company, Inc., once a journal of much promise in the labor world, has gone definitely reactionary. This magazine, of excellent typographical appearance, enjoys a general circulation among railroad men of the western states. Class-conscious railroad workers in the western territory and elsewhere who are acquainted with the past record of this magazine, especially during the year 1918 and 1919, will be bitterly disappointed when they contrast its present policy with that of a short time ago.

Altho the magazine, was not, strictly speaking, a radical labor journal, it formerly gave space to articles treating of the different phases of the growing labor movement both here and abroad, without fear or favor. Its policy was that of an "open forum" for the railroad union membership and the only restrictions as to articles appearing in its pages were that "all contributions must be signed by the writer to insure publication. Individual contributors are responsible for their own articles." Under this arrangement the magazine became in fact, an open forum. Many first-rate articles and letters were given space, most of them permeated with the new militant spirit of class-conscious labor. Many sincere and honest railroad workers contributed articles, letters and cartoons for its pages without thought of remuneration. Here is "our journal," they said. Here we may have a hearing, and become acquainted with the views of our fellow workers in turn." As contrasted with the repressive policy of the official union journals, the magazine rapidly gained a large following. Both sides of every question were given opportunity to express their views. Never "hidebound," it was an open medium of expression. What more could the railroad workers ask?

But all this has been changed. No longer will the progressive and class-conscious spirits among the railroad men turn to its pages with hopes running high. The golden call has been the deciding factor. Of this, the writer first became conclusively aware in the fall of 1919. In the latter part of August of that year, the American working people were horrified with the news of the dastardly crime committed by Steel Trust gunmen, in the brutal murder of Mrs Fannie Sellins, an A. F. of L. organizer, at Brackenridge, Pennsylvania. Filled with the terrible injustice of such actions against the working class by the hirelings of capital, the writer, up to this time a frequent contributor to its pages, forwarded to "Western Railway Journal, a short article, fully authenticated, covering the commission of the crime, together with a small cut of poor Mrs. Sellins' crushed head, made from a photo taken after her body had been removed to the morgue. At the same time, the writer also forwarded to them a marked copy of another article and photo appearing in a contemporary labor journal published in the east, fully covering the horrible crime, with the suggestion that could they not print the article contributed by the writer, they at least publish the cut and give the facts, using as much of either article as was necessary to do this. The cut and the article contributed by the writer were returned to him, the editor giving the excuse that he "could not publish account too aggressive." Too aggressive! When the entire American labor movement was smarting with the hideousness of this cold-blooded crime against one of its beloved leaders. Undaunted by the rebuff, the writer, in a letter to one of the associate editors of the journal, took the chief editor to task. The associate editor immediately placed the matter before his chief. Here is his account of the affair. I quote his letter in part:

"......You said something! It was bully and hit the spot. I took it up to our big chief and sat down and told him to read and digest it. I thought it would ruffle him, but it did not; he acknowledged without hesitation that you were right and said that you expressed his real feelings, but he had been warned several times to go a little easy for the time being and as he was under obligations to those who were behind the paper, he did not want to take a chance just now of getting us in bad with an element that would be pleased to make it interesting for our cause." What a spineless policy for a professed labor paper. Labor paper indeed!

Now, increasing number of the railroad workers of the western states and elsewhere will wonder as to just who are "those......behind the paper." But they will not have to wonder long. We find the answer in the July, 1920, number of this once promising magazine. No longer is this journal the open forum of the disinherited and toiling wageslave, but, topping its editorial columns, we find a statement that the "Western Railway Journal" has "no patience with violence and disorder." The violence and disorder of the master class? We wonder. That "we do not believe in and do not approve of the direct action as advocated by the I. W. W.'s or Reds, and will not publish anything encouraging it." And following this a short endorsement of the middle-of-the-fence policy that has kept American labor hopelessly muddled for the past forty years.

Then we come to the leading editorial, "I. W. W.-ism." Here we find a short mention of the Centralia trial, the alleged interference by radicals with the war plans of the government, the destroing of thousands of dollars worth of produce; allegations many of which have been definitely proven untrue. The editor then treats of the recent and still-continuing deportations of alien radicals, censures the I. W. W. and "radicals of every kind," in a venomous effusion which would do credit to the best capitalist examples of this kind. No getting at the facts No apparent desire to ascertain the truth about these matters and to [illegible] impartially to the [illegible] to judge. Only bitter denunciation of everything radical in general. And right at the time when all thinking elements of the American labor movement are rapidly going radical-ward. Right at the time when the Attorney-General and the Department of Justice are undergoing the most severe condemnation by the liberal element of the country for the recent brutal raids and deportations. Condemnation and allegations suported by indisputable evidence which all fairminded persons can not logically question. But then, we go on a bit further and here we find the reason for the change of policy, for the effusions of venom, for the thottling of labor's cause. Fat advertising contracts do not reconcile themselves with fearless advocacy of labor's real interests. As a naive acknowledgement of their obligations to "those...... behind the paper," why this support is so freely given and why we may expect to find many more editorials of a reactionary character in the pages of this "labor" journal in its future issues, the article is a gem. We quote it in its entirety, typographical errors and all:

"PATRONAGE APPRECIATED."

"The patronage given the Western Railway Journal this month by the merchants and business men of Portland, Centralia and Chehalis is greatly appreciated by the railroadmen who own and control the Journal. By this support we are able to circulate the Journal more freely among the railroad men, and do what we can to advance the cause of good unionism. The Journal ADWOCATES AMERICANISM and not Bolshevism, and I. W. W.-ism, and does not in any way encourage the red or radical extremists. It hankers not to follow the rainbow of extreme radicalism into unpioneered paths or across unchartered seas. Unionism is plenty good enough for American labor, and we hope to soon see peace and harmony between the employers and the employes."

There we have it. Do not take the writer's word for it! All that is necessary is for one to go over the files of the magazine during the time from 1918 to the present. Note that as the matters of vital interests to labor were "soft-pedalled" or not mentioned at all, the fat advertising contracts increased inversely. Especially note the July, 1920, number, from which the writer has quoted. Note the "patronage given...... by the merchents and business men of......Centralia"——Centralia! Where the policy of labor hatred and repression pursued by the business element of this western town was primarily responsible for the attack on the I. W. W. hall by men of the American Legion, and the resultant tragedy. What support for a labor journal to accept! Support dripping with blood. And the "good" unionism, forsooth! That "good unionism" so much in favor with the capitalist masters of America, which idea has been given such admirable expression by Finley Peter Dunne, in the quaint old Irish wit of "Mr. Dooley.

"But," says Mr. Hennessey, "these open shop min ye menshun say they are f'r th' unions iv properly conducted."

"Shure," said Mr. Dooley, "iv properly conducted. An' there we are. An' how would they have them conducted? No shtrikes, no rules, no conthracts, no scales, hardly iny wages, an' damn few members."

The Collapse of [illegible] World Movement

By Mary Senior

Written for the Federated Press

New York:— (N. Y. Bureau) Putting God on a sound financial basis, the task undertaken by the Interchuuch World Movement, has proved a wild-cat scheme.

The movement has collapsed, in spite of the vote just taken by the General Committee to continue "Though on a greatly modified scale." It has collapsed largely because holy-minded capital, when it found the Interchurch Movement entering its own precincts by making investigations of large industrial centers, decided that the concern of the church was with the other world and not with this, and withdrew its financial support.

So long as the Interchurch leaders planned schools and missions to encircle the earth with piety, and so long as they issued advertisements of the kind that pictured a large cross at the top but a photograph of Roger Babson at the botton, so long as they spoke of their ministers as the stewards and business agents of the Lord, chosen to put over his business on this globe, capital handed over large sums. But when the Industrial Relations Department of the Interchurch World Movement laid down the principle last October that labor has the right to bargain collectively and began its investigation of the steel industry at the time of the big strike, the Interchurch ran into a snag. Ructions began.

The first break which indicated trouble below the surface came in the last week in May when General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church withdrew from the Movement. The reasons given out for the severance were that the Movement was spending too much money and using wastful methods.

In reality, Banquo's ghost the steel investigation, was present at the feast. Maitland Alexander, a minister in the fashionable section of Pittsburgh trying to hide the embarrassing spectre behind the extravagance charges, led the opposition. He is a member by marriage of the Laughlin family of the Jones and Laughling Steel Company, next to the Bethlehem, the most powerful independent steel company in the country. The company is unalterably opposed to union labor and practically owns the steel town of Woodlawn, Pa., where constitutional rights of free speech, press and assembly have been crushed. In Alexander's congregation which is composed largely of steel manufacturers or those interested in the industry, feeling ran high over the steel report.

Dr. Alexander, in denying the charges made by liberal members of the Movement that he was influenced by "steel" in [illegible] the withdrawal of the Presbyterians, said: "Personally I could not see how a body could accomplish anything by dabbling in industrial affairs when their work was supposed to be along spiritual lines."

The next group to leave the Movement were the Northern Babtists, who withdrew late in June. The move was urged by the Rev. J. Y. Aitchison of the Allegheny County committee, who with other Pittsburgh members ruled that none of the subscriptions made in their county should be used for such "side issues" as the steel investigation. Allegheny County is in the heart of the steel district.

In the meantime, the bone of contention, the 90,000 word steel report was effectually side-tracked. No interim report was issued during the crisis of the steel strike when it would have been effective. Now that unionism in the steel industry has been almost completely crushed, the Committee promises to flood the country with free copies of the full report.

The history of the vicissitudes through which the report has gone makes a story in itself. From the moment the investigathors struck the steel districts the steel masters got busy. Investigators carrying letters from prominent men and women, called upon officials in the steel works, asking that all facts and statistics be made available to them for a careful, impartial study. They were advised to return to New York City and go no further. If they wanted information the New York steel offices could give it to them, they were informed. Spies of the steel company seemed to spring from the earth to watch, to listen, and to follow the investigators. Conversations were started by strange men, leading questions were asked. The investigators found that their telephone calls and mail were being received by men registered at hotels in their names.

A report from one of these "under informers," to Judge Gary in New York, came into the ahnds of one of the investigators. The opening paragraphs are given here:

"November 12th 1919.

"Special report in re Interchurch World Movement of America of 111 Fifth Avenue, New York City:

"After an investigation of this movement I find that there are a large number or radicals in it.

"First, the man in charge of the publicity is Robert Bruers, who is the same party that wrote a book called "On the Trail of I. W. W.' This book was a sob story about the way that the I. W. W. had been treated in the past. He was also a member of the I. W. W. belonging to one of the New York Locals.

"A Mr. Soules, who is now in Pittsburgh, having an office in the Smithfield Street Methodsist Episcopal Church building, corner Smithfield Street and Seventh Avenue, is another radical, and was a member of the National Liberties League of New York and also a member of the I. W. W. He is now here for this organization investigating the steel strike and carrying a small kodak, making pictures around the steel districts. These photographs are to be used in the coming investigating work which will be conducted in Pittsburgh in the near future.

"Another one of the party here is Miss Avage, and also Mary O'Brien, or Mrs. Van Vorte; both of them are radicals."

Members of the investigating committee have pointed out in this one extract, which composes only a fourth of the full report, no less than six errors. Robert Bruere was never in any way connected with the steel survey nor with the I. W. W. The Mr. Soules referred to is meant to be Mr. Soule, who has never been a member of the I. W. W. There is no organization of the name of the National Liberties League. No kodaks were used by the investigators util long after the filing of this report. Mary Heaten Vorse is meant by Mrs. Van Vorte.

Soon after this the Interchurch Movement began to show "cold feet about the rash step of investigating the business of its chief members and contributors.

When the spy's libelous report was published in their journal by the Ohio Merchants' Association, which opposed the Interchurch, the Interchurch did not rise to defend its own investigators. Only upon the insistence of one of the libeled men did the Interchurch finally threaten to sue the merchants association, but it absolutely balked when asked by this same investigator to determine the sources of the false report. It even suggested that the libeled workers furnish affidavits of their personal records.

The report would have been entirely suppressed, it is said, except for the persistence of the strike commission. They appeared in a body at the Cleveland meeting of the Interchurch May 10, to insist upon action. Certain Cleveland newspapers, grasping the situation, made clear to Interchurch officials what unsavory publicity would follow the killing of the report.

By September, nearly a year after the steel strike, the conditions which caused it are to be revealed in a report published at the expense of those who are guilty. In trying to reconcile religion with modern industry, the steel makers, faced with the choice of God or Gary, have chosen Gary.

The Black Sheep.

Commencement.

CHAPT. XL.

While Jack and Collins were attending the now historic trial at Boise, Olive Anderson graduated from High School at Anamosa, after which, she was persuaded by her mother to take a trip to Colorado, for her summer vacation. Needless to say, the idea was entirely agreeable to her, nor was the reason for her willingness obscure. Colorado at this time was the storm center of the class war. And it was the class war in which she was supremely interested. Had her mother known the real cause of her willingness she would have opposed her going with all her power. But Mrs. Anderson, like most bourgeois mothers, knew nothing of the class struggle neither did she know anything of the power with which it grips the human soul. She thought that her daughter was in love with to her, an unknown boy. As a matter of fact Olive was infected with Socialism, and was going through, what may be termed the acute stage. Jack was a factor in her life, the ideals of Socialism were her life itself.

She had an uncle who lived at Boulder, Colorado. He was her mother's brother. Mrs. Anderson felt sure that if she could get her child from under the influence of her husband and under the brother's care, she would be far less likely to meet the boy again, and if she did, the mother knew that her brother would be a formidable opponent to the bay. Mrs. Anderson expected Jack to return at harvest time to the wheat fields of North Dakota with intention of harvesting more than wheet. With a mind that seldom raised itself above the ritualism of religion or the gossip of the neighborhood she could see in her daughter's interest in the boy, nothing higher than a mere sex attraction. It must be said however, that Olive's conversation, and the ocoasional letters she happened to find in the room greatly tended to strenghten her suspicious. She firmly resolved, to leave no stone unturned in her endovor to keep these two apart.

The fact, that if Olive corresponded with him from North Dakota, she would correspond with him from Colorado, and that if the boy would come back to her in North Dakota he would also go to her in Colorado, was not lost to the mind of mother Anderson. It also figured prominently in the calculations of her husband. True, Anderson pointed out these facts to his spouse and urged not without logic that if what Mrs. Anderson feared were true, it would be better to have the girl at home, where they could watch the progress of the affair, and if need be use drastic measures to stop it. While, if she met him in Colorado, she would be practically left to her own devices.

Sound as Anderson's logic undoubtedly was, it had little or no weight with his wife. Nothing he ever did or said had any weight, with her except his pocket book. Between him and his wife, love had died years ago. She surrendering her love to Jesus, and he devoting himself to business and cultivating a misguided zeal trying to keep his daughter ignorant of the ways of the world. To his wife, he was little more than a source of income. With customary bourgeois intelligence, she took the money he gathered, and spent it on her beloved parson, and the conventional church charities, thanking God, instead of him

But, if Anderson's logic was good, his wife could not see it. She feared that her husband with his apparent admiration for the boy, would probably encourage, rather than oppose, Olive's association with him. In this, however, she was entirely mistaken. Anderson loved his daughter above everything else on earth. Mrs. Anderson could not see that, but her daughter knew it. With Olive, his mistakes had been those of the heart rather than the brain, that is as far as his relations with her was concerned He had only love, and no ambition for his child, except to see the flower of her genius bloom forth unhampered, to its richest color and fragnance. While her mother, contrary to the conventional conception of what mothers ought to be, wanted to use Olive as a link with which to tie herself to her favorite social elique.

Thus it was, that Mrs. Anderson calculated that her brother in Colorado, whose religions and social proclivities, were very much like her own, would be a more formidable enemy to Jack, than her husband.

Of one thing she felt certain, that her brother would consult her, on all matters pertaining to the girl's welfare, and do his utmost to inforce her mother's will upon the child. While her husband would, as a general rule, consult either his own mind, or yield to his daughter's. For these reasons she decided to let Olive go to Boulder for the summer, where she would be in a community of her church brethern, and where later she could enter the university.

She felt certain that her brother would co-operate with her to the fullest extent. In fact she had written him what she considered to be the facts in the case, and he had agreed to buy Jack off as soon as he appeared on the scene, failing in which, he would send Olive home immediately. These plans she had kept carefully guarded from her husband. Altho it must be said to his credit that he suspected something of this order, and frankly told Olive what he considered the mother's plan to be.

One evening while working in his office, with Olive helping him file some letters, he stopped suddenly, and said, as he found one of Jack's letters in the unopened mail, "You must understand me Olive, that I do not approve of your correspondence with that young fellow, for the very good reason, that I know nothing about him. But that is not saying that I know all the decent and desirable people in the world. He may be as good as any man on earth. I know he has more brains than the average. He may be alright, and if he is, and you love him I'll give you both a start. And if he is not, and you are convinced that he can make you happy, don't rush things, but bring him home, and I will help you make him what he ought to be. Your mother thinks that I am afraid to let you go to your uncle, that is not the case you meet him there. If he is the right sort, he will treat you as you ought to be treated, and I have confidence enough in your natural ability, that I believe no man on earth could get the best of you. You know that your Dad will help you in any thing you want and he'll let you be the judge of whether it is good or bad. I have tried to make your life for you, and failed. Now I am going to try to help you make your own life, so that you will win, and after all that is what counts with me. Play fair with your Dad, Ollie and he will play fair with you.'

"So I think you had better go to Colorado, and spend the summer running around the hills. This fall you can enter the University there, and I will come up and have a look as to how you are making it." Then after filling a pipe and causing it to describe its customary circle before his face from the corner of his mouth he added, "and when you get back into school, dig into your books, and forget those rotten papers you have been reading. They are enough to drive an average man crazy, let alone a silly romantic girl."

At all of this, Olive smiled a casual good natured but not unapreciative smile. "It is no use for us to argue these questions, Daddy. We have argued them often enough. In fact we have done little else for the past eight months. The trouble with us is, that we look at life from different angles Te me the purpose of life is to serve my fellow men, to help them to improve their lot, and you live to use your fellow men, to improve your lot You may be right and I wrong, but if you are right, it is no use that I educate myself. I would rather that death overtake me, before I actually take part in this world's affairs, than to live with the consciousness that I fattened and prospered on the injustice done to my fellow beings."

Anderson waved his hand in a depreciatory jesture. "Utopia Ollie bughouse utopia," he said emphatically. I bet you fifty dollars that even your sweetheart would take what he can get, wherever he can get it. Such ideas as you have are born of empty pockets in men, and of empty heads in women. You take yourself too seriously. That is all. You are bent on making a lot of crazy sacrifices for which the mob won't thank you. The popular guy is the guy who gets it." Then after a pause, during which he eyed the firl admiringly, he continued: "Any way, after all is said and done, parasite as I am, I am the best friend you havo on earth, Ollie, and durn your little hide you know it."

"Why of course I know it," said his daughter, as she walked over to him and ran her fingers thru his hair. "I don't blame you, but the system."

"Now cut that out. You talk like Case Bateman, that crazy socialist down on Lake Anthony. He is always hollering about the system. I'd give a dollar to break up what little system he has." Then in a softer vein, "Now Ollie be reasonable. What could I have done for you, if I didn't get it off the other fellow?"

"That's where the system is wrong. There is enough for all, and we should so conduct society, that all could have enough, as a reward for service rendered," Olive presisted.

"Oh, those rotten papers. I wish I knew who sent them to you. Still don't misunderstand me I don't say there is no truth in them."

Eve since Olive had met Jack and the consequent change in her mental attitude towards things as they were in her class in society, Anderson had tried with his customary thoroughness to rehabilitate his daughter's shaken trust in him. He had succeeded most admirably, for instead of an alienation a closer and very practicable comradeship had grown up between him and his daughter. He realized that she knew the game, and discussed [illegible] frankly with her, and she understood and loved him because of his fearlessness in telling her the truth. Truth, the reality of which she [illegible] spised. What was true of his attitude toward her in business relations, [illegible] social conduct was even more true [illegible] his attitude toward the boy with whom his daughter corresponded. He at times took a nonchalante attitude. Simply discussing probable fact, drawing impersonal conclusions [illegible] to look upon the whole affair [illegible] them. In this way, he taught the [illegible] healthy manner, and she freely [illegible] him all the facts in which he was deeply interested. He read all [illegible] boy's letters, and much of her replies.

The White Terror in Hungary

III.

The delegates of the British Trade Unions lost no time in protesting, in Budapest as well as in London, against the active assistance of their government to the worst deeds of the White Terror.

They had been sufficiently warned by the experience of the Italian Delegates, so that they did not expect any marvellous results from their journey. They would be content, they intimated, if the impressive indictment collected within three days in Vienna among the refugees from Hungary, among people, part of whom still bear marks of tortures visibly on their bodies might be shown by them but once to the autor of the White Terror, Admiral Horthy, and to his protector, the British Plenipotentiart Minister at Budapest, Mr. Hohler. This man is to high degree personally responsible for all these atrocities, chiefly perhaps by the report to his government about "the alleged White Terror", which was submitted to the British Parliament and which should be read by every worker in order to see by it how the diplomacy of haughty capitalists may mock the sufferings of the working-class. Today the delegates of the British Trade Unions know enough to give, in a counter-report, a due answer to this master-hypocrite. This answer too may claim the attention of the workers of the world.

The delegation of British Labor left Vienna yesterday for England. They have seen most horrible things. Colonel Wedgwood is soon to speak in Parliament, and all of them will report to the Labor Party and submit their executive a resolution, which is going to be dealt with at the national meeting of the Labor party at Scarborough on the 21st of June. To this day the tortured Hungarian proletariat is looking forth with yearning hopes.

On May 28th the London conference confirmed the resolution of the Amsterdam office of the Trade Unions' Federation, namely: to boycott Horthy-Land as a protest against White Terror and as a means of fighting against this governmental method. As far as the practical executive is concerned, the attitude of the trade union of British Transport Workers will of decisive importance. The transport workers of the countries represented in the Interallied Federation—England, France, Austria, Holand, Germany and Denmark.—All, there is no doubt about it, know their duty.

On the very same day the Norwegian Labor Party protested most vehemently against the toleration of this disgraceful regime and called on the workers of the world to fight against it.

Thus from four sides at least an appeal has been made or will be made to the working classes of the world, to do whatever they can for their Hungarian brothers, who are thrown helplessly at the mercy of the common enemy. The White Terror is raging in Hungary; it is as cynical and as instiable as that of Thiers and Gallifet in 1871 at Paris, as cruel and insatiable as that of General Mannerhaim in Finland in 1918. It is obviously growing, and new orgies of blood are being prepared. Some 6.000 persons have already been murdered, more than 60,000 are pining in camps and prisons and every one of them may be killed by any officer, whenever it pleases the latter. So far not one these uniformed murderers has been made to answer for his crimes.

A feeling of deadly anxiety oppresses the industrial workers and the agricultural laborers of the whole country. These are conditions which touch upon the lot of every worker in every country of the world. They are possible only because of the lack of solidarity among the workers. Working class solidarity is the only thing that can alter them.

But for the moment solidarity means: to be as strong as possible in the struggle against one's own capitalism, against one's own capitalistic government. A working class incapable of this may expect to see the Hungarian horrors one day in its own country. They may not believe it today; even yesterday it was not believed in Hungary. It has become an experience today. The workers of every country have good reasons to keep their eyes, that have been sharpened by wathing the Hungarian example, well open at home.

The Hungary of today is the laboratory for all great reactionary experiment.

(The End)

THE ECONOMIC POLICY OF THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT

From "Soviet Russia".

The economic policy of the Soviet Government was established in the midst of incessant fighting, when the entire country was a vast military camp, and the problems of the war were paramount. To put this policy into practice demanded an intense application of forces to overcome internal as well as external resistance. The carrying out of this policy was hindered as much by the attacks of the counter-revolutionists as by the open and secret sabotage of the superior technical personnel; inertia and prejudice were the enemies to be fought in a difficult struggle.

The Soviet organs which direct the economic life are based upon trade union organizations. From top to bottom the system of direction is constructed upon trade union organizations. From top to bottom the system of direction is constructed upon this basis.

At the head of the entire administration is the Supreme Council of National Economy; in the provinces the local Councils of National Economy.

All the activities of the Supreme Council of National Economy are supervised by a Bureau composed of eleven persons. Corresponding to the various branches of industry: metallurgical, chemical, textile, electro-technical, etc., the Supreme Council of National Economy is divided into fifty sections of production, at the head of which are the Committees, each composed of from three to seven persons.

The appointment of the president of the Supreme Council of National Economy are approved by the stitute, are ratified by the Central Executive Committee of the Soviets of all Russia; that of the members of the Bureau by the Council of People's Commissaries. But the candidatures are usually submitted before ratification to the general Council of Russian labor unions.

All the sectional committees of the Supreme Council of National Economy are opproved by the Bureau, but never until after a preliminary understanding with the corresponding syndicate. The workers as well as the specialists (engineers, technicians), have members in all the committees and in the Bureau.

The local Councils of National Economy are the executive organs of the Supreme Council of National Economy, and are organized on the same basis as the latter, though being more restricted.

The management of the factories and administration for the various state enterprises and trusts is composed in each case of from five to seven members (workers and specialists), but they are sanctioned by the corresponding section of the Supreme Council of National Economy or of the local Council of National Economy only after a preliminary understanding with the corresponding syndicate.

A great number of specialists are on the Committees and in the management of factories: as many as sixty per cent are specialists and forty per cent are workers.

Thus the Soviet power replaced the system of capitalist direction by the Soviet system, which planted deep roots in the farthest corners of our economic life. Despite the difficult external and internal conditions this system is accomplishing its task perfectly.

To sum up these two years of struggle, the means of production passed almost entirely from the hands of the capitalists and proprietors into those of society personified in the Soviet organs.

Nationalization of the factories, shops, mines, etc., was brought about first in the principal branches of industry and in the most important enterprises.

False information has often been circulated in Western Europe with regard to this nationalization, which, it was said, followed no fixed plan. This is a falsehood without foundation.

Nationalization, especially beginning with the second half of the year 1918, was brought about in accordance with a fixed plan embracing the industrial branches and enterprises most important and indispensable for the organization of the national economy.

As to the "small trades" and the cooperatives, not only were they not nationalized, but they were protected by special decrees and dispositions.

The following tables gives and idea of the proportionate figures for nationalization in the course of the last two years:

Nationalization During the Years 1918-1919.

1. Enterprises	4,000
2. Merchant marine construction	16,000
3. Private property	600,000,000 hectares
4. All the banks of all cities.

These figures are a little short in the case of the enterprises, 4,000 enterprises are under the Supreme Council of National Economy, but in the provinces many nationalized enterprises, being under the direction of local organs, do not figure in the statistics drawn up by the central organs.

It may be said with certanty that ninety per cent of industry is nationalized.

The Soviet power inherited from Capitalism enterprises isolated and deprived of connecting bonds.

Its task, as indicated above, was to construct an organization of national economy based upon socialist principles.

It was indispensable that there be organized and created in the domain of industry and that of rural economy associations of isolated enterprises, that they be provided with fuel and basic materials, and their financial system constructed upon new principles.

In resume of all the innovations introduced in the domain of national economy in the course of these two years (1918-1919) we have the following table:

There were organized:

I. In Industry.

1. State trusts	90
2. Factory administrations	4,000
3. State systems for the provision of wood, wool, hemp, etc.

II. In Rural Economy.

1. Soviet exploitations	2,399
2. Rural communes and associations	5,961

In this manner industry and rural economy during these two years were not only placed under the direction of the organs of the proletarian dictatorship, but also reorganized internally with reference to production. A concentration of production was brought about. Trusts like that of the electro-technical industry, uniting without exception all the enterprises which fought one another in pitiless rivalry before the October Revolution, or like the State trust for machine construction, comprising [illegible] of the most important enterprises, [illegible] a result unprecedented in the economic world.

The situation is similar in the nationalized enterprises of the textile industry, to the number of more than 500, divided into forty different associations each embracing several enterprises and all directed by a "principal management."

From the point of view of finance, provisions, registration, the reception of products, etc., the organization of industry in state trusts was of enormous advantage. The regulation of accounts between the nationalized enterprises and their associations takes place only in the books and without the payment of cash.

Owing to this system the distribution of fuel and basic materials becomes more equal and rational. If one considers the extremely difficult situation in which Soviet Russia was placed, during these last two years, in the matter of fuel, having at her disposal only ten per cent of indispensable coal and only ninety-three million poods of naphta in lieu of the 400 millions necessary each year, one can see that only the centralization of distribution and a certain economy have aided us to evade a terrible fuel crisis. As for the distribution of raw materials, that was organized in a satisfactory manner.

In the sphere of rural economy the organization of Soviet exploitations direct by Soviet organs made it possible not only to protect agriculture, the great land properties, but also permitted the industrial proletariat to take part for the forst time in agricultural labor, and created also for the first time solid ties between industry and agricultural exploitation, between the city and the country.

At present nearly three million hectares are already in the hands of Soviet exploitations and agricultural communes.

Returning to the economic situation and the results of the economic activities, we should indicate first that this situation, as a result of our activity, depended upon changes brought about by the civil war.

The Don Basin, the Urals, the Caucasus, the principal sources of fuel and raw material — of coal, naphta, iron, cast-iron, steel—passed from hand to hand. For a certain length of time they fell again to the Soviet power, but new assaults by the White Guards deprived us of them, ruining organized production and taking from us accumulated reserves.

As a result the center of Soviet Russia became our principal base.

The loss of the Don Basin meant for us the loss of eighty per cent of all our coal; the occupation of Baku by the English deprived us of naphta: the occupation of the South and the Urals—of metals.

It is easy thus to realize the difficult conditions under which our economic life developed.

But in addition to territorial conditions, our economic situation was influenced by the fact that we had again to mobilize our industry and employ it for the needs of war.

Such are the conditions under which our economic activity was developed and our progress brought to realization.

The following figures characterize the principal branches of our economic activity where it was pursued without interruption during these two years:

[illegible] OF FUEL AND RAW MATERIAL

A. Fuel
1. [illegible] ([illegible])	almost 30 million	almost 30 million
2. Wood ([illegible])	4 mill. cu. sazhins	5 mill. cu. sazhins
3. Peat	58 million	60 million
4. Naphta	96 million	Baku occupied by English
B. Raw Materials (in the hands of the S. C. of N. E.)
1. Flax		5½ million
2. Cotton	2,784 million(?)	6½ million (with Turkestan reserves)
3. Wool		3 million
4. Hemp		2 million
5. Hides	5,461,[illegible] pieces	2,365,200 pieces (for six months)
6. Metals (reserves)	30 million	40 million

The above figures are only for fuel and raw material accumulated and utilized by the Supreme Council of National Economy.

We can see that the situation has become worse in the matter of fuel because of the loss of the naphta. In 1918 we could transport the naphta from Baku, but in 1919 we did not receive any at all.

Owing to this circumstance we were obliged to use wood fuel for the railroads and other enterprises, and this was the cause of the famine in fuel for dwellings. Before the war no more wood was prepared than now: from four to five million cubic sazhins, but then there was coal, and naphta which served industry, and the wood was used principally to heat dwellings; now wood is the principal fuel. As regards peat, the situation has improved, and in 1919 it was prepared in greater quantities (1918 — fifty-eight million poods; in 1919—sixty million poods). The preparation of raw material for our textile industry was sufficient, and the industry is fully provided for. Flax and furs have accumulated in such great quantities that it would be easy to export them abroad.

With regard to metals the situation has become difficult, we have utilized our old reserves all this time. With the retaking of the Urals and the defeat of Kolchak, the situation has improved and we are receiving metals from the Urals.

In short, the system of provisioning under Soviet rule functions perfectly and is solidly constructed.

The latest statistics indicate that more than a million workers (excluding those employed on railroads, commerce, etc.), are at the present moment working in the industries of Soviet Russia. (The figures are incomplete.) In certain branches of industry (in the miners of the region of Moscow, in the electro-technical industry) all the enterprises are operating without exception; in others, — in the textile industry for example—almost fifty per cent of the enterprises are at a standstill, but it is impossible to name a single branch of industry which has ceased completely. The facts do not show it. In short, the total number of salaried workers (workers and employees) reaches the minimum number of three million men. In certain spheres progress even may be claimed. During these two years our economic organs undertook the organization of fifteen important enterprises several of which are already completed and operating. At Podolsk (province of Moscow) a great factory for the repair of locomotives has been constructed and is already operating; as is a cartridge factory at Simbirsk. Two great electrical stations, one at Kachira, the other in the marsh of Chatour, are being completed. The construction of a factory of agricultural machinery and implements has commenced at Saratov.

But the most important enterprise is the exploitation of schist deposists in the provinces of Samara and Kazan, an enterprise begun in 1919. Several mines are already being exploited.

Let us cite here the figures relative to the principal branches of industry serving military as well as civil needs.

Production and Reserves in 1919

Fabrics

Average monthly production—14 million arshins

Reserves—nearly a milliard arshins.

Sugar

Production during the campaign 1918-1919:

In Soviet Russia—4 million poods.

In Soviet Ukraine—10 million poods.

Matches

Production in 1918—1,032,23 boxes.

During six months in 1919—412,809,000 boxes.

Soap

Monthly production—20 to 25 thousand poods.

Salt

More than 10 million poods have been extracted.

These products are distributed in accordance with a definite plan. First the Red Army is provided, then the workers, and finally the rest of the population.

Let us consider now the question of food.

During these two years the most difficult problem was that of food. The regions most rich in wheat, such as the territory of the Don, South Russia, the territories beyond the Volga, and Siberia, were either in the hands of the enemy or were passing from hand to hand.

When after the October Revolution, we took over the power there were almost no reserves of bread. The harvest of 1918 had a yield above the average (in twenty-five provinces of Soviet Russia it reached 1,235 million poods). The system of rationing which was organized about this time could store 106 million poods. This permitted us in the second half of 1918 and in 1919 to improve the bread ration for the population compared to the first half of 1918. The harvest of 1919 was also above the average, and besides, the whole region beyond the Volga and part of Siberia passed into our hands. This year we hope the grain reserves will surpass those of last year. Difficulties are encountered principally in transportation for the war. But thanks to the consolidation of the distributing system an improvement may be expected, not very great it is true, but an improvement nevertheless.

We have cited figures relating only to the principal branches of industry, taking for a basis the average monthly production. We have described only the general economic situation in Soviet Russia, and we have summarised the results of our activity in the economic sphere during the last two years. But it is needless to say that we could not here include all that has been accomplished by the working masses in the titanic creative work of the new life which is in the making under our eyes.

RUMINATIONS OF A REBEL

By Tom Clifford.

The Supreme Lodge of The Belligerent Bellyachers of America met in Chicago and put their complaints into concrete form. They not only did that, by heck, but they nominated a candidate for President to see that their complaints are listened to by the capitalists who control the government and will still control it even though their candidate were elected. The Farmer — Labor Party will shoot its wad in November and then quietly die of sleeping sickness. None of these malcontents express dissatisfaction with the capitalist system of production, in the absence of which it may be assumed that they are merely out of harmony with the political administration of the capitalist state. The quasi — radical voter will find it somewhat perplexing to choose between the platform of the Farmer-Labor Party and the Socialist Party. The Communist however, is immune to this reformistic rubbish. His attention is unalterably fixed on the one economic demand — the earth and the fullness thereof for the working class. Still, the coming election will be a magnificent political scrap, out of which will be born thousands of class conscious rebels. Watch us grow.

Credit is due the Single Taxers for the judgement displayed in refusing to co-operate with the other insurgent elements. They realized that their reform would receive but little consideration if associated with the others, and accordingly they decided to go it alone. Thus was another political party born. The Single Taxers have for many years threatened to take this step, and it remains to be seen whether this new departure will be productive of better propaganda for their hobby than playing ball with the Democratic Party. Whatever the Communists may think of the Single Tax Theory, it must be admitted that its adherents at least condemn the first of the capitalist trinity — rent, interest and profit. Henry George held that rent derived from land was income that the owner did not earn. He contended that rent was wholly a social product, and therefore should go to its creator — the community. George was not a Communist, because he did not apply this theory of rent to interest and profit. These he would leave as private possessions. The Communist insists (and both logic and common sense harmonize with the deduction) that not only rent, but likewise interest and profits on goods made for the market, are social products. In common with rent they represent unearned increment. They, too, are social rather than individual products, and should therefore pass to their owner—society. The Single Taxer is afflicted with mental strabismus. He needs a new pair of goggles.

Now that the Soviet armies have driven the invading Poles from Russia and threaten to carry the war into the front yard of the Allies' protege, the bourgeois governments of Europe are clamoring for an armistice. So long as the Poles were successful not a "peep" for cessation of hostilities came from Great Britain or France. On the contrary those countries were spending millions to maintain the Polish armies in the field and were using Poland as a possible means of destroying the Soviet Republic. They are now pleading with the despised Bolsheviks to stay their vengeance on the invadors and be merciful. This is the regular buorgeois procedure. When they have the power it is wielded mercilessly. Met with successful resistance they tremble like the curs they are and beg for mercy. Neither is any sympathy due the Poles, for they lent themselves willingly to the schemes of the Allies. Not satisfied with the territory accorded them by the Peace Council, the bourgeoisie in control launched a war of conquest to augment the same, and as an afterthought the Allies financed the venture in the hope of crushing the hated Soviet government The Poles are simply getting what is coming to them. They merit no mercy at the hands of the red army.

One of my best sources of amusement is the perusal of the letters contributed to the daily newspapers by people who think they have ideas. Therein I find expressed mostly the bigotry and intollerance that indicate ignorance of general truths. On questions of local import the opinions are as varied as the individual wants of the contributors, showing that economic determinism is the main factor in moulding conceptions of right. Then there is the religious "nut" with his Biblical panacea for all our industrial woes. Verily, no thinker need suffer for entertainment while the "Contributors' Column" remains a feature of the newspapers.

Country Daily Would Murder Communist Editor

The following, referring to Linn A. E. Gale, publisher of "Gale's", a Communist monthly originally published in New York for a year, and published in Mexico City for the last two years, is taken from the June 19 issue of the Sun, a country daily published at Norwich, New York. It is interesting to note that Gale had his first experience as a cub reporter on the paper in question, graduating to large cities and settling first in Albany and later in New York City. The Norwich Sun published many complimentary things about him until he left the Democratic Party and became a Communist — then its policy changed. Before he was a Radical, Gale was, in the estimation of the Sun, a "brilliant writer", a "capable editor", etc., and his word was "as good as his bond." After he became a revolutionist, all this changed. It is evident that Gale's pen is sufficiently vigorous to hurt the tools of capitalism, else such a nasty yelp would not have been heard.

Here follows the editorial in part:

"That such a vile, contemptible specimen of humanity as Linn A. E. Gale, publisher in Mexico City of 'Gale's Magazine', is permitted to live, move and have his being, is a thing that passeth all human understanding.

"Copies of his riot-breeding publication made their appearance in this country yesterday and, sorry to say, one found its way to the desk of the editor-in-chief of the Norwich Sun.

"Its pages are filled with the usual scandalous assaults upon all decent and liberty loving inhabitants of these glorious United States.

"Gale and his seditious sheet should be silenced forever and if he were given his just deserts, HE WOULD BE BLINDFOLDED WHILE STANDING BACKED TO A MEXICAN WALL, FACING A FIRING SQUAD THAT HAS BEEN ORDERED TO DELIVER SWIFT AND EVERLASTING RETRIBUTION. Or he should be brought back to this country and have his skull which encloses a perverted brain, capped with the iron hood attached to the end of an electric wire.

"At least he should be confined to a solitary cell upon bread and water in order that his diseased, gray matter which guides his vitriolic pen may not cause further trouble here or elsewhere....

"The devil is a cunning fighter and it is no easy matter for mere man to stand up before him and say "be gone." BUT IN THIS MAN GALE HIS SATANIC MAJESTY HAS A DANGEROUS EARTHLY RIVAL WHO WILL SOONER OR LATER USURP THE POWERS OF THE ONE BELOW.

"WITH GALE AND HIS MAGAZINE FLOURISHING UNMOLESTED, MEPHISTOPHELES MIGHT JUST AS WELL BANK THE FIRES OF HELL, OFFER THE PLACE FOR RENT, AND ENGAGE IN SOME BUSINESS WORSE THAN [illegible] IF HE EVER HOPES TO OUT-STRIP HIS RIVAL, [illegible] A. E. GALE, THE [illegible] REFORMER OF THE WHOLE WORLD."

But for fear that this invitation to murder Gale would not be sufficiently explicit, the same paper under date of July 2, said:

"A man of Gale's type is a cancer..... THERE IS BUT ONE WAY TO DISPOSE OF THE BENDICT ARNOLDS THAT INFEST THIS COUNTRY—AND WHO SOMETIMES SNEAK AWAY TO OTHER LANDS TO SAVE THEIR SKINS—I KNOW THAT WAY—SO DO YOU! NOW WHAT ARE YOU GOING TO DO ABOUT IT?—Sit idly by and let him continue his nefarious work or mete out to him the justice he so richly deserves? This matter is equarely up to every true American citizen.

"The writer of this article is right here in Norwich ready to 'do time' for its publication if needs be—also ready to settle the affair with Gale upon the field of honor."

If Gale had suggested giving such treatment to a capitalist, it is probable that he would have been charged with inciting to "force" and "violence" and "trying to overthrow the government."

But when the prostitute press of the capitalists wants to resort to "force", "violence" or the disregard of the government and its laws, in order to get revenge on an influential editor, nobody thinks of proposing punishment.

These excerpts are interesting as affording additional proof that the [illegible] and the law are but "scraps of paper" between plutocrats.

No Prosecution of Detroit Communists

Detroit, Mich.—But few of the many hunderd alien radicals arrested in the sensational raids conducted under the supervision of Attorney General Palmer are still in custody at Fort Wayne. The majority have been released on bail, pending the decision of the Washington Departmen, and many more were released because there wasn't a scintilla of evidence to prove they engaged in or intended to engage in illegal activity.

Detroit has been heralded far and wide as one of the big "Red" centers in the country. Local and outside newspapers carried hair thrillers of the discoveries made by the department of justice agents, which have now been proven to be a fiasco. The predicted "revolt" did not only fail to materialize, but the majority of the revolutionists were found to be of the mildest sort, totally ignorant of the vast plots that they were supposed to have engaged in.

The great store of arms glaringly reported to have been found cached in the hiding places of the local communists, upon roll call were found to be a few jack knives, a bayonet purchased in an U. S. Army surplus goods sale for domestic purposes, and a few antiquated, rusty revolvers without cartridges.

The "mysterious", "beautiful" red haired women communist, reported to have attempted to smuggle in a lot of razors to the raid victims [illegible] for six days in the Federal building, was a department of justice agent, intent on playing her part [illegible] the [illegible].

A British Labor Threat

Again has the militancy of British labor come to the front. With a vote of nearly two to one, 800 delegates attending the trades union congress and representing nearly 3,000,000 organized British workers have passed a resolution recommending a general strike to compell the government to withdraw its troops from Ireland and to stop the manufacture of munitions of war for use against Russia and Ireland. A ballot upon the resolution is now being taken by the rank and file and it is expected to carry.

That British labor is well aware of its power to enforce its demands thru direct action when it considers it has a matter of sufficient importance to act upon cannot be doubted. And that revolutionary leaders will welcome the opportunity for a test of strength with the government must be surmised. Delegates Hodges, one of Britain's most fearless labor men, said in introducing the resolution, that British domination of Ireland should be demanded and characterised it as "a big enough question on which to take direct action".

The government's reply to the resolution made thru the Irish secretary's office is evasive in character. The reply states that the resolution is probably based upon a misconception of the purpose of the British troops in Ireland, which is not that of occupation but merely to assist the civil power to maintain order.

We cannot concieve that British labor will accept such a weak statement. Its faith in the sincerety of the government is in no condition to withstand even a slight strain. The Irish question seems likely to become the factor that will sever such confidence as remains. As matters now stand, it is evident that British labor intends to force British imperialism into a semblance of humane treatment of its subject peoples and to a shareing of government with labor. Direct action, the general strike, the terrors which haunt capitalism, may soon assume their due respect in the arsenal of labor's weapons. All power to the workers, including the British!

The (Fifty) Seven Varieties

Seven varieties of radicals met in convention last week in Chicago and came out as one. This in itself is rather an astonishing feat, According to natural law when a thing becomes perfect it disintegrates. But in the case of the Seven Varieties, each was so imperfect of itself that it had to combine to save itself from disintegration. Whether the remedy will be worse then the disease remains to be seen and whether it has now reached that perfect stage which precedes disintegration the future will reveal.

The Farmer-Labor Party is grounded upon two fallacies. The first being that reforms actually affect the operation of the capitalist system. The second is that by the ballot they can be accomplished. These two fallacies are enough it would seem to rot the fabric of any political party. The F. L. P. is a protest against capital's monopoly of rule, but it is a protest without any means of backing up its kick. According to the statement of one delegate, it is a classless party. Of course he meant economically classless. Doubtless that is true, for we find in its ranks individuals from all classes, workers, petti bourgeoisie and some large ones, But to the best of our knowledge it is a party of a class of a certain kind. It is composed of that class of discontented, liberal minded elements which comprise a large proportion of our citizens who have broken away from the ranks of the stand-patters, but, not having the knowledge and understanding of the structure of capitalist society, seek to iron out its wrinkles with the half warm flatiron of reformism.

We are constrained to state that the days of reformism are past. The demands of the present time call for revolutionary measures if progress is to be made. Such workers as are inveigled into the ranks of the F. L. P. stand a chance to learn thru its failure the difference between beating the air and revolutionary class-conscious action. The F. L. P. is not an organization thru which the wage slaves of American can function in the creation of the Industrial Commonwealth which is to succeed capitalism. And that is sufficient reason why wageworkers may cheerfully throw it a highball.

"Fair and Sympathetic"

While the possibility of swinging the labor vote is of the remotest, there is plenty of evidence that Samuel Gompers is still led by democratic strings and will use his influence with the A. F. of L. to boost for Cox.

After chasing across the continent from one of the old party conventions to the other, begging for crumbs for labor, Gompers is now back where he started from playing the monkey for the democratic organ grinder.

Gompers takes a great deal of comfort in the assurances of the democratic machine bosses. He finds that the democratic platform is nearest to the demands of labor and reposes his confidence therein. From his statements regarding these matters as revealed in the public press, we quote this gem. "His nomination was a happy selection, Gov. Cox has been fair and sympathetic". Now if labor can be happy on Cox [illegible] then all will be well along the Potomac. Probabilities are that workers will be handed plenty of "sympathy" before very long. Whether they find that sympathy satisfacting to their empty stomaches or not remains to be seen. But with Sammy on the job there is no reason why they should not be content.

The Cost of Capitalism

While the cost of maintaining the capitalist profit system is incalculable as regards the miseries and sufferings of the exploited millions, its cost in finances is ascertainable.

Of the government appropriations for 1920, 93 cents of every dollar goes to pay for wars, past, present and future. Public works and governmental functions receive the balance of the dollar.

The frightful comparison of the expenditures for war and those for educational, research and development work are seen when the actual figures are placed side by side. When we realise that only 1.01 per cent of the total of appropriations is used for the advancement, education, and improvement of the people's life, then the terrific waste of economic means which the maintainance of the capitalist system and its wars entail, becomes plain.

And then there are individuals who will maintain that the apex of human development has been reached in the present system which requires that 93 per cent of the expenses of its maintainece must be used in the ghastly work of murder and preparation for murder. Meanwhile the people's life continues upon its low plane amid sufferings, fear of misfortune and wasted energies.

That Vacation Ghost

In these vacation days we observe that that Ghost which haunts almost every household in the land is not to be evaded. We refer to the ghost of Artifical Living. This statement is provoked by an advertisement of "vacation necessities" consisting of a list of 21 articles purporting to be of prime necessity to women vacationists. With the exception of three articles the whole list is one of face powders, creams and such slops as modern woman is supposed to besmear her face and figure for the sake of beaty as convention declares it to be.

The curse of living today is the artificiality which most of us endure for one reason or another, possibly because we have not the courage to live more naturally. It would seem that eleven months of the year would be sufficient in which to burden ourselves with all the geegaws, frills, manners, customs etc., of a debased existence without perverting a few weeks vacation in the woods or at the lake side by dragging the Ghost along. But habit becomes in time a fixed principle and when it is encouraged by a profit making system, poor gullible humans soon find themselves intagled in an inextricable web.

We recall to mind the words of that stern but perfectly sane and original thinker, Henry David Thoreau upon the occassion of a journey he wished to take. Upon inquiry at the railroad station, he found that the fare was a dollar. He decided to walk, for as he said, in order to ride, he would have to first hire him self out for a day whereas if he walked the day would be his, and a far better view of the secenery along the way to boot. Precious few of us have the courage or incentive of Thoreau. Most of us give over to the customs of the age with little opposition or thought, even forgetting that Nature's Sun and Wind are the best healers of a sickened body—and soul.

But of course the cosmetic peddlers would never let us learn that if they could help it.

The Opinion of "J. S."

Akron Ohio July 5th, 1920.

THE TOILER.

"I am a Socialist for many years and has lost many a Job on account of being a Socialist and would loss my present job if my name would appear in your paper therefore I am with holding my name but I will look for you reply to my opinion as J. S.

"Well in the Toiler of July 2nd, 1920 entitled The Pope be damned. Now you are harming the Cause of aur Comrades by such heelish talk the Pope is not what you have said he is and you know it. You also know that the law of the State wont put you were poor old Debs is by talking about the Pope you dont say much about Palmer, Wilson, Lloyd George, King George and a lot more but you want to play a save game by getting after some body who you know wont give you any trouble you are seme fighter for our poor fellows just Cause. Their is highly payed agents by the rich tyrants of our Country to harm aur Cause and you ought to be one of the Agents if you are not one already for you are not fit for what you are doing for his poor Slaves or what you are suppose to be doing. Poor old honorable Debs it is a pitty tohave him behind the dirty jail walls he would tell us what is going on jail or no jail."

Comrade J. S.

J. S., we are overwhelmed by your generosity. You will not risk losing one more job by having your name appear in The Toiler, but you are very solicitous that we "say something" that will land us in jail. The trouble with J. S. is that he is blinded by the light (or the darkness) from the Papal throne. So much so that we are sure that if even Debs spoke the truth about the Pope, J. S. would be among the first to dub him an "agent of the rich".

So far as we are aware, no one is taking any chances on a jail sentence by telling the facts about Palmer and Wilson and other political tools of the predatory interests, either native or foreign. At the same time it is well to recognize dead whales when you meet them, i. e. Wilson and Palmer. There is little left of them but the stinking carcasses but if J. S. wants to attack them he is welcome to the joy of the battle. As for us, we like to choose a live subject for our trenchant Oliver.

Has It Come Again?

That which seemed too far away to be noticed by the casual observer four months ago now surely appears exceedingly nearer. In fact the confession is frankly made in banking and trade circles that a curtailment of production on a vast scale is already underway. Overtime work, which a few months ago was the rule has been dispensed with, thousands of employees are being laid off in a score of industries, unemployment is growing and, with the high prices still maintaining a steady advance, that "prosperity" in which the workers were supposed to be wallowing just recently has vanished and a real economic hardship is being felt.

In the New England states the unemployed situation is most acute in the textile trades. The shutting down of the American Woolen Company's plants have turned out an army of 40,000 unemployed.

The closing of the mills, it is claimed, is due to the curtailment and the cancellation of orders, including a heavy buying from over seas. The low exchange rates have doubtless played a part in forcing this reduction of orders. At the same time there are indications that the Woolen Companies themselves are forcing an artificial condition in the hopes of lowering wages, maintaining high prices and discouraging labor union organization among their employes. The following statement from the pages of the Daily News Record, organ of the textile trade is significant of a determination to force the workers thru a period of unemployement to return at decreased wages, which of course includes lack of union organization.

> "It seems more than likely that when conditions do improve, an effort may be made to got operatives back in the mills at lower wages and longer hours. Labor leaders say they believe this is planned. It will not be successful, they maintain. But they will not say what is to prevent operatives long out of work and without funds, from returning to work at almost any rate of wages and any schedule of hours."

Should the present wave of unemplayment fail to recede, the mill owners will have their wish of thousands of hungry workers beseiging their gates when the mills open.

The textile trade is not alone in this curtilment of production. The Akron rubber industries are fast reducing their shifts to mere skaleton crews, thousands having been laid off for indefinite periods with reduction of working time and number of employes still taking place. Unemployment in Cleveland and surrounding territory in the building trades and in industrial establishments is growing and the same is being recorded in other industrial centers. A recent survey made by the United States Bureau of Labor disclosed that of fourteen representative industries, ten showed reduced payrolls compared with the previous month while four showed increases. R. G. Dunn and Co. report the greatest number of insolvencies in 18 months, 674 having been recorded in June.

The workingclass generally have come to regard the appearance of periodical industrial crises as merely incidental features of social phenomena without inquiry as to the necessity for them nor the purpose they fulfill in the scheme of capitalist production. Likewise do they accept the consequent suffering to themselves in a like thotless and indifferent manner, much as would a religious fanatic accept a physical ailment as a visitation from God with out an inquirey into personal hygiene. Having been taught in both Sunday school and secular to trust the management and control of his life to an invisibility and the "great" men of the period, it has become an adept at accepting the miseries of capitalism in an unquestioning and unalytical manner.

It is only when we inquire into the reasons and purposes for the establishment and operation of industries that the WHY of industrial panics can be answered. When we recognise that all industry is operated for the profit which can be made out of the business, that is out of the labor employed therein, then we have made a start toward finding a solution for the panic puzzle. And when we further learn that for every dollar's worth of goods labor produces only a part of it goes to labor then we may draw a straight line from this point to the inevitablity of industrial crises. For, if labor receives only a part of the value of its predict, them a surplus remains which must somehow be sold or else it piles up in the warehouses. Foreign markets must be established, the earth must be scoured for places where this surplus can be sold. Savage races must be subdued and turned into civilised creatures so as to provide a market for the product which "superior" civilization has exploited its workers of. As long as foreign markets are to be had this game of profit grabbing may continue more or less satisfactorily. But as these foreign countries establish themselves as productive centers and set up and industrial system upon the same exploitative basis, then the market begins to shrink, the surplus which labor has produced, but cannot buy back on account of its wages being less than the value of the goods produced, begins to pile higher and higher and the warehouses are filled and industry must close. Then the workers are thrown out—because they have filled the world with plenty, every warehouse is full, every market is loaded with its products, but labor suffers in the midst of abundance.

The remedy for such an outrageous and unscientific "system" of industry should suggest itself. The ownership of industry must be taken out of the hands of private hands and placed in that of the workers, not individual workers, nor groups of workers but in a society and government of the workers composed of all actually engaged in production. The value of the product of labor must be retained by the laborer for his own use and comfort. No parasite must be permitted to exist thru patriotism. Industry and the needs of human life must cease to be merely a means for the enrichment of a few, but must become the means and impetus for a higher degree of life for those who fulfill all useful purpose.

SOCIALIST CLASSICS

One cannot learn the meaning of Communism by reading only a pamphlet; nor can he act an intelligent part in the workers' struggle, if he consents to remain merely a superficial student of Socialism. Study of the Socialist classics is necessary. These are the foundation stones of the Socialist philosophy and tactics.

Capital and Labor Testify in Communist Trial

Duncan Refutes Hanson's Story of Red Terror in Seattle General Strike

— By H. Austin Simons —

Staff, Correspondent—The Federated Press.

CHICAGO, JULY 19.—Evidence concerning the general strike at Seattle, Wash., was admitted today by Judge Oscar Hebel into the trial of twenty members of the Communist Labor Party here. The court ruled against the defense after hearing arguments which lasted throughout Saturday and almost all of this morning.

This paved the way for the appearance of Harry J. Wilson, secretary of the Soldiers, Sailors and Workmen's Council of Seattle. He will be followed by Ole Hanson, former mayor of Seattle. James Duncan, president of the Seattle Central Labor Council, appeared in the courtroom this afternoon and William Forrest, counsel for William Bross-lLoyd, announced that he would testify for the defense on the Seattle strike.

Wilson, who says that his life is not safe in Seattle, painted a lurie picture of what a general strike means. He said he beard Hulet M. Wells, now in prison for violation of the Espionage law, declare at a meeting preceeding the strike:

"I'm a Bolshevist and I'm proud of it! I have only one flag, that of my fellow men dyed red by the blood of Russia."

He testified that all industries were shut down completely after the strike order was issued, that he witnessed a funeral in which the hearse bore a sign stating that it moved with permission of the strike council. But he failed to prove that force or violence had been used. His nearest approach to this was a quotation of Walker Smith, officer of the general strike committte, who said, the witness testified, "that the workers mus contro lall industry, that they must avoid bloodshed if possible, must control the government peacefully if possible but by force if necessary."

Attack upon the Illinois Anti-Anarchism statute marked the trial on Saturday. William S. Forrest, counsel for defense, arguing against admission of evidence concerning the Seattle and Winnipeg general strikes, declared the law was drafted "by a member of the legislature who did it to please the people who hired him to do it."

Forrest maintained that all terms of the law—"force, violence or other unlawful means"—are synonymous, that the state must prove that the defendants conspired to commit acts of violence and that evidence as to Seattle and Winnipeg did not tend toward that end. He argued that overt acts, such as those strikes, could not be admitted because they tended only to prove that the conspiracy charged had been enlarged, not that the conspiracy had been effected by them.

July, 20th.—Ole Hanson, former mayor of Seattle, recently Chautauqua "red" baiter, went on the witness stand here to prove that the Seattle general strike was an attempt to overthrow the government by force, violence and other unlawful means. This is how he proceeded:

Testifying about a meeting of the strike executive committee which he attended on the eve of the strike, he said that the strike leaders, Hulet M. Wells, Anna Louise Strong, Bert Swain, Leon Green and Phil Pearl, urged him to turn over the municipally owned electric lighting plant to the strikers.

"The plant belongs to us, and we're willing to operate it if you turn it over to us," the mayor quoted Pearl as having said.

"I rejoined that it belonged to all the people of Seattle and that we (all the people) were going to run it."

Thus Ole Hanson did not deliver the Chautauqua lecture on "Bolshevism versus Americanism" which he had come prepared to give. The psychological effect of his testimony upon the jurors was all spoiled by Forrest, who interrupted him at almost every sentence with objections. It is upon the court's rulings on these objections—almost invariably in favor of the state—that the defense plans to base its appeal in case of an unfavorable verdict from this jury.

July 21st.—James Duncan, testifying on behalf of the defense in the trial of twenty members of the Communist Labor Party here, put the onus of use of force in the Seattle general strike upon Mayor Ole Hanson. He gave the lie to Hanson and to Harry J. Wilson, a spy in the Soldiers, Sailors and Workmen's Council, on important points as to conditions in Seattle during the strike.

Duncan followed immediately Ole Hanson, who was the last witness for the state. Counsel for defense waived the right of preliminary argument and immediately produced Duncan.

Mayor Hanson had testified that the strike had been called to overthrow the government of Seattle. Duncan's testimony will establish that it was called to back up the shipyards workers who were out for a 10 per cent increase in wages.

Wilson, the spy, said that the Soldiers Sailors and Workmen's Council had been organized to police the city in behalf of the general strike. Duncan said, point blank, that it had no part in managing the strike.

Special Prosecutor Comerford, arguing for admission of evidence on the Seattle situation, painted a lurid picture of a city deprived of all its utilities by dictatorship of the proletariat. Duncan stated that there had been less disorder during the strike than ever before.

And as to the use of force, Duncan testified as follows:

First he related a conversation he had with the mayor and other officials two days before the general strike. He said:

"Our talk was principally as to lighting. Mr. Hanson said to me, 'Jim, Jim, won't you please give me the lights. I need those lights, Jim. Won't you be a regular fellow and give them to me. I don't give a damn about the cars, Jim, but I've got to have the lights. Come on, Jim, be a good fellow.' It was a repetition of this 'Jim, im' stuff for about an hour. And I told him that I was not responsible for the lights and that I could do nothing about it.

"Next day," the witness continued, "I met him again. He asked me if something couldn't be done to prevent

Bird of Freedom — "No roost there for me!"

A BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF AMERICA

Well may the Bird of Liberty arrest its flight and pause ere it settles to rest upon its once proud home. From its high place it may glance downward at numberless instances of "man's inhumanity to man" as pictured there in prison, scaffold, burning pyre, suffering, want and despair, evidences of the raging class struggle.

From North to South and from East to West he will see dotting the country over, fort like bastiles in which the ruling class has imprisoned those who had the fortitude and courage of their convictions to oppose it, however in what pacific manner, and refused to shoulder arms with which to murder in cold blood men of other nations, the rulers of which were in commercial revalry with their own. More than a thousand still lie in these dungeons. Many have died, some have gone insane what of their cruel treatment; all have suffered the torments of the damned, which they truly are. At Atlanta, lies Debs, noblest of them all, doomed to remain there until ten years have passed, or life itself, unless the political needs of the ruling class compel it to turn the key in the door and release him — or the workers arise in their might and open the door for him.

From a hundred burning pyres the shrieks of the black victims of the white man's own crimes arise to make earth

I. W. W. IS POLITICAL ORGANIZATION

Bellingham, Wash.—The I. W. W. is a political organization

This was the ruling here of Judge Edward E. Hardin of the Whatcom county superior court in denying the application of the prosecuting attorney for an injunction restraining four alleged I. W. W.'s from further participation in the activities of that organization.

The judge held that no court in the land has yet decided that political parties should be restrained. Judge Harding in refusing to restrain the I. W W. said:

"The I. W. W. is an exotic from continental Europe where it was nurtured by centuries of oppression. It can not live in the light of public discussion in a government which provides constitutional methods of changes to fit new conditions and if it should thrive for a time and assume menacing proportions in this, the greatest of republics, that fact would itself be evidence that somehow, somewhere something needs fixing."

Judge Hardin also held that the prosecuting attorney was seeking the wrong method of attempting to abate the I. W. W. The injunction plan would prevent the man enjoying their right of trial by jury, he maintained.

Copenhagen, (By the Federated Press)—A dispatch from Moscow via Helsingfors received here tells of the publication in Isvestia of a wireless message sent to Nikolai Lenin by a group of leaders of the Indian revolutionists expressing the joy with which India accepts the proffered hand of friendship of Soviet Russia and thanking the Bolshevist Premier for having listened to the cry of anguish of a people of 315,000,000. Lenin replied to this message as follows:

"We rejoice to hear that the basic principles of the supporters of the Soviets are shared by the Indians, whose awakening to freedom is being followed with sympathetic interest by the Russian proletariat. We welcome the union of the Mohammedan and the non-Mohammedan elements in India, and voice the wish that all the workers of the Orient will adhere to this union in order to insure their common liberties. In such solidarity lies the guarantee of victory.

TRYING TO FOOL THE WORKERS

The speech of acceptance of the Republican candidate for president indicates the policy toward the workers which the capitalists will follow in the presidential campaign that is now underway. While the Democratic candidate has not yet officially declared his acceptance of the nomination, other statements he had made before and since his nomination, show that in his attitude toward the workers he is in substantial agreement with his opponent.

It is cltar from the utterance of both candidates that the capitalist class realizes that the workers are not in a mood to be trifled with. While the lines of the class divisions are not yet clearly drawn in the political struggle in this country and the situation is not as threatening as in France, England, to say nothing of Italy, the capitalists see that a defiant attitude or any attempt at repression would quickly solidify the opposition of the workers and sharpen the character of the struggle. Their policy, therefore, is to blur the class lines and to keep up the illusion of a unity of interests between the capitalists and the workers.

The Republican candidate is for high wages. He is "ready to acclaim the highest standard of pay". But on one condition, which is that the "wage-earners will give full return for the wages received." On that condition the workers may have anything they desire. "Full return", of course, means that the workers shall produce a goodly margin of profit for the capitalists over and above the wages they receive. As long as they do that the wages they receive will not be seriously questioned.

Since high wages can be paid only on this condition, the workers are urged that they must "join hand and brain in production, more production, honest production, patriotic production, because patriotic production is no less a defense of our civilization than that of armed force." How these various forms of production differ we are not informed, but one thing is certain, they all mean more profits for the class Mr. Harding represents.

The essential point in the relations between the workers and capitalists having thus been disposed of in a form that leaves the workers fine phrases to respond to and the capitalists assured good profits, the next thing is to show that there is really no reason for the workers and capitalists to fight each other. Hr. Harding "declines to recognize any conflict of interest among the participants in industry". Although at the time of Mr. Harding's statement several million railroad workers were expressing their disgust with a wage award which had just been made to them and some of them were threatening to take more decisive action, and only a few weeks before a pitched battle between striking workers and the capitalist tools raged in the streets of Bridgeport, Connecticut, Mr. Harding sticks his head in the sand and mumbles the usual platitude. Since there is no conflict of interest, he continues, both the workers and the capitalists must be good and "economic justice" will surely result.

Then comes the usual appeal to "Americanism" and our glorious institutions" under which all wrongs can be righted by orderly procedure. "The constitution contemplates no classes and recognizes no group", thunders Mr. Harding. While other men have proven that the constitution is an exceptionally cunning class document, Mr. Harding will have none of that. The constitution does not mention classes. There must be no classes. There can be no classes. All the time Mr. Harding knows that he was nominated by the capitalist class, is the candidate of the capitalist class and will loyally serve the capitalist class if he, rather than Mr. Cox, who stands in the same position, is elected president. Why two capitalist class candidates, (or three or four)? Because there are group capitalist interests to be settled in the political struggle.

Keep your mind in the old rut, workingmen, continued this mouthpiece of the capitalists. We ask nothing more of you than that you limit your effort to improve your conditions to trying to gain control of the machinery of government which we have created for our own class purposes, by going to the polls and voting for "good men". We prefer that you vote for the men whom the capitalists have selected, but if you can't quite stomach these men, you may nominate men of your own. That may be a little more troublesome, but really it doesn't make much difference, for so long as we control the means of publicity and education, you haven't much chance of electing them, and if by any chance you did, they would quickly wear themselves out trying to do something for you through the government machinery which we have created for our own purpose.

So long as the workers are good and do only these things they can have all the freedom of speech, freedom of press and freedom of assemblage they can use. But if they are not satisfied to play the game according to the rules which the capitalists have framed for their own protection, then woe to them! Those who would "destroy our economic system" are to be stifled and crushed. Thus runs Mr. Harding's declaration.

There is, of course, nothing new in this. It is the same sort of stuff that has been handed out to the workers for many months. If the workers will keep on voting, if they will continue to look with respect and awe upon our American institutions of government, the capitalists don't care much. They feel themselves safe and secure.

Should they, however, rely upon their own organizations, should they develop their own organs of power and teach the necessity of establishing a working class government — the Dictatorship of the Proletariat, then all the power of the capitalists will be used to mercilessly crush them.

Mr. Harding has proven himself an admirable mouthpiece for the expression of the current capitalist policy, but his platitudes will have as little effect in stopping the onrushing class confict as a pebble thrown against the waves can stop the onrushing water.

The economic forces at work in society will set the workers in this country in as sharp opposition to the capitalists as the workers of Italy are in opposition to their ruling class. All the nice phrases which Hr. Harding and Mr. Cox may utter during the presidential campaign will not stop this class conflict from growing sharper, nor will the masses of the workers be fooled much longer into believing that they can win their emancipation by such methods as the capitalists urge them to use.

COMMUNISM AND THE [illegible]

— By ALEXANDRA KOLLONTAY —

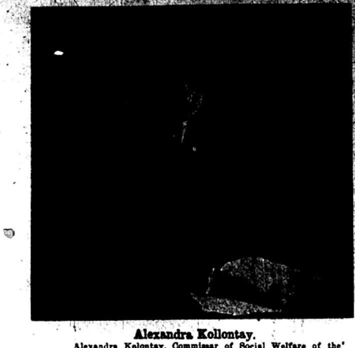
Commissar of Social Welfare of the Russian Soviet Government

THE WOMAN NO LONGER DEPENDENT ON THE MAN.

Will the family be maintained in the Communist State? Will it be just as it is today? That is a question which is tormenting the women of the working class, and which is likewise receiving attention from their comrades, the men. In recent days ths problem has particularly been agitating all minds among the working women, and this should not astonish us: Life is changing under our very eyes; former habits and customs are gradually disappearing; the entire existence of the proletarian family is being organized in a manner that is so new, so unaccustomed, so "bizarre," as to have been impossible to foresee. That which makes women at the present day all the more perplexed is the fact that divorce has been rendered easier in Soviet Russia. As a matter of fact, by virtue of the decree of the People's Commissaires of December 18th 1917, divorce has ceased to be a luxury accessible only to the rich; henceforth the working woman will not have to petition for months, or even for years, for a separate credential entitling her to make herself independent of a brutish or drunken husband, accustomed to beat her. Henceforth, divorce may be amicably obtained within the period of a week or two at most. But it is just this ease of divorce which is a source of such hope to women who are unhappy in their married life, which simultaneously frightens other women, particularly those who have become accustomed to considering the husband as the "provider" as the only support in life, and who do not yet understand that woman must become accustomed to seek and to find this support elsewhere, no longer in the person of the man, but in the person of society, of the State.

From the Genetic Family to the Present Day.

There is no reason for concealing the truth from ourselves: the normal family of former days, in which the man was everything and the woman nothing — since she had no will of her own, no money of her own, no time of her own — this family is being modified day by day; it is almost a thing of the past. But we should not be frightened by this condition. Either through error or through ignorance we are quite ready to believe that everything about us may remain immutable while everything is changing. It has always been so, and it will always be so. There is nothing more erroneous than this proverb! We have only to read how people lived in the past, and we shall learn immediately that everything is subject to change and that there are no customs, nor political organizations, nor morals, which remain fixed and inviolable. And the family in the various epochs in the life of humanity has frequently changed in form; it was once quite different from what we are accustomed to behold today. There was a time when only one form of family was considered normal, namely, the genetic family; that is to say, a family with an old mother at its head, around whom were grouped, in common life and common work, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren. The patriarchal family was also once considered the sole form; it was presided over by a father-master whose will was law for all the other members of the family; even in our days, such peasant families may still be found in Russian villages. In fact, in those places the morals and the family laws are not those of the city worker; in the country there are still a large number of customs no longer found in the family of a city proletarian. The form of the family, its customs, vary according to race. There are peoples, such as, for instance, the Turks, Arabs, Persians, among whom it is permitted by law for a husband to have many wives. There have been, and there still are at present, tribes which tolerate the contrary custom of permitting a wife to have several husbands. The habitual morality of the peresent-day man permits him to demand of a young girl that she remain a virgin until legitimate marriage; but there are tribes among whom, the woman, on the contrary, made it a matter of pride to have had many lovers, decorating her arms and legs with rings to indicate their number. — — — Such practices, which could not but astonish us, practices which we might even qualify as immoral, are found among other peoples to have the sanction of holiness, peoples who in their turn consider our laws and customs to be "sinful." Therefore there is no reason for our becoming terrified at the fact that the family is undergoing a modification, that gradually the traces of the past, which have become outlived are being discarded, and that new relations are being introduced between man and woman. We have family system and what, in the relations of the working man and working woman and the peasant woman, are their respective rights and duties which would best harmonize with the conditions of life in the new Russia, in the worker's Russia which our Soviet Russia now is?



Alexandra Kollontay.

Alexandra Kolontay, Commissar of Social Welfare of the Russian Soviet Republic, is one of the best known women of the Revolutionary Movement. Previous to the Russian revolution she had twice toured the United States, speaking in many cities. "Communism and the Family", her latest pamphlet, will be wellcomed by the Movement in this country, not only for its fine analysis of the historical development of the Family in all industrially developped countries, but also for laying out in graphic form the basic lines along which the Family of the future will develop as indicated in the new industrial life of the masses under Communism—the next step in the scale of human life.

Everything compatible with this new condition would only to ask: "What is it that has become outlived in our be maintained; all the rest, all the superannuated rubbish which has been bequeated to us by the cursed epoch of servitude and domination which was characteristic of the landed proprietors and the capitalists, all this shall be swept aside together with the exploited class itself, with these enemies of the proletariat and of the poor.

Capitalism Destroyed the Old Family Life.

The family in its present form is also simply one of the legacies of the past. Formerly solid, compact in itself, indissouble — for such was considered to be the character of marriage that had been sanctified by the priest in person — the family was equally necessary to all its members. Were it not for the family, who would have nourished, clothed and trained the children, who would have guided them in life? The orphans' lot in those days was the worst that could befall one. In the family such as we have become accustomed to it is the husband who earns and supports wife and children. The wife, on her part, is occupied with the housekeeping and the bringing up of the children, as she understands it. But already for a century this customary form of the family has been undergoing a progressive destruction in all the countries in which capitalism is dominant, in which the number of factories is rapidly growing, as well as other capitalist enterprises which employ working men. The family customs and morals are being formed simultaneously with the general conditions of the life surrounding them. What contributed most of all to change the family customs in a radical manner was without doubt the universal spread of wage labor on the part of woman. Formerly, it was only the man who was considered to be the support of the family. But for the past fifty or sixty years we have beheld in Russia (in other countries even somewhat earlier) the capitalist regime obliging women to seek remunerative work outside of the family, outside of the house.

30,000,000 Women Bearing a Double Burden.

The wages of the "providing" men being insufficient for the needs of the family, the wife in her turn found herself obliged to look for work that was paid for; the mother was obliged also to knock at the door of the factory offices. And year by year the number of women of the working class, who left their homes in order to swell the ranks of the factory, to take up work as day labourers, saleswomen, office help, washerwomen, servants, increased day by day. According to an enumeration made before the beginning of the world war, in the countries of Europe and America there were counted about sixty million women earning a living by their own work. During the war this number increased considerably. Almost half of these women are married, but it is easy to see what sort of family life they must have — a family life to which the wife and mother goes to work outside of the house, for eight hours a day, ten, if you include the trip both ways! Her home is necessarily neglected, the children grow up without any maternal care, left to themselves and all the dangerous risks of the street, in which they spend the greater part of their time. The wife, the mother, who is a worker, sweats blood to fill three tasks at the same time: to give the necessary working hours as her husband does, in some industry or commercial establishment, then to devote herself as well as she can to her household and then also to take care of her children. Capitalism has placed on the shoulders of the woman a burden which crushes her; it has made of her a wage-worker without having lessened her cares as a housekeeper and mother. We therefore find the woman crushed under her triple, insupportable burden, forcing from her often a swiftly smothered cry of pain, and more than once causing the tears to mount to her eyes. Care has always been the lot of woman, but never has woman's lot been more unfortunate, more desperate than that of millions of working women under the capitalist yoke today, while industry is in its period of greatest expansion.

Workers Learn to Exist Without the Family Life.

The more widerspread becomes the wage labor of woman, the further progresses the decomposition of the family. What a family life, in which the man and wife work in the factory in different departments; in which the wife had not even the time to prepare a decent meal for her offspring. What a family life when father and mother out of the twenty-four hours of the day, most of which are spent at hard labor, cannot even spend a few minutes with their children! It was quite different formerly; the mother, mistress of the house, remained at home, occupied with her household duties and her children, whom she did not cease to watch with her attentive eye — today, from early in the morning until the factory whistles blow, the working woman hastens to her work and when evening has come, again, at the sound of the whistle, she hurries home to prepare the family's soup and to do the most pressing of her household duties; after an all too scant sleep, she begins on the next day her regular grind. It is a real workhouse, this life of the married working woman! There is nothing surprinsing, therefore, in the fact that under these conditions the family ties loosen and the family itself disintegrates more and more. Little by little all that formerly made the family a solid whole is disappearing, together with its stable foundation. The family is ceasing to be a necessity for its members as well as for the State. The ancient forms of the family are becoming merely a hindrance.

What is it that made the family strong in the days of old? In the first place, the fact that it was the husband and father who suported the family; in the second place, that the home was a thing equally necessary to all the members of the family; and in the third and last place, that the children were brought up by the parents. What is left of all this today? The husband, we have just seen, has ceased to be the sole support of the family. The wife, who goes to work, has become the equal of her husband in this respect. She has learned to earn her own living and often also that of her children and her husband. This still leaves us as the function of the family the bringing up and the support of the children while very young. Let us now see whether the family is not about to be relieved also even of this task just mentioned.

Household Work Ceasing to be a Necessity.

There was a time when the entire life of women in the poorer class, in the city as well as in the country, was passed in the bosom of the family. Beyond the threshold of her own house, the woman knew nothing and doubtless hardly wished to know anything. To compensate for this, she had within her own house a most varied group of occupations, of a most necessary and useful kind not only to the family itself but also to the entire state. The women did everything that is new done by any working woman or peasant woman. She cooked, she washed she cleaned the house, the went over and mended the family clothing; but she not only did that. She had also to discharge a great number of duties which are no longer done by the woman of today: she spun wool and linen; she wove cloth and garments; she knitted stockings, she made lace, and she took up, as far as her resources permitted, the pickling and smoking of preserved foods; she made beverages for the household; she moulded her own candles. How manifold were the duties of the woman of earlier times! That is how the life of our mothers and our grandmothers passed. Even in our own days, in certain remote villages way off in the country, far from the railroads and the big rivers, you may still run across little spots where this mode of life of the good old time has been preserved unchanged, in which the mistress of the house is overburdened with labors of which the working woman of the big cities and of the populous industrial regions have for a long time had no idea.

CAPITAL AND LABOR TESTIFYING IN COMMUNIST TRIAL.

the strike the next day. I said that I thought something could be done if he was big enough to do it. The thing was to reduce the cost of living 10 per cent which would be equivalent to the increase of 10 per cent asked by the shipyards workers. He said, 'Well, I think I can do it' and left, saying he'd be back in an hour. Then he left and he hasn't come back yet."

Duncan then described a meeting at the Mayor's office the second day of the strike between city officials, a committee representing the strikers and a committee from the chamber of commerce.

"The mayor claimed that the radicals had got control of our organization" he testified, "and he wanted to know if something couldn't be done to call the strike off that day. Finally he said that if it weren't called off by noon that day he'd declare martial law. As spokesman for the strikers' committee I replied:

"Labor has nothing to fear from martial law. Because labor hasn't committed any unlawful acts and doesn't propose to commit any.'

"I reminded him that gas was flowing through the mains, because the strikers, who had complete organization in the gas plant, had investigated the hospitals and had found that that was necessary. I told the mayor that, if he introduced martial law, he undoutedly would find the responsibility of keeping gas flowing on his own hands.

"I reminded him also that the coal miners throughout the state also probably would join the strike if martial law were declared.

"Finally I told the mayor, 'We don't know, and you don't know, what attitude the soldiers will take if they are called in here. You don't know whether or not they will serve as strike-breakers. You do know they didn't enlist for that purpose.

"Mr. Hanson then said, 'Well if there is a doubt of that the quicker we find out the better.'

"I replied that my attitude on that point was different from his, that the strikers didn't want to see a test of that sort made in the streets."

Hanson's reasons for resigning as mayor of Seattle seven months before his term was up, were brought out by William Forrest, counsel for defense, in cross examination this morning.

"Why did you resign?" he asked.

"Because of poverty, neuritis, the absolute necessity of earning a living for my family," Ole answered.

"How do you earn your living?"

"By writing and speaking on 'Americanism and 'Law and Order'."

Ole then revealed that he has received $28,000 gross in the last seven months of his writing and lecturing of which 65 per cent is profit. The $7,500 annual salary of the mayor of Seattle was not sufficient for him, he testified.

Moscow,—(N. Y. Bureau)—At a conference of kindergarten workers here for which there had assembled fifty-three delegates from thirty-four Russian provinces, it was learned from a report made to the conference, that there were in the soviet republic on January 1, 1919, 1790 kindergartens, which were attended by 80,950 children, altogether. On January 1, 1920, the number of Kindergartens was 9,823, with 11,234 workers, and 204,913 children in attendance. The work in the establishment of rest homes at Petrograd is rapidly advancing. Fifteen rest homes are already in operation, providing accomodations for about 1,000 workers. The opening ceremonies will soon be held.

PARIS—(N. Y. Bureau)—A resolution to federate all maritime workers into one big union without regard to rank or grade was passed at a conference of the national council of maritime workers held here recently.

By John Brown.
Los Gatos, Calif.

Richmond P. Hobson—the courageous, and kissable—press-agented as the hero of the Merrimac (think of the modesty of posing as the hero, among the countless millions who have so recently acted out the heroic part, unsung) held forth last evening in our Rockefellerized Baptist Church on—"America and The Destiny of the World."

Chuch and State (Chamber of Commerce rejoiced and applauded to learn that two of Paul's pernicious and misleading declarations to his "son" Timothy—"For the love of money (property) is the root of all evil".—"Drink no longer water, but take a little wine for thy stumach's sake, and thine often infirmities" are now refuted, exploded, obsolete. — "My research Secretary has discovered that the love of alcohol is the root, source and cause of all wars, all crimes, all poverty, all distress. The family of the drinker becomes absolutely barren in the fourth generation; on glorious, righteous, redeemed, dry America alone now hangs the destiny of the human race—therefore, dig down in your jeans right now and rush to save all other nations of earth from extinction by drying them up."

But wait a moment—consider our recent boastful announcement and expensive pilgrimage to "make the world safe for Democracy"—our accomplishment the making of our own land the unsafest place on earth for Democrats—the most profitable place on earth for profiteers.

Consider Homestead and Ludlow, Bisbee and West Virginia, Centralia and Butte, Jefferson City and Atlanta, Leavenworth and Alcatraz, and our ten thousand other foul reecking jails and penitentiaries, where crimes against the innocent, and "crimes against criminals" vie with the horrors of the "Inquisition", and the "Black hole of Calcutta".

Consider how applicable to us as a nation the blistering words of the Hebrew prophet—"Thou hast taken usury and increase, and hast greedily gained of thy neighbors by extortion, and hast forgotten me saith the Lord God. Wherefore I have smitten my hand at thy dishonest gain which Thou hast made."

Consider how true today the words of a notable Brooklyn preacher of a quarter century ago—"The two leading political parties of this country, which alternate in its control, have putrefied, until they have lost all further power to rot; now there they lie! side by side, two great carcasses of imquity, each one worse than the other."

Consider our divorce courts, and insane asylums—our "pride, fullness of bread, abundance of idleness, and indifference to the cause of the poor," passing that which incurred the destructive wrath of Jehovah against Sodom. Consider how, even now the very foundations beneath our feet, are rocking with the earthquakes, and seething with volcanoes of the same righteous indignation. Consider all this and our ten thousand other infimay's and shames, and you get a faint conception of the collossal effrontery that would propose going utside our own borders on cleaning expeditions, while so many foul masses reeck and clamor for removal here at home.

"Thou hypocrite; first cast out the beam from thine own eye, and then shalt Thow see clearly to pluck out the mote from the brothers eye."

But to get the real "meat from the coconut of Brother Hobson's discourse—interpret the hints, read between the lines, strip off the camouflage—"The Government has the names of two million men in this country who are ready to do what the "reds" have done in Russia"—Those who wish to overthrow our Constitution should leave the country and should be helped out," great applause. —So—you see our "hero" at heart belongs with the "shippers and shooters"; apparently, blissfully unconcious that among the first to [illegible] the toe of the boot should be [illegible] unholy Attorney and Postmaster Generals—who, like they, have [illegible] in the mire our Constitution, and proved themselves the real "Criminal Anarchists" of hate and violence.

The meeting opened and closed with the familiar antherm "My Country, 'Tis of Thee, Sad land of tyranny, For thee we mourn." No, that is not it. Having more regard for "patriotism" than for truth—they sang it right lustily in its original form as did our forbears for a [illegible] years—the while they blithely [illegible] and sold their dusky brethren [illegible] cattle in the market place. How can they do it without choking?

"Beware ye of the leaven of [illegible] church members, which is hypocrisy [illegible]

Uncle Sam -- Scab Herder

If there is any one who had any illusions of the outcome of the results of the deliberations of the Railway Labor Board, they must be sufficiently disillusioned now.

That the decision simply throws a sop to the railway workers in the hope of keeping down their clamoring for a living wage, is apparent. The award of $600,000,000 sounds big, but when it is measured by the individual share of the workers it dwindles into insignificance. With a calculation which placed the award barely above the "deadline" at which the workers would refuse it, the board made its award with a surety that it would be accepted and the workers once more induced to continue their slavery upon pitifully inadequate wages.

Just how long before the railway workers will be compelled to resort to another mass demonstration for more wages, depends upon whether the cost of living takes an upward or downward course. At present its course is continually upward with to deterring object in sight. The fact that all branches of the railway workers with the exception of the telegraphes, have accepted the award under protest augurs ill for their continued loyalty to the corporations which with insufferable and consciencless exploitations reduces then to the plane of peons and serfs. There is every indication that this award instead of being an element of satisfaction in the conflict will tend to arouse the workers to increased demonstrations of solidarity and further demands for some sort of consideration at the hands of the corporation and the government.

Under the award the railway workers will continue to receive the lowest industrial wage paid. Section men will receive the stupenduous award of less than $25.00 weekly, this being the lowest paid labor. Engineers, being the highest paid will receive a little less than $70,00 weekly. Between these extremes comes the firemen, conductors, brakemen, baggagemen, telegraphers, carpenters, car-repairers, boilermakers, machinists, gang foremen and so-called unskilled workers, comprising many hundreds and thousands of skilled workers who are forced to labor under a yoke of pitiful wages inadequate to sustain a family at a decent standard of living.

Not only are the railway workers still scandalously underpaid, but if the reported threats of the government are carried out, those who have had the courage to continue on strike are new to be set upon by sleuths and bludgeoned back to work under penalty of a jail sentence. According to press reports the Grand presidents of five railway brotherhoods were notified in Chicago by a representative of the department of justice that workmen who persisted in remaining on strike would be persecuted under the Lever act. While the improvement in the amount of traffic moved in the strike centers has been noticable, the cost has been tremenduous, and since the government was to foot the bill in case the railways return less than a profit of 5½ per cent, it is determined to put an end to the outlaw strikes On account of inability to secure scabs at the wages paid the regular crews practically double the scale is being paid the scabs who have taken the strikers places. Their unfamiliarity with the work has also added to the expense of freight movements. The government is therefore acting as a scabherding agency for the railway owners and paying the bill as well. It cannot find a funds pay American workers a living wage but it has plenty with which to hire scabs at double pay to help beat them into submission to a wage agreement that means slow starvation for the workers and their families.

In this manner does all "arbitration" work for the undoing of the worker. Its latest results should assist in letting some light into the heads of the workers

A Humane Protest

The assertion of Parley P. Christensen, candidate of the Farmer-Labor Party for president, that would enter no campaign against Eugene V. Debs until he is released from prison must meet with the accord of all thinking and humane people. He has since requested the candidates of the old parties to place their names with his upon a memorandum to President Wilson asking for the release of Debs; this likewise commend itself as an act worthy of a presidential candidate and a man.

If any man can be found in public life who would remain so immune to a sense of fairplay and sportmanship, and, without protest, enter a presidential race while his opponent was behind prison bars as in the case of Debs, it would brand him as totally unworthy of the confidence of any voter.

That this move for clemency in the Debs case has come from the third party would seem to signify that the two old parties will have to come out from under the smoke screen of lies and falsehood at least this once and either commit themselves to one good act or to oppose it. Whichever they do the honor should go to Mr. Christensen. If he can drive them into aiding the release of Debs then the birth of the latest political baby will have been worth the cost.

Music and Cheese

The Mayor and city council of Lawrence Massachusetts, have taken William M. Wood, President of the American Woolen Company to task for shutting down his mills and turning a great many thousands of workers into the street and making no provision for their welfare while awaiting the reopening of the mills. The mills have now been closed nearly one month and the demands upon the charity institutions of the city for assistance for the hungry families of former Woolen Company employes is increasing.

Mayor William P. White flayed Mr. Wood for his heartless lack of consideration of his employees' welfare in saying. "Mr. Wood has entertained thousands of his employees at his estate in the past few weeks with music and cheese; now some of them are starving. I do not want to open soup kitchens in this city. The big war profits were made by the American Woolen Company, not by the city of Lawrence, and the Company could well afford to sell cloth at cost or at even a slight loss, if necessary."

It is interesting to note that that new and unique idea that industry should bear the burden of unemployment and not society at large has reached into the halls of municipalities. The shifting of responsibility for the lives of employpes from the municipalities to the industries which employ them is apparently growing. In respect to the war profits of the American Woolen Company, let us see what Basil M. Manly has to say in his report upon the subject.

> On page 330 of the Treasury report is shown the income of a woolen company capitalized at $60,000,000. So far as I have been able to ascertain, there is only one woolen company in the United States capitalized at that amount—the American Woolen Company. The Treasury Department's report shows that in 1917 this sixty-million-dollar woolen company reported a net income of $28,560,342. The annual report of the American Woolen Company for 1917 shows a net income before taxes were deducted of only $13,883,,155. If this sixty-million-dollar woolen company is in fact the American Woolen Company—and the evidence seems to be conclusive—it is clear that the American Woolen Company in 1917 concealed from the stockholders and from the public profits of nearly $15,000,000. In other words, the actual profits of the American Woolen Company in 1917 appear from this comparison to have been more than twice as great as the company acknowledged in its annual report.

Thus we have a concrete instance of a huge modern industry coining millions in profits from the toil and sweat of its employees during a period of "prosperity"; and when the prosperity wanes, it turns them into the street to shift for themselves, without taking any further responsibility for them, whether they live or starve. Had they been black slaves they would have been fed and clothed in slack times as well as in good times.

The hypocrisy of capitalistic industry is seen wherein it assumes a paternalistic attitude toward its employees by giving "free" outings, picnics, etc. as long as it is gouging out of them the last penny in profits and when that is no longer possible sets them a drift. The bosses can well afford such "generosity", it is paid for by the workers themselves.

The Polish S. O. S.

With an S. O. S. to all parts of the capitalistic world, the Polish imperialists have sounded the death knell of their ambitions and preposterous war against the Soviets. What of Budenney's cavalry and the strategists at Moscow, the Polish front has crumbled and fled, the while uttering cries for support, financial support, military support, "moral" support, any old kind of support that will stay the onpouring advance of the Red Army toward Warsaw and save the prestige of the none too strong Polish bourgeois government.

The defeat of Poland registers another failure of Great Britain and the Allies to stay the march of Sovietism and to destroy the workers' government of Russia. Seeing the inevitable collapse of Polland the perfidious Allies have made haste to urge the cessation of the war. So long as they viewed Poland as a possible bulwark against the spread of Sovietism, they sancitioned the war, furnished munitions and encouraged Poland in her ambitious schemes, but the moment they saw the Red Army nearing the Polish border, the advisibility of peace at once asserted itself to them.

That the fear of Bolshevik contact with Germany lies like a deadening weight upon the minds of the Allies is frankly admitted. From no motive of humanitarianism do the Allies urge the cessation of hostilities.

The war might continue indefinitely so far as their humanitarian impulses are concerned if only there was a chance of winning in the end. But they know well enough the strength of Soviet forces, and since they desire above all else a capitalistic nation between Russia and Germany, in order to save Poland from utter collapse and possibly a revolution and establishment of Sovietism, they urge peace upon the combatants while yet capitalistic Poland stands. The Allies realize the possibilities of Soviet connection with Spartacist and Communist workers of Germany. The continned Allied exploitation of Germany depends upon the subserviance of the workers, a victorious Soviet state on Germany's border would be a practical assurance of a German proletarian revolution; and the end not only of Allied exploitation but the assurance of the spread of Sovietism to every country in Europe.

With the Poles now actually appealing to Russia for peace, the war assumes a new aspect, and development there will be watched with the keenest attention. That the terms of peace and the boundaries of Poland will be laid out by the victor, and that they will be in accordance with fairness to Poland is assured. Soviet Russia, in contradistinction to every capitalistic government, has no ambition to exploit any nation.

hideous. The toll for the year 1918 was 84, 3244 for the thirty year period previous to 1919, a sacrifice to the race hatreds nursed and cultitated by a class society in the interests of the parasitical ruling class.

"Moral Support"

An apparently inspired report emanated from Washington last night containing the information that the State Department was about to announce to the world its moral support of Poland, and possibly the extension of government credits for munitions—of which we have plenty to supply any capitalist nation at war with either its own working class or that of another nation.

According to the report, the question of a violation of this country's neutrality with Russia, a nation with which we are not at war, was very quickly disposed of, it being pointed out that this country had at one time an army in Siberia, and any way the need of saving Poland was of "more importance than neutrality". So we see that international law applies only as between capitalist governments. If it is necessary to violate it in the interests of capitalism—to hell with it.

The State Department has already protested to the Cecho-Slovak government the holding up of 35 carloads of munitions enroute thru that country to Poland by the class conscious workers there. These munitions were war supplies left in France and were exchanged by this government for Polish bonds. There were seventy-five million dollars worth of them sold. Aside from the enmity which this government holds against the Russian worker's government, we have here a concrete example of the financial reasons at the bottom of this "moral" support. There can be no question of the moral nature of the support which the government will extend to Poland-support based upon a loan of $75,000,000 could not be otherwise than moral according to capitalistic ethics.

The government apparently has no illusions concerning the lack of class consciousness of American workers. The workers of Slovakia may assert their comradeship and common interests with the workers of Russia in refusing to dye their hands with blood in assisting in the shipment of munitions with which they will be murdered; London dockers may refuse to load ships with bullets and powder for the same purpose, but Uncle Sam knows that none of his family will be so disloyal to capitalist interests as to refuse to do its bidding. That is what Uncle Sam seems to think NOW. But Seattle longshoremen DID refuse to load munitions destined for use against Russia. We would suggest to Uncle Sam that the loyalty of American workers to capitalistic butchers is perhaps not so deep seated as the surface indicates.

And we appreciate the elucidation on the nature of "moral" support as defined by capitalistic ethics.

War and Why

"What, speaking in quite unofficial language, is the net purport and upshot of war? To my knowledge, for example, there dwell and toil in the British village of Dumdrudge, usually some five hundred souls. From these there are successively selected during the French war, say thirty able-bodied men. Dumbrudge at her own expense has suckled and nursed them; she has, not without difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood and even trained them to crafts, so that one can weave, another build, another hammer. Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing, they are selected, all dressed in red, and shipped away at the public charges, some two thousand miles, or say only to the south of Spain, and fed there till wanted.

"And now to that same spot in the south of Spain are thirty similar French artisants from a French Dumbrudge in like manner wending, till at length, after infinite effort, the two parties come into actual juxtaposition; and thirty stand fronting thirty, each with a gun in his hand. Straightway, the word 'fire' is given, and they blow the souls out of one another; and in place of sixty brisk, useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcasses which it must bury, and anew shed tears for.

"Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the devil is, not the smallest! They live far enough apart; were the entirest stangers, nay, in so wide a universe, there was even, unconsciously, by commerce, some mutual helpfulness between them.

"How then? simpleton! Their governors had fallen out, and instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot."

Thomas Carlyle.

From a thousand industrial battle fields arise the clash of interests of the exploited and the exploiters. Amid the conflict of economic interests we hear the rattle of the machine gun, the rifle shot of the hired gunman and the Cossack, brutal arms of a capital State, the sole purpose of which is to serve its creater, the exploters of labor, the parasitical ruling class. The jails are filled with Labors' spoksmen. Its leaders are murdered in cold blood. Every attempt of the workers to break their slavery's chains is met with the armed force and violence of the capitalist class excercised thru the State, the police, militia, the department of justice. Witness the persecution of the I. W. W. the outlawing of elected socialists, the Communist trials now going on at Chicago. All are evidence of the enslavement of the masses to the owners of industry; all is terrific condemnation of the boasted liberties which capitalist apologists inform us are the foundation stones of this government.

Until these conditions are brought to an end by the its power of the laboring masses and industry is rid of its parasitic ownership, can any real liberties for the masses find a foothold here.

SOCIALIST CLASSICS

One cannot learn the meaning of Communism by reading only a pamphlet; nor can he act an intelligent part in the workers' struggles if he consents to remain merely a superficial student of Socialism. Study of the Socialist classics is necessary. These are the foundation stones of the Socialist philosophy and tactics.

The Black Sheep.

(Continuation of Chapter XL.)

As for the letters they could hardly be called love letters. They had more the character of essays on scientific, social, economic, and industrial questions. They were entirely devoid of any personal history or of any personal aspirations whatsoever. This puzzled the man of business greatly. He was wont to tell Olive that the boy's letters were as good as a magazine article, but that he wished they would contain more of his personal history. "What I would like to know," he would say, "Is how he makes his living. How he is employed. He must have a source of income for even the most saintly among us need money. It is a "necessary evil", but we must have it. I wish you would find out just what his income is, and where from. It would help us to get a better insight into his real character than anything else."

Instinctively Gus Anderson associated character and income, yet he discussed it all so reasonably, so impartially that he won his daughter's entire confidence. She agreed that she would write and ask the boy the desired questions. This she did just before leaving her native village for the sunny clime of the city at the foot of the rockies.

Her uncle, a prosperous farmer and bee keeper, lived a little to the east of the town of Boulder, and it was here, that shortly after her arrival she made the acqainance of a couple of young men, students at the Colorado University School of Mines, who were spending their vacation on her uncle's ranch. These young men were not radicals in the sense that Jack and Collins were radicals. They did however, have advanced ideas concerning labor organizations, and kindred subjects. It was now that Olive became busy arguing politics and economics, from her entirely untrained view point and naturally occasionally getting the worst of it, but her defeats were only temporary. Every evening before she retired she would write to Jack and tell him of all her problems, and the way the college men stated theirs. And at the other end of the line, Jack was answering her many questions with the more than willing co-operation of Ed. Collins. In fact Collins wrote quite as much of the letters as did the boy.

In fact he was the more seriously in love with her for he was several years Jack's Senior, and while outwordly rough and unsympathetic he was, inwardly of an affectionate nature. He admired beauty in woman kind, but more than that, did he revere intellect, and it was becoming ever more evident from Olive's letters, that she possesed intellect in no small degree. Then, Collins admired that peculiar type of intellect that dwells on the problems of social life, and that was pre-eminently hers. So it was, that the big man was often more anxious to hear from the girl then was Jack, and he lost no opportunity to enclose a little note in the boy's letters when ever he was invited to do so. In these he expressed his personal view of some particularly knotty social problems.

These notes were always well worded, and to point; they could not help but impress the girl, and cause her to form the habit of writing separate notes to him, which finally developed into separate letters.

CHAP. XLI

Her first Socialist Meeting.

In less then a week after her arrival at her uncle's ranch, Olive was casting about for a local socialist from whom she might learn just how the cult operated, and what they hoped to accomplish for the present generation. With all the impetuosity of youth, she sought for any way to make an end of this world's ingrained injustice, by the sheer force of her own idealism. Like every new convert to the faith of the Co-operative Commonwealth, she was convenced that she had made a great discovery, and that all that was, now needed, was but to go out and tell it to the toiling masses. These she reasoned would not hestitate to receive the word, and go to work at the reconstruction of society.

Her failure to impress the preacher, and the editor, and her father for that matter, she ascribed to the fact that they were not strictly workers, as Jack had defined workers. It was to their interest to oppose anything that worked against their customary source of income. Her failure to impress the few working people she had talked to, she attributed to the fact that she had not read enough copies of "The Appeal To Reason."

But now all would be different. She had read not only papers but books as well, and what she had not understood, Jack and Collins had made clear. All that was needed now was to get busy in an organized way, and the citadels of evil would fall, and the temples of Justice arise, at the onward march of the victorious Proletariat.

She asked one of the students who was vacationing with her uncle, if he happened to know an honest to God socialist in that neighborhood, and he informed her, that there was one in town, who was "plum dippy" on the subject.

The man in question was Peter Collingwood, who oscilated back and forth between the practice of Law, and his hives of bees, in the struggle for existence, but who was always firmly anchored in his political faith. It is almost sacrilege to call this man's faith in the ultimate triumph of the lowly, political, for his sincerity and devotion had much in it, that was akin to the religious in the most exalted meaning of the variously interpreted word. He was one of those men who are so filled with a sense of the absolute importance of their ideas that they talk them in season and out of season, to any one who is willing to listen, and to many who are not willing to listen, until they are looked upon at best as a harmless nuisance, and at the worse, as a manace to the peace of mind of the community. Such a man was Collinwood. It was said of him that if he had a client befor a jury, he would first try to make socialists out of the twelf goodmen and true, before he would argue the case for his client, in consequence of which he had to raise bees in order to keep his home fires burning. Consequently he had but few friends and many enemies and near enemies. His friends he loved and his enemies he propagandised, which they considered as being worse, then if he hated them.

That Olive Anderson should admire such an individual was a forgone conclusion. And that Collinwood would tell her all, and more then he knew about socialism was equally certain. For Collingwood was nothing if not well read in the literature of the class-struggle and its allied subjects. He also possessed of an extraordinary imagination, which he needlessly employed in his recital of the crimes of the rich.

For weeks, "The Appeal To Reason", had carried the announcement that on a certain day, Eugene V. Debs was to speak in Denver, in behalf of the imprisoned labor leaders at Boise. And Olive Anderson had eagerly awaited that day. But when she told her aunt and uncle of her intentions to go to Denver and hear the speaker, they very naturally raised a storm of protest. They went so far as to wire to Olives mother for instructions in the matter, the result of which might will be imagined. But their efforts were in vain. Olive had decided to go. And she went. After which her uncle decided to mention the matter no farther, hoping that one political speech would be enough to satisfy her curiosity.

It was on her trip from Boulder to Denver, that she met Peter Collinwood. He was at the station giving out "Appeal to Reason", and announcements of the Debs meeting, to passengers boarding the Denver train. He was very thorough in his work, for altho Olive was to all appearances just a slip of a girl in the midst of the giddy age, he did not neglect her, but handed her the paper and hand bill, with a verbal request that she go and hear the speaker while in Denver.

Olive was delighted to meet this apostle of discontent. She told him, that it was to hear Debs, that she was going to Denver. To which Collinwood replied: "two of us, by hookey, two of us!"

The train started on its way, Collinwood and Olive occupying the same seat, her cousin, five year her senior, sat on the opposite side of the train a veritable picture of disapproval. She cordially hated the lawyer for no other reason than that her father hated him. And her father hated him for the reason that he considered the lawyer a fool but every time he tried to prove him so, Collinwood would have the best of the argument. Now Olive was conversing with this man and using a language which her cousin did not even comprehend. For they spoke of Social evolution, of workingclass supremacy, of industrial solidarity, of capitalistic decadence, with an ease that entirely baffled the middle-class minded girl who was to guard Olive from harm.

The trip to Denver was a feast to Olive Anderson. For the lawyer told her much of the life history of America's greatest workingclass orator and also much of the inside of the present labor troubles, which were now culminating in the possible death of three of the leading man in the Western Federation. The two hours during which the train made its way from Boulder to Denver passed by almost un-noticed, and now they were in Denver.

That evening she found herself among the mass crowd that gathered at the auditorium to hear the great apostle of freedom, but more to voice their protest through him, against the illegal barbarities of the mine owners of Colorado. It was a wonderful gathering. The very air seemed to be charged with an electric force. Olive felt as if she were swept along by this, to her, mystic power. There was a stillness in the great hall that could only be likened to the stillness that sometimes precedes a storm. There were the usual tiresome preliminaries which one has to endure at all socialist meetings. They are the usual cause of a small attendance, at many meetings, but when Debs is to speak, anything can be endured, for he is in this respect an all compensating power. Still this was Olive's first meeting and all of this preliminary work which usually is the financial part of the enterprise, interested her, only as part of the battle tactics of a great cause. That a noted speaker should be preceded by a book auction was to her an unheard of proceeding, but she could understand that the purpose was to get the literature before the public, which of course was a wise and necessary part of the great struggle.

At last the speaker came upon the stage, and then pandimonium broke loose. Such cheering and applauding Olive never heard. Involuntarily she took part, clapping her hands and staumping her feet, and even giving vocal vent to her emotions, to the positive disgust of her cousin, who was paying attention to nothing but Olive, while Olive was paying attention to everything but her cousin. After an ovation that lasted several minutes silence was again restored, and Debs began his speech. As he stood there, tall, slender, slightly bent as if with the sorrow of a world. She felt than mankind only echoed [illegible] deepest [illegible] again stirring [illegible] and aversion with [illegible] and hate. For hate is but the antithesis of love. Debs loved his people with a divine passion, and hence he assailed their oppressors with a hatred born of love.

She listened with a deep religious devotion, to his every word. He convinced her that socialism was definitly the hope of the ages, and the final goal of all our striving. The age old class war was but the path of man's redemption from bondage. The squares of squalor and miles of misery with which the fair face of civilization was defaced was but the debris on the tide of battle. The battle could not end but in victory for the ever increasing masses of expropriated toilers. His scientific explainations were lost to her in the sweeping splendor of his emotional appeal—drunk with the power of his imagery, she would have done anything, suffered anything, even to a martyre death, if he had but given the command. Such is often the power of the orator when, the physical circumstances that give rise to his appeal directly affect the interest of great bodies of people. Lacking this element the voice of the speaker, no matter how clearly used, is little more than a sounding brass and a tinkling symble. "If they kill these men, they will do it over my bleeding corpse," Debs thundered his tall figure vibrant with emotion. It was a defiance to the very strongholds of the established order. There was no one in the audience, but who knew that this was for his convictions and in that hall no idle threat. Debs would have died for his convictions and in that hall were hundreds of men and women who at that moment would have considered it glory to follow him.

True these words were wild. In calm judgement they would not have been spoken. They were not applauded when they were spoken. The import was to serious. Yet who can say, that these words did not at least have as much affect on the final issue of the trial than Darrow's flaming oration to the jury. But all this is beside the issue. Debs was willing to give his life as a sacrifice to his cause, and in this he at least inspired one, to pour out upon the altar of industrial liberty the last full measure of devotion.

Debs spoke at great length, but Olive was not conscious of time. She wished that he would go on forever. In fact, she was hardly aware that he had begun to speak, when he closed.

That night she and her cousin went to a hotel. She jubilant and her cousin disgusted. She wanted to discuss the speaker's soul wispering message with some one, and naturally her companion was the victim. But when she asked her cousin, what she thought of the speech Olive was painfully surprised when she informed her that she had paid no attention to the fellow. After which, she read Olive a lecture on her unladylike conduct, which she averred was the result of being raised in a small town. Ana moose is about half the size of Boulder. She gave her to understand that she was not interested in politics or in labor problems. She considered these subjects unladylike and vulgar. Women ought not to take part in man's affairs. It was natural for man to govern. You see, the Bible does not tell of any lady Gods!

It soon become evident to Olive's mind that it was useless to reason with the unreasonable. Discontinuing the conversation, she went to bed, where in imagination she talked the whole matter over with Jack. She was sure that he would have understood all that Debs had said, and that he would have sympathized with the great object to be attained. She remembered that he had told her, that only thru sacrifice could the race be redeemed from bondage.

The next morning she and her cousin quarelled with the result that this guardian angel flew back to Boulder, while Olive sought out the socialist headquarters, where to her delight she met Peter Collinwood and the genial Debs. Collingwood introduced her to the speaker who spent about twenty minutes of his busy time in conversation with her, after which she was introduced to the secretary of local Denver who enrolled her in the Socialist Party, and gave her the little red card, she treasured to her dying day.

Figures just compiled by the immigration officials at Ellis Island show that 334,254 aliens have left this country through the Port of New York in the year ending June 30th. The number of incoming aliens in the same period was 314,468. There were thus 19,786 more outgoing than incoming aliens during the year.

Reports reaching here from the Soviet Ukrainia tell of the opening of a Soviet Congress at which the delegates reaffirmed their loyalty to the Soviet ideal and took pains to emphasize the fact that Soviet Ukrainia was aiding Soviet Russia in fighting back the invading Poles. C. Rakovsky, chairman of the Council of People's Commissioners of the Ukraine, in reporting on the activities of what body, said that 14,000,000 hectares (about 35,000,000 acres) of farming land had been taken away from the agrarians and turned over to the peasants for use. He also reported that the miners of the Donetz Basin had produced a remarkably large amount of coal despite the difficulties due to the war.

A conference has just been held at Geneva which may prove to have started one of the most significant and one of the most important movements of our age. It was a conference of ex-service men, of ex-service men from Britain, Germany, France, Italy, and several other countries; a conference of those who through the years of war had been fighting each other at the behest of their masters and who resolved that such a state of things should occur "never again". Henri Barbusse—author of "Under Fire"—presided. His opening address gave the key to the whole proceedings. "Once more we confront one another," he said, "we who have confronted one another in hell." And then he went on to declare that at that conference the ex-soldiers of Europe returned "to their first essential belief, belief in their brotherhood." After five years of slaughter, the surviving combatants emerged, looked each other in the eyes, and recognized each other as—brothers.

The governments which made the war—the governing bureaucracies of Europe, responding to the pressure of the financial interests—still glare at each other across frontiers of the nations. The civilian peoples still bear some of the mean and futile hate that they had for each other while the war continued. But the men who are actually engaged, hundreds of thousands of them in every land, stretch out to each other the hands of fellowship.

Does this seem strange? Does it seem inconsistent? Surely not. For while the governments and most of the civilian peoples thought of each other as enemies, the fighting men, even while fighting, knew no enduring hate. They were all alike in the grip of the war-machine, and each one knew that the "fellow opposite" was as helpless as himself. At home the British peoples cursed the Germans, and the German people cursed the people of this land But in the fighting line British and German troops alike only cursed the war.

Now the war is over and the ex-soldiers of the world are determined that, if it be within the power of mortal men to do they will make it impossible for war to come again. They dread the thought of their children having to pass through the hell that they themselves have been dragged through during the last five years.

During the war they cursed the war. But now they realize that that is not enough. They understand that it is too late to damn the swirling, seething torrent when it is rushing headlong to the falls. They recognize that if they would stop war, they must stop it at its source.

[illegible] Congress [illegible] The roots of war, they held, are to be found in the capitalist system, and the only way to end war is to tear it up by its roots, to abolish capitalism the wide world over.

The first act of the congress was therefore to pledge the ex-service men who were represented there—British, German, French, Austrian, Russian, Italian, Belgian, Rumanian, Swiss—to pledge them all to work together to abolish the capitalist and competitive system, and to strive to establish a world-wide cooperative form of society.

But then arose some difference of opinion. The Italians and some of the French delegates expressed the view that the matter should be left there. "Let us concentrate upon this one thing," they said; "let us consider only how we ex-Service men may help to destroy the capitalist system."

The British and some German delegates were of a different mind. Although they held that the only way to abolish war was to abolish capitalism, and although they were already pledged to do their utmost to accomplish this, yet they urged that it was possible, even while capitalism continued, to render the making of wars more difficult, to diminish the chances of war They declared that they must do something immediately; that they could not afford to wait until capitalism was abolished in every country in the world, without taking some precautionary measures in the meantime.

Eventually the conference accepted this view, though the Italians insisted that, for them at any rate, it would mean waste of time and effort. "The Revolution", they said, "is so near at hand in Italy that we can consider nothing else."

The British delegates submitted that the ex-service men should help to abolish secret diplomacy (and especially the power of the foreign offices to commit the peoples to potential war behind their backs and without their knowledge); work for the abolition of armaments everywhere; to spread anti-war propaganda amongst the civilian people, and especially amongst the children; and endeavor to bring about the general use of an international language, Esperanto.

The conference passed unanimously a resolution of the British delegates condemning the League of Nations as "a league of capitalist governments of the conquerors."

RUMINATIONS OF A REBEL

By Tom Clifford.

There is not the slightest danger that the railway corporations will reject the wage award of the Railroad Labor Board, for the moderate increase granted the workers is practically of no concern to the employers, since the earnings are guaranteed by the government, and the increased cost of operation will simly be passed on to the public, of which the railway workers constitute a part. This is frankly allowed by both the Labor Board and the capitalist press. The cost will be covered by increased freight rates and the "buck" will be passed down the line to the consumers, which means another increase in the cost of living. Could anything be more vicious or idiotic than such a program? It must be patent to the most superficial thinker that no material relief to the working class as a whole is involved in this award, for whatever benefits accrue to the railway workers must be paid for by the remainder of the working class. The Labor Board could have manifested still greater generosity without interfering in the cost with the interests of the transportation mangnates, but that would have entailed an augmentation of the burden to be borne by the public, which might precipitate a revolt. Robbing Peter to pay Paul and keeping the workers ignorant of the chicanery is now the only recourse left to the bourgeoisie to postpone the inevitable breakdown of the capitalist system. It is the only method of procedure left them, and its continuance is limited to the time it takes the masses to get an intelligent grasp of the situation. Then there will be something doing.

In the face of acute economic conditions, constantly growing worse, the hysteria of the war period is rapidly disappearing in spite of the efforts of the bourgeoisie to keep it alive. When confronted by the basic problem of living emotional "patriotism" is forced into the background. The organization of patriotic societies receive but passing notice from the masses, who are now only concerned about their material prospects. There is a prevalent expectancy of the breakdown of industry in the near future, and a feeling of uncertainty is gripping the masses and compelling serious thought. They can give no reason other than that they "feel it coming". The capitalist press is scrupulously refraining from giving publicity to events transpiring in industry which are portentious of an approaching industrial depression that will divorce millions of workers from their jobs and in turn rock capitalism to its very foundations. Already multitudes of workers have been given "vacations" through partial shut-downs in industry, information of which can only be gleaned from the suffering workers themselves. This widespread pessimism is purely psychological at present owing to the absence of positive knowledge, but when the facts become public property the workers will be compelled to recognize their desperate condition and take drastic action. Whether such action will be governed by intelligence or merely resolve into a riot of desperation remains to be seen. At any rate they will have to face the music and take the bit in their teeth. Confronted by grim necessity no other course will be tenable.

And what will be the duty of communist forces in that hour of tribulation? Manifestly one of watching and waiting while the revolutionary forces gather with a view to directing them into peaceful channels, if possible. Those who have hitherto paid no heed to our economic predictions will then turn to us for inspiration because they will have no other port in the storm. We should hasten to marshal our forces for the great work that is before us. We are the only section of society that can offer a rational and scientific method of procedure when capitalism goes on the rocks. We will have to take control of the wreck, and out of the chaos that for a time will ensue build up an industrial republic. The task will be a stupendous one, for we will have to handle millions of workers and reshape their currents of thought and conceptions of life. We must be equal to the task, however arduous, for the preservation of society will depend upon the wisdom we manifest during the period of social transition. Will we be equal to the occasion. I think we will.

"LIKE A MIGHTY ARMY"

We glean the following from "Current Opinion" for July, thinking it good enough to pass along. It at least shows one sky pilot who got his eyes open about war. Who knows he may next get his eyes open to the church?

Current Opinon's comment is as follows. "It will be a long time before the poison of monarchism militarism has been squezed out of the hymnbook. The world has thought so long in the brutal terms of the past that it will be hard to get over it. The Reverend J. H. Hopkinson of England recently said; "We have learned that war is not a matter of fluttering banners and clashing swords and beating drums, but merely a sickening and dirty butchery of lads in water-logged or flyinfested trenches.

"We shall be less ready than we were to compare the movement of the church to that of a victorius army. Hymns that we could sing unthinkingly before the war have become a lying blasphemy. Who could now sing, "Like a Mighty Army Moves the Church of God?"

[illegible] Building Trades Fight Award, Citizens' [illegible]mittee Must Face Fight, Unity of Labor [illegible]rces Brings Results, Resignation of Landis' Pets is Forced

Chicago.—Union men are leaving in a body all construction [illegible] where scabs are employed. The attempts of the alleged "citizens committee" to establish "open shop" and destroy the unions within the Chicago building industry is now being met with determined resistance by the workers.

This action was decided upon by the Building Trades Council at its regular meeting, January 15, but not actually carried [illegible] before Judge Landis had been given an opportunity to answer [illegible] committee sent by the council to request his resignation from [illegible] further dealings as an arbiter for the building trades. His [illegible] replied that he would consider such request when submitted in writing. Evidently he was looking for an opportunity to further slash wages in April when the so-called award was to come up for reconsideration.

The building trades unions have had enough of such adjustments. The majority of their membership have long been pressing for action and when the "citizens' committee" took upon themselves to declare open shop in the following trades: carpenters, cement finishers, composition roofers, fixture hangers, hoisting engineers, lathers, plumbers, sheet metal workers and slate and tile roofers, and attempted to replace the union men by scabs, the necessity for united action became apparent to the council, and these nine trades are now receiving assistance. Many jobs are pulled already, all jobs where scabs are employed will follow, the bricklayers, electricians and ornamental iron workers [illegible] the only trades who have not yet consented to stand by the [illegible] in the united fight against the open shop.

[illegible] of the bricklayers [illegible] membership, when the council decided to act, that they would not support any trade not submitting to the Landis award, and managed to get his stand endorsed at the following meeting of his union, by virtue of his partnership in a big contracting firm employing a large number of bricklayers. Such are some of the so-called labor leaders today. He has now been replaced as Vice-President of the Building Trades Council. Mike Boyle, the spokesman for the electricians, has not shown up in the council meetings since he took upon himself to refuse the support of the electricians while Tom Kearney, President of the council, hobnobbed so much with the friends of the Landis award that he was compelled to resign the chair and turn the gavel over to Curran of the plumbers union.

A few weeks ago all union men were pulled off from four big jobs under construction by Wieboldt Co. However, the lesson was soon learned that pulling a few jobs at the time would simply play into the hands of the open shoppers, as the men could easily be replaced as long as only [illegible] jobs were involved, and that [illegible] is now being taken advantage [illegible]. The "citizens' committee" continues to advertise for scabs throughout the country and the unions are getting ready for a fight to the finish. [illegible] "citizens' committee" appear to welcome a fight to the finish at this particular time, but the building trades unions have now begun to move in the right direction on the [illegible] road that can lead to success—uniting their forces.

Many unions declare themselves ready for a complete tieup, realizing the inevitability of the pressure brought to bear by the bankers upon the independent contractor, in the form of denials of credits, resulting in declaration of war by these contractors also.

Many unions have demanded that the Building Trades Council arrange mass meetings of their affiliated [illegible] for the purpose of exposing [illegible] objects of the "citizens' committee" and bring everything squarely before the rank and file, and, as [illegible] also been argued, to reach as [illegible] as possible of the members of [illegible] unions. The cry for a [illegible] scale of wages has been [illegible]. The unions are beginning [illegible] that united action for a uniform scale of wages would mean a [illegible] to the Landis award. The [illegible] for a final showdown, the [illegible] getting ready to face it.

[illegible] Workers' Party Sunday

A meeting of the City Central Committee of the Workers' Party will be held in the Yorkville Casino, 248 East 86th St., on Sunday, February 5, at 10 A. M. All branches of the former American Labor Alliance and Workers' Council groups will have delegates present. A full report of the first national convention of the Workers' Party will be given by prominent delegates. All members are urged to attend this meeting.

Following the meeting of the City Central Committee a mass meeting, starting at 2 P. M., will be held to celebrate the launching of the City C. C. and "The Worker," the official organ of the Workers' Party. The mass meeting will be held in the same hall at 2 P. M.

The following speakers will address the meeting: Dr. Hartman, editor of Soviet Russia, Chairman; Caleb Harrison, National Secretary of the Workers' Party; William F. Dunne of Butte, Montana, J. Lovestone, William Weinstone, James Cannon, Ludwig Lore, Louis Engdahl and M. Olgin.

Criminal Practices Taught Soldiers

CINCINNATI, Jan. 24.—The theft of an automobile wheel does not amount to much compared with criminal practices taught American soldiers in the world war in the opinion of I. H. Dube, late Lieutenant-Colonel in the American Expeditionary Force who appeared as a witness in behalf of an ex-service man convicted last week of receiving stolen automobile wheels.

"That was not much for a man that we taught to steal and murder in 'No Man's Land' during the long nights there: the stealing of automobile wheels is insignificant compared with what those men were taught to do there," said Dube. The defendant was released on a suspended sentence.

If the leading nations would leave the "fighting" as well as the "declaring" of wars exclusively to those who make them, that would be enough disarmament for the world

No doubt the storekeeper charges a deposit on milk bottles to keep us from eating them. If wages continue to come down and rents to go up his little ruse may fail.

MOSCOW CALLS SPECIAL CONFERENCE

Stressing the grave economic crisis confronting the rest of the world as well as Russia, accusing the imperialists of allowing the whole world to march toward ruin, the Executive Committee of the Third (Communist) International has issued a call for a special convention of all communist parties to be held in Moscow beginning the 22nd of February.

The call is headed "For the United Front of the Proletariat" and is addressed to "Workingmen, and Women of all Countries." It reads in part:—

The Executives of the Communist International and the Red Trade Union International have in three joint sessions considered the international situation and the situation of the international working-class, and have come to the conclusion that this situation demands the union of all the forces of the international proletariat, the establishment of an united front of all the parties of the proletariat, regardless of the differences separating them, if they desire to fight in common for the immediate urgent needs of the working-class. The Executive of the Communist International has convoked a meeting for the [illegible]th of February 1922, to which all the Communist parties are to send a delegation twice as large as usual. At the same time it calls the workers of all parties to do all in their power to induce their parties to take part in a common proletarian action.

Working Men and Women!

Three years have passed since the end of the great imperialist war in which you offered your lives for the interests of capital. For three years international capital has had a free hand to show whether it is capable of introducing any sort of human order which would assure the masses of the people the minimum of safety, the minimum of the conditions necessary for life.

The World's Economic Chaos

The result lies before you.

Six million unemployed in America, two million in England, and increasing unemployment in the neutral countries enriched by the war, as the result of the disappearance of their export markets.

However, in the ruined countries of Central and Eastern Europe, in Russia, in the Balkans, and in Turkey there prevails the [illegible] misery. They need billions of dollars worth of goods from the industrial countries in order to revive their production and again to be able to supply grain and raw materials to the industrial world. Hemmed in between East and West Germany is uninterruptedly at work and is flooding the world with quantities of goods at prices which crowd other countries out of the market. It has practically no unemployment but the workers of Germany are worse off than the workless of England. They are against their will reducing the wages of the workers of other countries. The housing shortage and the tax burden is continually growing. The world, cleft and torn apart, through which the cry has resounded up to now, "Woe to the vanquished!", and which will soon hear the call, "Woe to the victors!", can not be set in order and at peace by the bourgeoisie. Germany's reparations task is the reconstruction of Soviet Russia. The ruins of Northern France, Belgium, Serbia, Roumania, Poland and Russia have not yet been cleared away.

This, the first edition of The Worker, is the advance agent of The Daily Worker. We are ambitious and we intend to grow [illegible], increase in quality and enlarge the influence of this publication—a journal [illegible] solely in the interest of the working class. [illegible] their paper. In this work we take much pleasure in fulfilling a duty.

The Worker preaches the class struggle, but it is going to be fair about it. It will be just as fair in its treatment of the capitalists, the capitalist system, its hangers-on, leeches, parasites and apologists as they are in their treatment of the working class. As a consequence, The Worker will never have a good word to say for the exploiters and their hirelings. If we cannot unearth any new evidences of the horrors of capitalism, if we can discover from time to time no new proofs of the folly, incompetence and cruelty of the ruling class, we will remain silent, but praise for some act of regal charity toward those whom they have robbed will never be found in these columns. We leave that for their own sheets and the others which envy and ape them—the slippery organs of liberalism and social democracy.

This paper is for workers, and we want the workers to write for it—their contributions will be published. This paper wants the expression of the men and women of labor whose self-sacrifice makes this paper possible. We want the stories of the daily grind in all the places where labor sweats for the profit of the hog-jowled gentry who own this nation. If the stories are badly written and poorly spelled it makes no difference. The editor of this paper could not spell a word of more than two syllables five years ago. These little things will be attended to. That's what the editor is paid for—when he gets paid.

This paper is against everything the capitalist class is for, because what is good for them is bad for us. Its policy is that in a fight with the employer and his political henchmen labor is always right. ALWAYS RIGHT. We do not have to wait for the report of an interchurch committee or a senatorial investigation to make up our mind on that point. We are prejudiced in this matter and we admit it—freely and frankly. We are rank partisans so far as the working class is concerned. Do not expect us to be "fair." We intend to give the workers—organized and unorganized—the best of it whenever the issue is one between the workers and any section, group or individual of the capitalist class. That's the way the capitalist press does, and it's time that the working-class press took a leaf out of its book. A whole lot of workers will not agree with this policy. They still believe that it is respectable and Christ-like to be fair with an opponent that uses teeth, knees and elbows in the clinches.

It may be Christ-like, but it's damn poor judgment as the results prove.

It is doubtful if this paper will ever acquire the polished style of journalism that the "intelligentsia" of the revolutionary movement so much admire. We hope not. It is not that we glory in the dirty shirt and the greasy overall—the national costume of the American worker—but we believe that too much suavity indicates that philosophical attitude toward the class struggle and the social revolution that has been one of the many curses of the American radical movement. This paper will carry better articles, better editorials, better cartoons, better poetry, better news and better all-around educational matter than any other working-class journal in the United States. It will be able to enlist talent that the capitalist class has not enough money to hire. We are not going to be crude and unlettered when it comes to dealing in economics, history, literature, and philosophy simply because this is a working-class paper. The workers do not want egotistical ignorance. They do want the same ruggedness and courage in the publications that try to speak for them as they possess themselves and without which the struggles of the oppressed masses in all ages could not be the most glorious pages of human history.

This paper is not being published to please or satisfy other editors. From the conventional journalist we want no praise and probably will get none. As a matter of fact we are going to develop a new school of journalism—the proletarian school. Its disciples will write and draw with but one purpose—the overthrow of capitalism through the militant and intelligent action of the working class.

After all, that's the only thing worth working, writing, drawing and fighting for in this day and age.

And it is not a private fight. Anyone can get into it. The staff of The Worker extends to all who feel the same as they do a most cordial invitation to join them in the struggle.

[illegible] from Ellis Island

Edgar T. Whitehead, the British journalist, who came here for famine relief work for Soviet Russia, and who was detained at Ellis Island, has been released on $1,000 bond.

"Conditions on the Island are atrocious. The food is practically inedible," said Mr. Whitehead. "You are treated like a criminal and confined like a prisoner. And the vermin! The less said, the better.

"In England there is no such thing as an Ellis Island, and if a man who came there on a mission similar to mine were detained for any such flimsy reason as I was held for, the whole liberal and bourgeois press would be aroused. Questions would be asked in the House of Commons, and the Government would be compelled to take action at once.

"It appears that there is no such thing as public opinion in the United States. Your papers seem able to mold any kind of opinion that they want, that is, of course, at the instigation of those who want a certain kind of opinion for their own ends.

"The report that the delegates of the different countries made regarding the work that is being done, particularly by the labor unions and workers' organizations, were most illuminating. All over Europe the workers are as busy as bees, doing their utmost for the starving millions in Soviet Russia. There is no question of politics or philosophy. Millions are starving—there is an absolute want of the most essential things in Soviet Russia, and the workers recognizing what their comrades in Soviet Russia have suffered in the past seven years, do not hesitate to give their very best energy to relieving the distress there.

"The report of the Russian representative revealed a state of utter destitution. Millions faced death. Only the concentrated aid of all men, women and children sympathizing with the workers and peasants of Soviet Russia will save them.

"And that is what I am here for. I am here to survey the situation, coordinate the efforts being made, stimulate the work being done, and create whatever other agencies may be required in order to heighten the efficiency of the relief work.

"It feels good being off the Island. I have passed through an experience that I would not have missed for anything. My memories of America will be tempered by what I have passed through there."

There will be a mass meeting in New York City this week, at which Mr. Whitehead will make a detailed report on the Berlin Conference.

[illegible] from West Virginia [illegible] convention and "I [illegible] I just got to say [illegible] Lewis or I have to walk home." The [illegible] system of compensation and servility coupled with a [illegible] truckling to government officials and a rabid hatred of anything that savors of radicalism on the part of the Lewis administration has had the inevitable effect. The organization now faces a nation-wide fight beginning the first of April and it faces it with internal dissension rife caused solely by an official and his followers whose policies have been proved failures wherever placed in practice. It is not hard to find members of the United Mine Workers of America who openly make the charge of treason against Lewis and who claim that as its head the United Mine Workers of America has a tool of the coal-operators. They claim that John L. Lewis is deliberately disrupting the organization; dividing it in the face of the enemy and that he is backed by the national organizations of the employers.

The bitterness of the fight in the United Mine Workers cannot be shown better than by a circular issued by John H. Walker, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, himself a member of the United Mine Workers and active in its affairs for years. Walker is not a radical and the revolutionists in the organization have no use for him. He is one of the pure and simple trade-unionists and during the war made many speeches urging the continued prosecution of the struggle and more production. In this circular, entitled "John L. Lewis, Liar, Coward, Traitor," Walker says:

John L. Lewis is an indefensible liar because he made statements that were untrue, which he deliberately manufactured out of whole-cloth.

Lewis is a yellow coward, because he lied about a man behind his back, when the man he lied about was in jail almost one thousand miles away sacrificing six months of his life, suffering ignominy, humiliation, privation and persecution at the hands of the enemies of labor in the state of Kansas, because he would not consent to their betrayal, or that they should submit to a law which made them serfs and slaves, and [illegible] the liberties of all the [illegible] the United [illegible] famous traitor. [illegible] cowardly betrayal of labor and the cause of humanity. Shamed him until Judas Iscariot, in his betrayal of the Christian world, and in his malicious, lying, untruthful statement, attacking Alex Howat behind his back while he was in jail. Lewis was holding up the hands of, and supporting the enemies of humanity in the state of Kansas, who are trying to enforce a slave law on the workers there.

Lewis is an indiscriminate, common, ordinary, cheap liar, when he made his unfounded, untruthful statement, deliberately attacking Frank P. Walsh and Phil. Callery, charging them with having supported a slave law for Kansas workers, similar in principle, although slightly less drastic in degree than is the infamous Allen "Court of Industrial Relations Law" of Kansas.

The following statements taken from the report of President Farrington of District 12, U. M. W. of A., to the 29th consecutive, and fourth biennial convention, at Peoria, Illinois, November 8, 1921, verify and prove conclusively the charges made above, and leave no room for doubt that John L. Lewis [illegible] the most colossal liar that ever held an official position in the Labor Movement; the yellowest cur dog that ever was in human form, and the foulest and most evil and injurious traitor that ever betrayed the cause of labor and humanity.

It also proves that the verdict of the National Convention on the Howat case was considered in the light of the false impressions that were left on the minds of the delegates just on the eve of their voting on that matter, by these lying, cowardly, traitorous statements, was not a true verdict and should not be so considered. The fact that Lewis went to such extremes to create these impressions and lied in such an infamous manner to do so, is the positive proof that he knew that the convention would have supported the Kansas miners in their stand behind Alex Howat, if they had been permitted to act on the matter on its merits.

The fact that he is going to such extremes now, and using such autocratic, high-handed methods to enforce a decision of that kind, gotten by such questionable, underhanded, untruthful, and dishonest methods, is only further proof of his absolute lack of conscience, his untruthfulness, his dishonestness, his cowardliness and his traitorousness.

His exact statement to the convention was as follows:

President Lewis:—It was said this morning that President Howat of District 14 has appealed in vain to the International Union for co- [illegible] in the higher courts.

As [illegible] proof that [illegible] was not [illegible] to the convention, by President Lewis, I quote a letter by Alexander Howat to President Lewis. It reads as follows:

"Pittsburg, Kansas, March 4, 1920.
Mr. John L. Lewis,
President U. M. W. of A.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Dear Sir and Brother:

I suppose you know before this time that Governor Allen of Kansas was successful at the special session of the Legislature, in having a law passed that is known as the Kansas Court of Industrial Relations. This law is intended to enslave the working class of this state and destroy organized labor in Kansas.

This law is an insult to every honest workingman who believes in the principle of liberty and justice and is a disgrace to the state of Kansas. It is intended to place us at the complete mercy of the employers of labor and to put us where we were years ago before we had an organization here.

There is no law even in the most autocratic country of Europe today that destroys the usefulness and effectiveness of organized labor and places them more completely at the mercy of the employers than does the law we have in Kansas at this time. This law provides one year in prison and $500 fine on any of the men who may go on a local strike, that is, where they go on strike of their own accord without being called out by the executive board. It also provides a penalty of two years in the penitentiary and a fine of $5000 on any district official of the organization who may call a strike.

Governor Allen was not satisfied with passing a law for compulsory arbitration, but he had this penalty attached that I have just called to your attention, and not satisfied with that he had a provision written into this law which provides also that he is to appoint the three arbitrators. When the Kansas Legislature passed a law of this character, they struck a blow at the rights of every union man in the state, both as an organized workman and as an American citizen.

The recent general strike of the U. M. W. of A. created a very bitter sentiment against the miners in Kansas and against organized labor in general, and it was as a result of the miners' general strike, which caused a few of the people in Kansas to suffer because of their inability to obtain coal, that caused this law to be passed at the special session of the Kansas Legislature.

We intend to fight this law to a finish. We do not propose to go back to the days of slavery. We expect in Kansas to continue to be free men—we expect to be accorded the same degree of liberty and freedom in Kansas as the mine workers in the other states in the nation.

At the time we were striking in Kansas from 1899 until 1903 to compel the operators to recognize our union, we were also fighting then to be free men. Governor Allen proposes now after all these years to put us back in the same condition that existed before we had an organization.

Our convention meets in Kansas City, Mo., on the 8th day of March, and I am inclined to believe at that time that our convention will go on record to continue to fight as we have in the past, regardless of this so-called law. Sentiment against this law in Kansas today is very bitter, more especially among the mine workers, because they realize only too well what it means. In my report to the convention I am advising that we refuse to surrender any of the rights and privileges that we have enjoyed in the past, and I am quite sure our convention will go on record to that effect.

Every local union in the district is going to be represented. There will be about 225 delegates in attendance to speak for the mine workers of this district as to our future policy regarding this outrage that has been perpetrated by the Kansas Legislature on the organized labor movement of this state. The fight must be made in Kansas against this law, because if we submit tamely here to an outrage of this kind, it is only a question of a very short time until the working class of this entire country will be enslaved with a law similar to that which we have in Kansas today.

You will therefore readily understand the importance of this question and what it means to organized labor, and also the importance of the fight being made in Kansas at this time. We can never agree to take a backward step, and we can never agree to surrender the principles that we have fought and struggled so long to establish. It is for these reasons that we intend to continue to fight for the principles of justice rather than submit to Governor Allen, the tyrant and would-be destroyer of organized labor.

I am writing you at this time to see whether or not we may expect the full moral and financial support of our international organization in any fight that we may decide to [illegible] expect to receive the full [illegible] of our international union in this struggle to make free men of organized labor in this state. The fight will be a great deal easier with our international organization standing with us, and it will give more hope and encouragement to the mine workers of District 14 who have always been loyal to our union, and one thing that had a great deal to do with causing Governor Allen to have this law passed was the fact that the miners in this state refused to dig coal for him when he toured our district and called for volunteers and urged the miners to return to work.

I am sure, John, if you take all these questions into consideration, that you will have no hesitancy in telling me in behalf of our international union where you are going to stand in this fight. We have resolutions, I believe, from about every local union in our district condemning Governor Allen and this law that he was instrumental in having passed.

I will apreciate it very much indeed if you will write me by return mail and make your position clear so no one can misunderstand. Write me to the Cordova Hotel, Kansas City, Mo., as I am leaving here Sunday morning. I want to read your letter to the miners in convention, and you may rest assured, if you can see your way clear to stand with us in this fight, it will be appreciated by every mine worker in our district.

Hoping to receive a favorable reply, I am with kind regards,

Yours very truly,
Alexander Howat,
President District 14."

That Lewis received the letter quoted above is made clear by one he wrote to Howat. It reads as follows:

"Continental Hotel,
New York City, March 10, 1921.
Mr. Alexander Howat,
President District 14,
Pittsburg, Kansas

Dear Sir and Brother:

Your esteemed favor of March 4th was received in Indianapolis on March 6th and forwarded to me here in New York, arriving too late for me to make reply in time to reach you at the Convention of District No. 14 in Kansas City. I did not know that your convention was to be held on that date, having had no notification. Had I been aware of the holding of the convention I would have endeavored to have had a representative of the International union present to confer with yourself and associate officers in the matter concerning the new law in Kansas.

I have in mind that this is a most serious matter and requires careful and deliberate consideration. Press dispatches today in the New York papers advise that the convention of District No. 14 has granted you authority to call a strike at any time you desire as a protest against the enactment of Governor Allen's industrial court law. I trust that you will take no hasty action upon this matter and that any action that may be taken will be subsequent to the most careful consideration. I shall be glad to confer with you in person upon this matter at some later date after our affairs take more definite shape in the anthracite and bituminous matters. As I wired you yesterday, the Bituminous Coal Commission has not yet agreed. We must always consider the possibility of a disagreement and, if so, there may be a national suspension of the mining industry on April 1st, consequently you will see the advisability of deferring judgment with respect to the Kansas situation.

Reciprocating your kind regards, I am, Very truly yours,
Signed: John L. Lewis, President."

President Lewis also told the Convention that Frank P. Walsh and Attorney Callery lobbied for a compromise bill at the time the industrial court act was before the Kansas Legislature. Following is a telegram from Frank P. Walsh on the subject. It reads as follows:

"New York, N. Y., Oct. 3, 1921.
John H. Walker,
Severin Hotel,
Indianaoplis, Ind.

Have just sent following wire to William Green care of convention: "Am advised statement has been made to your convention that I lobbied for compromise of industrial court law at Topeka. On January 8, 1920, I appeared in opposition to the proposed industrial law before a special session of the Legislature of Kansas representing the Kansas State Federation of Labor and the four Railroad Brotherhoods. Did not lobby with individual members of Legislature but presented an argument against the proposed law publicly to a joint session of the house and senate. The opening words of my argument taken from the official stenographic transcript now before me were 'We oppose every clause in this bill and every line of it.' My argument was to the effect that it was an attempt to impose slavery upon the workers of Kansas. Afterwards made many public speeches and wrote newspaper articles to same effect and adhere to that position to this mo- [illegible]

Frank P. Walsh."

Following is a telegram from Phil Callery, Attorney for the Kansas miners. It reads as follows:

"Pittsburg, Kansas, Oct. 17, 1921.
Frank Farrington, Mine Workers Bldg., Springfield, Ill.

The assertion that I lobbied for compromise industrial court law at Topeka is despicable lie and contains not a particle of truth. Every skunk who has been circulating such statements is now working hand in hand with the industrial court and the Coal Operators' Association in their effort to lash the miners back to the pits and save the industrial court from extinction. Their conspiracy will fail as long as the Kansas miners can get a crust of bread their fight will go on.

Signed: Phil Callery."

President Lewis also told how he had wired the legislative representatives of District No. 14 to oppose all legislation of a compulsory kind. Who were the legislative representatives? Earl Draper, chairman of the committee appointed by President Lewis to draw up a report on the election of organizers and which committee advised against their election, and Chas. Harvey, a brother of Thos. Harvey, now "provisional" secretary of District 14, by reason of President Lewis' action in suspending the officers of that District. How easy it would be to frame up any kind of story with them. I venture the opinion that if Harvey or Draper were called upon to produce the telegram Lewis said he sent them they could not do so. It seems strange that he would wire them instead of the President of Districtt 14 and it seems passing strange that he would wire them and keep the President of the District in the dark as to what he had done on such an important matter.

Then too President Lewis told the convention of how Howat had spurned the offer of the International Union to have Attorney Clarkson of District No. 13 inducted into the fight against the Industrial Court Act. President Howat could hardly be blamed for spurning the aid of Attorney Clarkson. Mr. Clarkson is a high classed attorney and an esteemable gentleman and no one can properly say a word against him as such, but he would hardly be a proper person to make the fight against the Industrial Court Act, considering his son owns the coal mine at Nashville, Illinois, and many of the members at Nashville believe Mr. Clarkson himself is interested in the mine, their belief being based upon the fact that he spends four and five days at a time in Nashville examining the mine underground and on the surface.

I enter this matter in my report because Alexander Howat was in prison at the time and therefore could not be in the convention to personally disprove the false statements of President Lewis and because I do not like to remain silent and see any man crucified by falsehoods and mistatements.

In this connection it may also be well to point out that Secretary Green did not read the telegram from Frank P. Walsh to the convention.

Signed: JOHN H. WALKER,
Pres., Illinois State Fed. of Labor.

That the miners are going to have to fight after the first of April or accept drastic reductions in wages and the abolition of favorable working conditions is evidenced by the public utterances of the responsible heads of the operators association.

The frankest of these statements was made before the Interstate Commerce Commission, at a rate hearing, by J. D. A. Morrow, Vice-President of the National Coal Association. He said:

"After April 1, however, the roads will not only be in position to contract on more favorable terms than a year ago in the non-union coal fields, but unquestionably wages will be reduced in the union fields and the roads will be able to effect important savings there also."

Creating division in the face of the enemy has been the charge commonly hurled in the past by the officialdom of the labor organizations, against the so-called radical element. In the case of the United Mine Workers, however, it is the reactionary officialdom that is creating confusion and preparing the ground for a split. The radicals, on the other hand, are urging the dissatisfied members to stay with the organization at all costs and force the administration to assume responsibility for any weakness that develops.

That the employing class of this country have their agents working both within and without the ranks of the United Mine Workers cannot be doubted. If the coal miners organization can be either destroyed or split the backbone of the Labor movement in America is broken. Is it any wonder that the possibility of a split is welcomed by every agency of the employing class?

[illegible] takes up the work of reconstruction, it is seized as the object of speculation and of exploitation which must inevitably lead to new conflicts.

Three years of imperialist war, followed by three years of armed intervention of the Allies in Soviet Russia, have turned this granary of Europe into a desert in spite of all the heroic resistance of the Soviets. The drought last summer, which threatens 25,000,000 human beings with death by starvation, has made the question of the reconstruction of Russia a question of the life or death of millions of Russian workers and peasants. And more and more is it becoming clear even to the stupid bourgeoisie that neither the world economic crisis nor the great political tension between the different countries can be overcome even temporarily without the recognition of the undefeated Soviet government and the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia. If Russia does not again take its place in the world market as furnisher of raw materials and market for finished products there will be a irremediable gap in the world's economy. And as long as Soviet Russia is not guaranteed against new attacks, it will have to keep the Red Army under arms and the danger will always be present that the world may again be set on fire as the result of the military ventures of the watchdogs of World Capital—the Polish White Guards and the Roumanian Bojars. The world bourgeoisie refuses to aid the starving millions in Russia, for it expects that Hunger will make them more accomodating to the demands of World Capital. These demands are that as the price of recognition, the Soviet government deliver Russia up to an international financial syndicate, which will administer Russia as it has done in China and Turkey. The Russian people, which for four years defended itself with arms in its hands against the establishment of the rule of World Capital in Russia under the mask of the dictatorship of the Russian Whites, will, of course, defend itself with all its power against this "peaceful" attempt at its enslavement. The question of Russia's return into the world's economic system and the question of general peace will become the pivots of new conflicts.

The Washington Conference

However, the relations of World Capital to Germany and to Soviet Russia are not the only sources of great new disturbances. The Conference, which attempted to solve the problem of the Far East, has not solved it. The great Chinese people of 400,000,000 human beings has remained the object of further haggling and of new conflicts. Feeling their impotence, their incapacity of either renouncing the exploitation of China or of carrying it through, the allied Powers have concluded the Four Power Treaty, which only manifests one thing—that they realize how great the danger of war is and therefore are attempting to mutually restrain one another by the spider-web of an agreement from undertaking independent measures. They were not able to reduce land armaments, even on paper; the entire cry for naval disarmament ended in the elimination of obsolete ships and the limitation of the number of super-dreadnoughts, in order to arm in the air and under water. At the same time they are seeking for new poison gases which will be able to destroy entire peoples.

The Failure of Reformist Policies

For three years in spite of all your experiences in the war, you hoped that matters would become better, that the capitalists would fulfill the promises they made during the war and that they would give you Democracy, Self-determination, Bread and Freedom. Your hopes have been deceived. Instead of the nationalization of coal, the English miners were compelled to look on while the coal barons reduced their wages. The German workers believed that if they would submit to the rule of the bourgeoisie, they would obtain the socialization of industry in a peaceful manner. Today they must look on while the kings of German industry, Stinnes & Co., are getting hold of all the productive forces of the land, while they prepare to get control of the railways, while they export the wealth of the country in order to deposit foreign currency in foreign banks to protect their property from seizure by the German people. France is today more than ever under the control of capital united in the war. In America the rule of the Republican Party means the naked and unmasked sovereignity of the trusts. Even the governmental subsidies for the cheapening of the price of bread are being abolished in all countries; whoever cannot afford the high price of bread can die of hunger. Post-war Democracy is nothing but the mask for the rule of the war speculators and the curtain behind which a brainless diplomacy forges plots against the people of the world. In a number of the capitalist countries the White Terror rages. In India and Egypt the British world oligarchy has turned this terror, which up to now it has only used against [illegible] of the [illegible] and Amsterdam Trade Union International have [illegible] All these international associations have demonstrated their incompetence to lead you in the struggle even if only for Democracy and reforms, because they have been condemned to helplessness through their coalition with the bourgeoisie and if they wish it or not must assist in the strengthening of the rule of the bourgeoisie.

The United Front is Needed.

Your experience up to now must have shown even the blind that the Communist International was right when it said, "The working-class can only free itself by breaking the power of the bourgeoisie and establishing the rule of the working-class, by clearing away the ruins of the war and, closely united internationally, beginning the work of reconstruction."

But we know how strong the chains of the past—the capitalist school, press and church—still are. We know how timid and afraid large proletarian masses still are to seize power and forge their own destiny. We know how much great proletarian masses still fear defeats such as Communist minorities have suffered in their struggle to free the masses from the fate of slaves. We know how the capitalist press of the entire world is trying to rob you of your courage by pointing to the wounds of the isolated Russian proletariat received in its duel with the entire capitalist world. And therefore we say to you, "You are not yet ready to renew the struggle, you do not yet dare the armed conflict for power, for the dictatorship, you do not yet dare the great attack on the citadels of world reaction. Then at least join forces for the struggle for a bare existence, for the struggle for a bit of bread and peace. Join your forces in a battle front, unite as a proletarian class against the class of the exploiters and pillagers of the world. Tear down the walls which have been built up between you, take your place in the ranks,—whether Communist, Social Democrat, Anarchist or Syndicalist—for the battle against the misery of the hour."

Editor of Truth Jailed for Four-Year-Old Speech

Duluth, Minn.—J. O. Bentall, editor of Truth, has been taken to Leavenworth to begin serving a sentence of two years for having opposed the draft. The speech which formed the basis of the prosecution was made four and one-half years ago. During this time Bentall served one year in the county jail at Brainerd, Minnesota, having been charged with opposing registration. The present case was appealed after the first trial and the decision was reversed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. A new trial resulted in a two-year sentence and this was sustained by the appeal court. Bentall issued the following statement before leaving for Leavenworth:

The government desires that I go to prison for having made a speech on July 31, 1917. That was four years and six months ago. In that speech I told the people that all wars were wrong and that this war was wrong. I told them that wars are for the purpose of enriching the few and making life miserable for the many. I told them that capitalism cannot get along without wars and that the only way to get rid of war was to get rid of its causes.

I condemned Germany for starting the war. I condemned all the other nations for entering it. I pointed out that an economic blockade would have defeated Germany quicker than any army or navy. I showed how the profiteers were behind this war and how the common people had to pay the bill in lives and money.

I showed how hypocritical it was for the instigators of the war to scare the people by telling them that the Germans would come and capture our country. I offered to give my life if an enemy should attack our shores to destroy us. I declared that no draft would be needed "to defend our country— that the youth of our land would offer their services gladly to protect their country.

I told that mass of people that it was wrong to draft men for foreign service. That it was unconstitutional as stated by good authorities at the time. But I told the boys that there had been a law passed by Congress commanding them to go. I told the boys that unless Congress could be induced by petition to repeal that law there was no way out of it. The law would compel them to go and that was all there was to it.

I was right about it then. The boys had to go. I was right about the instigators of the war. I was right about the crime of dragging this country into the war. I was right about Wilson and his criminal policies and refused to back him. I was right about the misery I told would follow the war. I was right about the way the war lords would treat the soldiers when they returned.

J. O. Bentall has been the editor of Truth since October, 1920. The board of directors of the paper has secured a new editor and it will be published as usual.

His analysis of the Russian situ [illegible] tion, his criticisms of the attitude of American capitalism toward the Russian Soviet Government is the typical analysis of the muddle-head [illegible] ed liberal who believes that capital [illegible] ism can be something else than cap [illegible] italism and continue to exist. To imagine that the Wilsonian pro [illegible] nouncements of peace and good-will toward the new social order in Rus [illegible] sia were made in good faith and that the world's most powerful capitalis [illegible] class would or could put them into practice is an error in judgment that can be made only by minds cluttered up with false notions concerning good and bad men. The trouble with the Wellsian program is that in order to carry it out capitalists must become communists overnight.

Let us now proceed to one other utterance of the oracle that proves him entirely lacking in the ability to appraise the relative capabilities of individuals or convict him of deliberately catering to the vanity of the business element of the United States. Here it is:

> If big business in America really had the intellectual power and courage that romantic-minded people are accustomed to ascribe to it, it would have established its intellectual ascendancy over this weak Government. It would have helped it and co-operated with it in its task of building up a new civilization in Russia.

Let us remember that the government of which he speaks above (the Soviet government of Russia) is composed of men and women who have beaten at their own game the best minds capitalism can purchase. These men, representing the revolutionary masses of Russia, have directed military campaigns whose success in the face of blockade and starvation has been the wonder of the civilized world. In the field of diplomacy their success has been just as great. Their ability to predict the next move of their opponents seems almost uncanny to those who know nothing of the structure and limitations of the capitalist system. To say that men of the type of Wilson, Lansing, Baker, Colby, Hu [illegible] Root, Lodge and Harding could [illegible] established an "intellectual asc [illegible] ancy" over men like Lenin, Chic [illegible] rin, Trotsky, Bucharin, Kamen [illegible] and Radek, men whose sheer inte [illegible] lectual ability is the admiration [illegible] their bitterest enemies, is mere pres [illegible] agent poppycock and a cheap meth [illegible] od of currying favor with the domi [illegible] nant class in America.

Wells is one of the "grays" who Gorki describes as standing betwe [illegible] the "reds" and "blacks"; scuttli [illegible] from one to the other as the tide [illegible] battle fluctuates; never taking [illegible] outright position but always cryi [illegible] for peace and harmony witho [illegible] realizing that there can be nothi [illegible] but strife so long as the good thin [illegible] of the earth are controlled by [illegible] class that just now fawns upon [illegible] Wells.

Wells does not like capitalism, [illegible] he does not wish anyone to [illegible] blood to overthrow it. Like [illegible] liberals his economic position [illegible] such that he can afford to wait [illegible] the Morgans, the Rockefellers, [illegible] Schwabs and the Garys to see [illegible] light and voluntarily hand over [illegible] spoils to society to be used fo [illegible] mental, moral and physical ad [illegible] ment of humanity. Although [illegible] as writen by Wells himself [illegible] that never has such a thing [illegible] and cannot occur, he still ho [illegible] his articles may yet have th [illegible]

In this he is a fool and [illegible] he has now been taken [illegible] capitalist class he is a [illegible] fool.

The Daily Wo

The Daily W

[illegible] prevention is a [illegible] in the field of [illegible]. A science in the making [illegible] even within the span [illegible] life-time to be of tremendous [illegible] lasting value to the human [illegible]. Romain Rolland, artist and [illegible], says: "We must see that the physical well-being of people is looked after, for this is the basis of our whole civilization. The basis indeed of a civilization which nothing shall be so [illegible] as human life!"

[illegible] regardless of the effort put [illegible] by public health departments, [illegible] and other health agencies, [illegible] well-being" for the great [illegible] of workers is largely a matter [illegible]. Exploited down through [illegible] by slaveholders, landowners, governments, for industry [illegible] war, workers have paid the [illegible] in diseased, maimed and [illegible] bodies. Under the yoke of [illegible], there is no alternative [illegible] wrest the greatest possible [illegible] of health protection in mill, [illegible] shop and factory. The forces [illegible] science lie at hand ready to be [illegible]. The solution of the question [illegible] disease prevention confronts the [illegible] class, and is fundamental [illegible] Communist ideal of a world [illegible] "free . . . . physically, intellectually and spiritually."

Russia under her stupendous burdens is developing a health policy [illegible] in scope than that of any other country. To quote from a [illegible] report of the Red Cross Medical Director:

"Public health education has always been considered as its primary function.

"Up to the end of the year 1920 more than 15 million leaflets, about one million brochures, about 800,000 posters and innumerable books, special numbers of periodicals, etc., have been distributed.

"In each of the 13 guberneal cities museums have been opened and 26 permanent exhibits in the same number of district cities, 17 traveling exhibits in railroad cars have been put on the road, and seven similar exhibits are being moved on highways for the use in places where there is no railroad.

"Lectures on public health topics are an important part of the program. Up to the last of January over 60,000 lectures have been given, with an attendance over six millions.

"Health weeks have been organised in different sections of the country with wonderful results.

"This extensive public health educational program has borne very fruitful results. In February, 1920, 401,907 typhus fever cases were reported, and during the same month in the year 1921 only 47,288. In the year 1919 only 6,000 cases of cholera have been reported.

"Plague, typhoid, dysentery and smallpox are well under control." *

The health posters recently exhibited here bear out this statement, that health education is a vital part of Russia's program for bringing enlightenment to the masses. There is a whole series on Syphilis, one on Diphtheria, another on the Care of Mothers and Infants. The range of subjects covered in these posters, their directness and simplicity in giving scientific information on the care of the body are conspicuously fine. They are far more dramatic and significant in their appeal to adult intelligence than anything so far produced in America. Artists and scientists have collaborated to adapt Health Information to the needs of the people. Only the best is good enough for the First Workers' Republic!

The kind of work a man does, the conditions under which that work is done, the air he breathes, the number of hours he is forced to labor, the wages he draws, and the amount of time he must live in enforced idleness or employment . . . . these may be either the foundations of health and life, or of poverty, sickness and death.

Within the past few years scientists, physicians and industrial hygienists in this country have made great progress in collecting information on occupational diseases. Much of this matter is in the nature of statistics, cases investigated and tabulated. As such it is practically worthless to the rank and file of labor. The medical profession knows that dust, gases, vapors, acids, fumes, unguarded machinery are health-destroying factors. To quote a paragraph from the current issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association: "That dusts of various types are intensely harmful to mankind, occasioning in some industries terrible explosions that produce great loss of life and property, and in other trades standing responsible for a highly increased death rate from lung diseases, is emphasized by investigations being conducted by the United States Bureau of Mines. The fact that coal [illegible] has tremendous explosive [illegible] is now demonstrated frequently by the bureau in its own [illegible] mine at Experiment, Pa. A [illegible] of severe explosions have [illegible] in industrial plants using [illegible] coal as fuel, and it is necessary that care be used in the in[illegible] and operation of such [illegible]. Aluminum dust, the dust of grains and hard rubber dust [illegible] declared to be explosive. The dust of rock con[illegible] [illegible] in the West, [illegible] in the lungs of [illegible] responsible for a heavy [illegible] death rate from miner's consumption. In the Butte, Montana, copper mining district, the tuberculosis death rate of Butte miners is nearly thirteen times as great as that of residents of the state of Michigan. Pulmonary disease due to rock dust, among the miners of Joplin, Mo., lead and zinc district, affects probably as high as 30 per cent of the miners employed in certain classes of mines."

You may say, if a trade is so dangerous, let us give it up. Suppose you run away from this one to become a printer, or a baker, a plumber, a leather worker, or a painter? Every one of these trades has a health danger that is just as serious. Would you like lead poisoning better? Or would you choose to work as a match dipper in a match factory and be poisoned by "white phosphorous"? This still happens although most of the big manufacturers of the world, as a result of an agreement made in Berne, Switzerland, are now substituting more or less harmless materials in the manufacture of matches and the danger is greatly lessened. These few illustrations serve to show that health dangers in a trade have to be reckoned with first in planning health protection for the working class.

Aim of the Bureau

To continue collecting facts showing how industries affect the health of workers, but to translate these facts so that workers can understand and benefit by them, remains the outstanding problem. In attempting to outline a plan of action for the immediate needs three kinds of organization are needed:

1. Research for conducting studies, experiments, investigations.
2. Education to teach workers the significance of all data collected.
3. Health supervision for every worker.

It is tragic to have to admit that the only forces at all interested in workers' health have been Employers' Welfare Departments, political Health Departments, organized Charities and Health Foundations endowed by Rockefeller and other members of his class. Employers' Welfare Departments use the medical machinery for emergency accidents, for following up absenteeism, but primarily for "weeding out" workers who have physical defects or ailments. Only in rare instances has provision even been made for systematic, thorough physical examinations or for teaching workers how to care for their bodies. Moreover, the high labor turnover in this country, estimated to be between 25 per cent and 400 per cent a year, means that the great majority of workers, through constant shifting of jobs are barely touched by the type of medical service offered. A noted medical authority, commenting on the situation, states: "There are still 30,000,000 of our people who are responsible for production of some type in this country who are not receiving any kind of health supervision. Many of these are working under intolerable conditions—the lack of protection against the commonest forms of occupational disease is appalling." **

Labor's Task

It is time for Labor to take these matters into its own hands through the trade union organizations. Much of the scientific information is ready to be used as soon as Labor undertakes this responsibility. Labor can wipe out the large proportion of trade dangers and get rid of conditions that cause accidents. Labor can prevent unnecessary sickness and disease through offering every member a regular medical examination once a year.

Recognizing this need, the Workers' Health Bureau was recently started to help Labor organize the most thorough kind of medical inspection and supervision for every worker in order that any weakness which may be developing can be checked at once; to get the scientific facts about trade dangers and to show up these facts without any soft pedalling or pussyfooting, and to work out a complete program of health education suited to the needs of the working class which will enable workers to care for their own human machines in an intelligent way.

The ruthless destruction of workers' bodies must be fought as long as capitalism stands. Safeguards must be developed. Educational machinery should be devised that can function even in the new society. To create a working-class technique in the field of health calls not only for practical idealism but for scientific ability of the highest order. Trade unions can wage this battle as a logical part of their activity to protect workers against exploitation.

Patsy's story is the call to action:

"Patsy, a 'wop' coal heaver on one of our railroads, met with an accident, skull fractured and both legs mangled. In this emergency Dr. ——, an expert anesthetist, was called, who said that Patsy could not withstand the operation except under gas-oxygen, which he gave. His bill for $25 for gas and services brought the following reply from the Chief Surgeon of the railroad:

"'It is not necessary to use gas-anesthesia for OUR class or to have specialists, as we feel that we can obtain the services of [illegible]

[illegible] He concluded by enclosing his check for $25, a gift to the railroad, for the satisfaction of having saved a man's life!"

Patsy's case is typical of what happens to workers up against illness, a low wage and medical bureaucracy and red tape. Will the trade unions of America meet this challenge?

Demonstrations of the Unemployed in New York

The Unemployment Council of New York is arranging for several demonstrations of the unemployed in the next month.

The time has come for action. Roger Babson, the noted statistician, admits that there are—not 3,000,000 unemployed in the country — but 10,000,000! The government and the local and state authorities are utterly indifferent to their condition. "There are millions of men, women and children who are suffering worse than any people did in Belgium." Thus Mr. Babson.

In the meantime, the unemployed wander about hungry and cold, without even the proper support of their fellow-workers who still have jobs. The Unemployment Council of New York has realized that the unemployed must take action themselves, and is now arranging to organize them into committees of action. The Council will coordinate their activities and help to make their demands more emphatic. With the support of the Labor Organizations affiliated with it, the Council will back up the unemployed and demonstrate to both the unemployed and the employed worker that there is salvation for both only in united action.

The next demonstration will take place on February 4, to be followed by two more in rapid succession. As a result of such activity, the unemployed will be sufficiently organized to be able to undertake demonstrations of a more vigorous nature. These are now being planned by the Council.

To aid it in conducting its unemployment work, the Unemployment Council of New York will hold an "Unemployment Dinner," Sunday, February 19, 2 P. M., at the Food Workers' Hall, 133 West 51st Street. There will be a number of prominent speakers at the dinner, provision also being made for other entertainment. Tickets are 75 cents.

At recent meetings of the Unemployment Council of New York, the following resolutions were adopted:

In view of the tremendous unemployment, which shows no signs of abatement, and

In view of the fact that the employers are taking advantage of it not only to cut wages but also to increase hours, which is a thing contrary to all common sense, since the situation calls for a decrease of hours, so that work may be provided for all; and

In view of the fact that the introduction of a longer working day for those still working will mean establishing a lower standard for all American workers, a standard that the organized American workers have struggled decades to establish; and

In view of the fact that, in addition to increasing hours, the employers have abolished increased rate of pay for overtime, so that they may exploit the workers to the limit without any added expense to themselves; therefore

The Unemployment Council of New York recommends to the organizations affiliated to it and to all other labor organizations in the city and country that they refuse all overtime, thereby protecting themselves from brutal and ever intensified exploitation and showing the proper spirit of solidarity toward the unemployed.

Few people realize what a noble and profitable position the elevator man has. He is forever uplifting Humanity and gets a raise on every trip.

[illegible] the relief action [illegible] recently commenced [illegible] and successful [illegible]. Thus, the Communist Party of Bulgaria has now sent in a draft for 1,000,000 Leva, representing the total of their collection campaign to date. The relief fund of the Czecho-Slovakian Party has attained the total of 1,600,000 crowns, that of the Communist Party of Norway, 120,000 crowns and the British Communist Party's fund £1500. The relief action is now being carried on with especial energy in the overseas countries—the United States, Canada, Brazil, Argentina and South Africa. The relief fund of the American "Friends of Soviet Russia" has reached a total of $260,000, and this committee has equipped and sent to Russia four ships with food and medicaments. The Argentine Communist Party has recently sent the Foreign Relief Committee in Berlin 1,000,000 marks as the first installment of their contribution.

The International Conference of Workers' Relief Committees, which met in Berlin on the 3rd, 4th and 5th of December, decided to continue the relief action in all countries, but justly stressed the necessity of especial concentration on the overseas countries. We have also succeeded in bringing about a revival of interest in the relief campaign in several trade-unions, particularly in England, and in a large number of bourgeois organizations. Thus, Herr von Wattenwyl, representative in Berlin of the Nansen organization, reported to the Foreign Workers' Committee that in England alone about £5000 are being collected daily, at the present time. Similarly the relief is beginning to make itself felt in Russia. The purchases of the Foreign Workers' Committee, as well as the food shipments of the Nansen organization are daily arriving in the famine regions in ever-increasing quantities.

In part under the pressure of the continually expanding relief action which has taken hold of all the strata of the population in various countries, the governments are beginning to relinquish their at first extremely hostile attitude. Thus, the French government has voted 6,000,000 francs; the British government has placed medical supplies to the value of £250,000 at the disposal of the Soviet government; and a resolution has been introduced into the Italian Chamber of Deputies for the appropriation of 800,000 lire.

However, more important than the practical results of the relief campaign is the fact that in the course of the last few weeks the attitude of all organizations, even those of the bourgeoisie, toward Soviet Russia has undergone a change. The first appeals of the Trade Union International as well as of the bourgeois relief committees and organizations were merely appeals to the sympathy and charity of the workers and peasants. In fact, in several statements and meetings it was declared very emphatically that only the starving inhabitants and children were to be relieved, and that under no circumstances were the Bolshevik regime and the ruling Soviet government in Russia to be assisted. Certain relief organizations went so far as to distribute their food and soups only to children. The poor, innocent children were to be saved; the wicked adult Bolsheviks could die of starvation. This point of view has to-day been totally changed in the majority of these organizations.

In October the Bureau of the Trade Union International pointed out in several appeals the great importance of Soviet Russia and of its continued existence for the entire proletariat of the world. It was declared with the greatest emphasis that the downfall of the present Soviet government would be followed by inconceivably disastrous consequences for the working class in all countries and that, therefore, it was in the interest of every worker to aid and support Soviet Russia. All the representatives of the bourgeois and pacifist relief organizations now working in Russia cannot sufficiently stress and laud the wonderful support their activity has obtained from the Soviet government. At the International Conference of the Labor Bureau of the League of Nations in Geneva on the 12th of November Nansen praised the distinguished part played by the Soviet government in the campaign for the relief of the famine-stricken. At the International Conference in Berlin on the 4th of December, 1921, in which representatives of all parties and the most diverse organizations participated, all speakers stressed the fact that almost more important than the obtaining of food for the famine-stricken was immediate assistance in the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia. The representative of the Trade Union International, Grassmann, as well as the speaker of the Quakers, the delegate of the Norwegian Workers' Party and others held that the obtaining of an unconditional resumption of commercial relations with Soviet Russia and the extension of long-term governmental credits were the chief tasks of the relief action in the future. On the 8th of December there took place in London a general conference of the English Labor Party and its Parliamentary group [illegible]

[illegible] The Foreign Committee for the Organization of Workers' Relief for the Famine-Stricken in Soviet Russia, with headquarters in Berlin, in accordance with the demand of the presidium of the general conference and following the example of the English workers, on the 12th of December addressed a letter to all working-class parties and organizations in which they were requested immediately to take action in all Parliaments similar to those of the English workers and to demand:

1. The immediate appropriation of funds for the starving workers and peasants in the famine regions.
2. The removal of all remaining obstacles to the resumption of normal economic and commercial intercourse with Russia.
3. The extension of long-term credits.
4. The recognition of the Soviet government.

The Committee concluded its call with the following lines:

"There is no doubt that a unified move in all parliaments on the part of the working-class parties, supported by the entire economic and political power of the working class, will in no small degree hasten the slowly developing understanding between the Western states and Russia. We hope in the interest of 20,000,000 starving Russian workers and peasants, and in the interests of the entire working class, suffering under the decay of the world's economic life, that our appeal will be heard and followed by all working-class parties."

The Voice of the Public

The rain was coming down in sheets as he came into a Page Street trolley-car about seven o'clock and sat down behind me. I looked around as he said in a loud voice to his seatmate: "I'll bet I'm the oldest man in this car: I'm seventy-three years old and working every day. Not many young fellows can say that these times." I had seen his face. It was one of those drawn, peering visages that we immediately associate with short-sightedness but which is more often the result of trying to see the work that must be done before a reprimand from the boss calls it to the attention. He rambled on:

"You see I work in the Federal Reserve bank. I have to be there by eight o'clock, but I make it a point to always be on hand by seven-thirty. Makes a good impression, you know. I been there four years now and I've never been late yet. It keeps me jumping to do it sometimes because me and my wife have to live so far out. We can't get anything at all for forty dollars close in and that's every cent we can afford to pay for rent. I get one hundred and ten dollars a month—pretty good wages—but rents are awful high.

"The street-car service ain't very good but I suppose the company is doing the best it can. You know they're in the hands of receivers. Can't make no money with the present fares and high wages. My old boss—the fellow that used to be head of the Federal Reserve bank—is the receiver. I did him a good turn to-night, too. There was a conductor down on one of them depot cars that rang the bell to start when there was a lady trying to get on, and I reported him. Them's the fellows that get the company into trouble. Damage suits and so on. There was a big crowd on the car and it was raining, and maybe he didn't see this lady, but that's what he is paid for. I want to see my old boss put the street-car company back on its feet. He's a big man and he can do it. They're paying him almost twice as much money as he got from the bank. He gets thirty-six thousand a year now as receiver and he only got twenty thousand from the bank."

The car stopped. A switch had jammed somewhere ahead, someone said. The old man waited but a few moments. Then he rose and began to frantically fight his way through the wet and steaming mass of humanity between his seat and the door.

"No telling how long this will last and I can't be late," he said as he vanished into the pouring rain.

VLADIMIR KOROLENKO

By W. [illegible]

With the death of Vladimir Korolenko the Russian people have lost one of the most valiant champions of their freedom. Most of the great Russian writers, from Pushkin to Gorki, identified themselves with the cause of the people's freedom and were its champions and eloquent spokesmen; yet Korolenko stands unique among them as one who disseminated the spirit of liberty not only as a creative artist of first magnitude, but also as a public spirited individual. One cannot, indeed, separate in Korolenko the man from the artist. Both are actuated by the same motive, urged onward by the same goal. One is the counterpart of the other.

Korolenko did more than give voice to the aspirations of the mute millions, he was a man of action, a man of daring. He not only preached liberty in abstract, not only created visions of a people freed from oppression,—he was always found in the thick of public life, decrying injustices committed, waking the conscience of the ruling caste to the evil of the hour, stirring public opinion and moulding it. One may well apply to Korolenko his characterization of Socrates (Shadows): "He was a wasp painfully stinging the conscience of his people lest it fall into a slumber and cease to seek the truth." He stung the conscience of his people now as a defender of the Vatyak tribe against the charge of ritual murder, now as an impartial investigator of the Kishinev pogrom, now as a denouncer of the ritual - murder conspiracy against Mendel Belliss. Wherever gross injustice was committed against the people, wherever there were persecutions and pogroms against the Jews, wherever the Tsaristic regime made itself particularly obnoxious, Vladimir Korolenko was found championing the cause of the oppressed and persecuted, doing so at the risk of his own safety, of his very life.

At quite an early age Korolenko was exiled to the wilds of Siberia for revolutionary activity. But even among the semi-barbarous Yakuts he made himself felt as an agent of good. He came to be regarded by the natives as a demi-god, and his name in Siberia has become surrounded by a halo of beautiful legend.

Far from losing heart, the young rebel steeled his soul against the rigors of his exile and became imbued with that spirit of optimism and faith in human nature which he later made animate in his stories. In the savage Yakuts, in the katorga criminals he found the "divine spark" present, if dormant. And since his days of exile he never ceases singing a hymn to life. His every story, his every piece of public writing breathes hope and faith in humankind.

It is the peculiar gift of Korolenko to discern the beautiful amidst the sordid, the good imbedded in the evil. He does not shun the sordid and the evil. As an artist, as a realist he takes cognizance of these elements and portrays them masterfully. But he is not content with the objective portrayal of the untoward things around him. Rather, he chooses his characters and his scenes with a view of demonstrating the idea that the sordid is not an inherent element of life but a result of environment, of external conditions. But environment and conditions change, and as a Socialist he believes that, given the collective will, the sordid can be made to disappear. The task of the revolutionary artist is to create and stimulate that will in the people, to crystalize it into concrete action and definite aspiration.

That in the people there is a yearning for freedom Korolenko does not doubt. He symbolizes this elemental urge of the people in the hero of one of his poetic tales (A Moment) who flees his goalers in a flimsy canoe tossed by the stormy seas. Every moment threatens his destruction, but a voice from within him shouts joyously: free! free! and it is this ecstasy of freedom that enables him to reach the shore and join his fellow rebels who rose against their oppressors.

As artist and as public man Korolenko never loses sight of the [illegible] that lights glimmering in the blackness of night. He made them (little fires) the symbol of hope and cheer for the struggling rebels of two generations. Dark is the [illegible], icy is the wind, the [illegible] can no longer cling to the oars, the man in the boat has [illegible] glimpse of the little fires [illegible] ahead. Perhaps he never will [illegible] them but the [illegible] are beacons of hope, the promise of a land where "never will the [illegible] man shed the blood of man and justice will reign triumphant."

Korolenko knows that the [illegible] of a bright future lies beyond [illegible] egoism but he does not believe it can be reached without resort to force. The path of non-resistance, he insists, will not lead to emancipation. Menachem Ben Yehuda, in the story of the same name, remonstrates with his brethren who insist that by obedience to the rulers he can serve his people better than by rebellion.

They say to him:

> Water is not dried with water but with fire; and fire is not extinguished by flame but by water; so is force not overcome by force.

To which Menachem Ben Yehuda angrily makes reply:

> But stone is crushed with stone, steel is broken with steel and force with force. The force of the rulers is fire and your obedience is firewood. The fire will not abate until it has devoured all.

And he cries out:

> Let us never forget the command that we must fight for the truth!

This is the only road that leads to the dawn beyond the little fires. There is no other. And when Ertel, a Russian disciple of Tolstoy, reproaches him for his preachment of violence Korolenko replies:

"When a man defends a weak maltreated slave against ten slave traders he is not committing violence. Every thrust of his weapon, every move of attack on his part I regard as an act of virtue and mercy. There may be bloodshed involved, but what of it? For the matter of that you may as well count the surgeon's knife among the weapons of evil."

Believing in force as a means of winning freedom for the oppressed, Korolenko could not but hail the revolution of March and even that of November. It was he who most vehemently protested against the persecutions of the Bolsheviki by the Kerenski government, and the Soviet government has always regarded him as its staunchest friend, despite the many criticisms he leveled against it. When soon after the November coup the adherents of the moderate regime were furiously denouncing Lenin and Trotsky as traitors to the revolution, it was Korolenko who raised his voice in their defense, asserting loudly that revolutions are not made "with silk gloves on," especially the bolshevik revolution with its bold ambition to reshape the world. And with what bitterness the aged champion of the people, already riveted to his sick-bed, lifted his voice against hetman Skoropadski and Petlura, against Denikine, Kolchak and the rest of the counter-revolutionary bandits! His passionate writings of that period, though not constituting "literature," will never be forgotten. All the heroism, all the intrepid courage of the venerable fighter was in these bold attacks upon the leaders of marauders, for he wrotes his articles against them at a time when one or the other of the "saviors" was in possession of Poltava, the city where Korolenko lived. It was only his international reputation and his renown as a writer that saved him from the bloody reckoning of the men he defied to their teeth.

The Soviet government knew how to value this great mind and noble spirit. It has done everything possible to make his old age comfortable even amidst the sufferings and privations of the revolution. Extensive preparations were under way, shortly before his death, to celebrate his sixty-eighth birthday throughout the country, so as to focus the attention of the people on his literary works and his public activity.

[illegible] along the Volga [illegible] is [illegible]. The [illegible] was most extensive and [illegible] there. There are other [illegible] nevertheless, that face dan[illegible]. The provinces of Novgorod, Ekaterinburg, Perm, Penza, Don, Northern Caucasus and a part of the Ukraine have suffered from the famine. And this is one-third of the population of the affected districts.

The Volga, however, is the area that needs most IMMEDIATE aid. There was a deficit of 85,000,000 poods (1,500,000 tons) of food. 20,000,000 poods (360,000 tons) of food per month will be required to keep the people from starving. Only 20 to 25 per cent. of the children can be taken care of with the present resources at hand, i. e., with the resources of all the relief organizations.

"You can say with certainty that hardly five per cent. of the inhabitants of our place will live till Spring. Ninety-five per cent. will perish if no food is procured for them in time. The people still have a little hope, they are waiting and believe that help will come from somewhere. Anybody coming from the city or neighboring village is immediately surrounded by people inquiring about aid. IT IS DIFFICULT TO TELL THEM THE TRUTH—AND THUS DESTROY THE LAST HOPES OF THE DYING."

"Even news that seed will be furnished for sowing does not enthuse the peasants." "Who will be here to do the sowing," they say, "when we are dead?"

In December, there took place in Moscow a conference of all Russian relief organizations, which decided on measures for the care of the starving population. It was decided that every ten Russians would have to support one starving peasant. The placing of responsibility for feeding the famine-stricken population will undoubtedly stimulate the relief work.

LET AMERICAN WORKERS DO LIKEWISE!

AMERICAN LABOR UNIONS AND OTHER WORKERS' ORGANIZATIONS MUST MAKE THEMSELVES RESPONSIBLE FOR THE FEEDING OF AT LEAST 1,000,000 STARVING RUSSIANS. WITH A LITTLE ENERGY AND WITH A CONCERTED DRIVE WE CAN DO IT!

TRACTORS AND MOTOR PLOUGHS WANTED!!!

On November 12, 1921, Dr. Nansen spoke before a special conference of the League of Nations, and said among other things: "There is a plan which I believe will not only save the present situation, but also help in developing the economic resources of Russia and increase the crops of the greatest granary of the world. It is a simple plan, but daring and dear. During the next few months, a large number of motor ploughs and tractors must be sent to the famine districts, and with them sufficient experienced people to teach the Russian population the use of tractors. Although the difficulties are great, they are not insurmountable. There is no lack of skilled mechanics in Russia who at present are out of work. If we have the tractors, we can send them out the mechanics to the districts where they are needed. Petroleum is, also to be had.

"The tractors and ploughs would have to be rented or bought. The price of the machines together with the transportation costs would be taken out of the crops of the next few seasons."

This is not only a splendid plan, but also is approved by the Soviet authorities. Kameneff, president of the Soviet Government, has made an appeal for ploughs and tractors.

America, the home of the motor, and of tractors and ploughs, must be the first to supply Soviet Russia. American workers can do a great deal in this sphere.

We have large tractor, motor and plough factories. CARRY ON A CAMPAIGN AMONG THE WORKERS IN THESE FACTORIES. GET THEM, AS A BODY, TO APPROACH THEIR EMPLOYERS AND PROCURE FROM THEM THE USE OF THE FACTORY MACHINERY, AND THE SUPPLY OF RAW MATERIAL AT COST PRICE. THIS IS TO BE OBTAINED UPON CONDITION THAT THEY, THE WORKERS, DONATE THEIR WORK FREE OF CHARGE.

It can be done—with a little persuasion. In Germany, they have been doing it for some time. The workers in a large motor truck factory near Berlin have been making trucks for Soviet Russia on the above conditions. THIS WAS THEIR CONTRIBUTION TO THE FAMINE RELIEF.

The work of relief is proceeding [illegible] unabated energy all over the [illegible]. English workers have collected more than 3700 pounds. Germany has collected two million [illegible] in cash, 1½ million marks in [illegible] and other material. Holland has reached the figure of 120,000 [illegible]. Women's and children's [illegible] have been collecting especially for the maintenance of children's homes in Soviet Russia. The [illegible] that left France [illegible]

[illegible] Since that time, the [illegible] workers have gone to work with augmented energy. Every [illegible] more than 100 cases of clothing are sent to the warehouse in [illegible]. The Clarté is especially active. Norway has collected 120,000 crowns, and large quantities of food, clothing, etc. Sweden, 40,000 crowns in cash, 70,000 in material. Italy 300,000 lire, with prospects of 1,000,000 lire in a short time. Czecho-Slovakia, 1,600,000 crowns; Bulgaria, more than 1,000,000 leva; Argentine, 1,000,000 marks. Relief committees are working in Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, China and Japan.

The Norwegian workers recently dispatched the S. S. Terje containing a large quantity of food. Berlin shoemakers are repairing 1,500 pair of shoes donated by workers of Berlin.

The League of Nations listened to Dr. Nansen, indifferent to the whole matter of relief. A short time after the conference, we learned, however, that the French Government had voted 6,000,000 francs for relief. Up to the present, none of this money has been advanced. An empty promise, as usual, of governments to workers!!

The Christmas drive of the F.S.R. is not yet over. In fact, the clothing feature of it will last for some time to come. Several cities were unable to begin on the specified day and are holding the drive now. Others have lengthened the drive, having attained such splendid results.

One hundred and thirty-eight cases of clothing left on January 24, on S. S. Gasconier. This represents a value of more than $40,000. The warehouse of the F.S.R. is still crowded with cases that have come from every part of the country. Owing to the sudden inrush of the material, it has been necessary to make other arrangements to handle the goods. Hence the warehouse has been removed. Address all packages to Friends of Soviet Russia, No. 80 Front St., Brooklyn, N. Y., c/o Export Service of America.

A section of the F.S.R. in New York City has held a bazaar and cleared more than $3,000. The New York City branch has arranged a "hunger banquet" for Paxton Hibben, at which representatives of organized labor will also speak. This is to be one of the most unique things held in New York City in some time.

Detroit has arranged a symphony concert with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Ossip Gabrilowitsch conducting. The name of the conductor and his orchestra promises a fine evening and splendid returns for relief.

Vancouver has just affiliated with the F.S.R. On January 20, the branch held a concert and dance, admission being soap, medicine, canned food, etc. Fine idea!

The National Office has begun to circularize the Labor Unions and other workers' organizations. Send in a list of the Labor Unions not affiliated with your branch. Give us the date and place of your meetings and we will write them from here. IMPORTANT!

The East had better look out for its laurels! The Western coast is alive with energy. San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles are coming to the front. Here is a letter from a little Seattle girl:

"I have heard that their is many children suffering of hunger. I am pore myself but I will try to help you children I asked the other childern but they said that they couldent give any im a little girl but Im with yu good by

Your freinds

Vina and Nell."

George Hardy, formerly of the I. W.W., is doing excellent work out in the West and Northwest. He has entered the stronghold of workers who have got a wrong "twist" of the whole thing, and invariably has been able to win them over to the cause of relief.

Word has just been received that the goods sent by the F.S.R. on the S. S. Elzasier on October 27, arrived in Riga on December 8, and were immediately dispatched to Moscow. Forty-eight carloads of flour, milk, lard, cocoa, cornmeal, beans, oatmeal, corned beef, fat backs, clothing went forward.

The big contributions of the week are: Toronto, $4,700; Chicago, $3,000; Lithuanian Section of the F.S.R., $2,700; New York City, $1,644; San Francisco, $780; Society for Technical Aid to Soviet Russia, $500; Trenton, $500; Cleveland, $500; Boston, $500; Cincinnati, $465; Schenectady, $350; Bayonne, N. J., $300; Kansas City, Kans., $334; Worcester, Mass., $300; Portland, Oregon, $250; Rock Springs, Wyo., $180; United Mine Workers of America, Nokonis, Ill., $170; Providence, R. I., $166; Newark, $182.

The ideal workingmen are they
Who will accept starvation pay,
Who'll work all hours, day and night,
And never seek their wrongs to right.

Is autocracy destroyed?
Ask the millions unemployed.

The [illegible] Press

The "Worker" appears at a most severe and trying period in the life of American labor. Everywhere the enemy is on the offensive. Wages are being slashed and the gains won by the workers thru many years of painful struggle are going by the board.

We are face to face with a serious crisis. And in this crisis the press plays the greatest role in our agitation against the enemies of the workers. We need but remind ourselves of the extent to which the working masses blindly follow the capitalist papers to see how powerful a weapon the press can be in the class struggle. The press is an integral part of the whole oppressive machinery of the ruling class. It serves to mislead the workers. It poisons their minds and makes them a prey to the campaigns of treachery and deceit waged by their exploiters in order to maintain capitalism.

The "Worker" is an organ devoted to the interests of the working class. As such it has no problems and no interests other than those of the working class. Week by week, then day by day, the "Worker" will deal with the political, social, and economic problems confronting the workers of America and the workers of the world. We will spare no effort to secure first-hand information regarding every phase of working class thought and action. The immediate struggles and needs of labor will be kept in the foreground. Their significance and possibilities will be treated from the point of view of the militant proletariat. Wherever the class struggle manifests itself, there we will endeavor to bring light.

But the working class press can not be satisfied with mere interpretation. A live proletarian paper must not only assist in the formulation of policies and tactics by a conscientious study of facts, must not only help the workers know what to do, but must also fearlessly speak the minds of the masses and voice their needs and aspirations. At no time should a workers paper show mercy to the enemy or give ground to the betrayers of the working class, regardless of the form, name, or flag in which they wrap themselves. A fighting paper must be frank in the statement of its views, fearless in its analysis, and merciless in its criticism.

In the momentous crisis now confronting Labor there is a great need for a paper which will promote clarity of purpose and unity of action for the working class of America. Everywhere there is dissatisfaction, everywhere there is unrest, but no[illegible] as yet a leadership [illegible] strong to direct the struggles of the American workers into revolutionary channels. America is now the citadel of world imperialism. On the one hand, we have a powerful and splendidly organized capitalist class, on the other we have a divided, floundering working class, politically impotent and industrially weak.

The weakness of American labor's press is in no small measure responsible for this sad state of affairs. Patent medicine advertisements, columns of personal advertising campaigns of union officials, press syndicate digests, and shallow comment on the political [illegible] of our lawgivers make up the contents of almost the entire labor press.

And the more radical papers are, in the main, not much better. Some of them bear the long earmarks of an unquenchable thirst for excursions into the realms of "pure" theory and absolute "truth". In their efforts to achieve the unachievable they sacrifice the interests of the working class and drive the masses away from them unto the arms of the capitalist misinformers. There is no more dry and no more boring sheet than the respectable, pure-truth-hunting radical publication.

Of course neither of the above kinds of labor paper can fill the present need—inspire the working masses and provide them with a plan to fight their oppressors. Fully aware of the task of an organ of militant working class action, our next step is to devise ways and means of realizing it. First of all, what shall a workers' paper deal with? Every event of social or economic interest, such as workers' meetings, accidents, mistreatement, and growing wealth of the boss must be given consideration in our columns. The plans of our enemies should be of as much interest and importance to us as our own. The class struggle is a political struggle. A political struggle is essentially a military struggle regardless of the form it may take on. And in every military struggle the plans of the enemy are important for both offensive and defensive purposes. Hence the plans of the Chambers of Commerce or the American Legion, the exposures of the various legislative bodies, or the unearthing of the sinister aims of secret capitalist terrorist organizations should be given adequate attention at all times.

No struggle of the workers is too small and no event in their activity is too insignificant for us. This policy if pursued energetically will go a long way towards making a paper the spokesman of the masses. But these struggles and pictures of the workers' life cannot be penned with a sufficient degree of reality, with a sufficiently human touch, unless the workers themselves are called in to contribute.

A most necessary condition to the development of a powerful paper is the organization of contributions from the workers themselves. No one can talk more effectively of the high cost of living or of unemployment than the hungry, unemployed proletariat. The workers from mine, mill, and factory must be strongly encouraged to write of their experiences. We need have no concern as to the correctness of language or respectability of tone which might characterize these contributions. Success in this direction is not of paramount importance to the working class. All necessary changes can be easily made. The very simplicity characterizing these descriptions of mistreatement, poverty, and hardships is the source of their greatest inspiration and effect.

Success in getting a great number of such contributions is of manifold value. These letters from the workers tend to increase the number of militants in the ranks of organized labor. They encourage the workers to independent action. They promote the interests of the workers in their union life and affairs. The fact that the stories are written by their shopmates gives them an added circulation. The worker feels much closer to a situation when he knows that the writer is closer to him than the professional editor or scribe. This makes the paper a veritable dynamo of the class struggle and enables it to mould and guide the opinions of the workers.

Powerful cartoons, poems written by workers, pictures of labor, events and fiction depicting the struggles of the masses not only enliven a paper, but also bring home more effectively than lengthy theoretical dissertations the bitter truths of the class war. These, coupled with writings by the workers themselves and a proper, attractive, and simple presentation of facts are the essence of a fighting workers' paper.

Only such papers can intensify the worker's hatred of capitalism and strengthen the revolutionary movement. This is the aim of the "Worker." And this aim can be realized only by an application of the methods outlined above. This task is no easy one. But its difficulty is comparable only to its greatness.

UNITY AND [illegible]

By [illegible]

There was one feature of the Workers Party convention that commanded more attention from the visitors galleries than anything else that took place.

This was the clock like precision with which all business was transacted. Even the program and constitution, the most important matters, were adopted without much discussion from the floor. Here and there a delegate arose to ask a question, in order to have a given point explained, and became satisfied with the explanation. The reporters of the newspapers were in distress, trying to get material for their copy. In all their experience they had never reported a convention in which there were not tense, amusing, ridiculous or other situations appearing that made good stories. Never before was a convention held that did not disclose the fact that there are almost as many opinions on all important matters as there are delegates, necessitating many hours, sometimes days, of discussion before agreement can be reached upon a given point; even then the discussion may end, very likely, not through agreement, but because one side, or both, had compromised in the interests of peace.

The attitude of the visitors toward the Workers Party convention was first one of wonder, then amusement when they saw how smoothly the machine worked; amusement became mingled with admiration, when on the final day it was very evident that the work would be finished without a single mishap.

The press could do but little more than comment upon the effectiveness of the steam roller and insinuate that there was little chance for democtacy. Of course the reader was left to believe that decisions were made in private somewhere by powerful committees who could force the delegates into obedience. The fact remains, however, that no body of delegates representing thousands of people, could be forced by any small group to accept a program to guide their activities, and a constitution, to govern their organization; large bodies move swiftly and quietly only when the units are all agreed fundamentally upon their destination and the means of getting there. There were several fraternal delegates in the convention representing the Proletarian Party who criticized the program adopted and claimed that it is not revolutionary enough, because it contained no definition of the capitalist state, no demand for the "dictatorship of the proletariat", nor the soviet form of government. This criticism provoked the only discussion of any length. It may, or it may not be advisable, at this time to include such statements and demands in a revolutionary program. It may, and it may not be true that such demands are necessary to clarify a working class program. In the opinion of all the delegates it was considered inadvisable to go too far ahead of the masses of workers in this country; and that the mere statement of revolutionary terms does not promote clarity. When they handled this question the delegates were a unit, and they showed their appreciation of the term unity. This is the point: they who unite succeed; they who cannot, lose. With unity the atmosphere clears in the struggle; without unity some forever grope in the dark; while others, a few, are blinded with lights that are too bright.

One thing is certain. [illegible] Workers Party [illegible] is definitely [illegible] throw of capitalism [illegible] are outlined [illegible] back of this there is a [illegible] body of workers. A [illegible] can move as a unit [illegible] structed machine [illegible] that will move the [illegible] improve as it gains [illegible]

The constitution [illegible] without friction, and the [illegible] shows no attempt to cater [illegible] called democracy. The [illegible] the Workers Party do [illegible] be troubled with referend[illegible] and interminable discussions [illegible] important questions. The [illegible] portant question for them [illegible] the class struggle in the [illegible] battles of the workers [illegible] employers and their state [illegible] Upon this question they ha[illegible] up their minds. After this [illegible] interested in creating a party [illegible] can promote the greatest [illegible] effective activity in this [illegible] An army is the most effective [illegible] of organized body that is [illegible] cause the authority of the [illegible] staff over the different parts [illegible] questioned; decisions are made [illegible] orders are given promptly, the [illegible] body moves quickly. If the [illegible] show incompetence in any way [illegible] quickly known and they are [illegible] moved—in an army they are [illegible] moved by orders from the top. [illegible] Workers Party between conventions [illegible] is governed by a general staff [illegible] form of a Central Executive [illegible] mittee.

The members are confident [illegible] the organization possesses members who are reliable and trustworthy [illegible] champions of the Party's princip[illegible] and ideals; who possess initia[illegible] courage, intelligence and exper[illegible] enough to be entrusted with [illegible] powers of a "general staff".

It is true that through poor judgment incompetent persons may [illegible] selected for these important [illegible] some may have been selected by the convention; but the members know also that incompetence is soon discovered and removals effected. [illegible] the Party the removals can be effected from below; and the membership have confidence in themselves.

Persons who love the abstract principles of democracy may have much to say against the Workers Party which frankly vests all authority between conventions in a responsible head like the Central Executive Committee. They argue that the members forfeit their rights, and that officials [illegible] such powers have too much opportunity to play politics and [illegible] their authority. This may all be true, but we must keep in mind [illegible] in every organization that [illegible] experience has shown (labor [illegible] and political parties alike, even the most democratic) officials abuse their power, outrage the rights of the members and play politics [illegible] jobs. The Workers' Party is [illegible] more deceived by the shams of democracy in labor organizations [illegible] in government.

The membership of a political party that deliberately places superior power in the hands of a responsible committee is a membership that fully understands the value of discipline.

Only such an organization [illegible] meet the needs of the working class in its struggle against the powerfully intrenched and disciplined forces of world imperialism.

The Farmers' Conference

By H. M. WARE, Nat'l Agrarian Organizer, Workers' Party of America.

The many conferences here and abroad mean just one thing, that the statesmen are realizing how thin the political ice is upon which they are skating. The "Agriculture Conference" called by President Harding is no exception. Farm bankruptcy in America is just around the corner. Therefore being unable to do anything the Administration calls a "Conference," packs it full of those who rob the farmers, sprinkle in a few dirt farmers and calls it an Agriculture Conference.

Farmers in Washington early Monday morning called up brother Wallace's Department to inquire where this Conference was to be perpetrated. I was directed to the best hotel in Washington and there I was lifted to the higher altitudes of the Ball room. Although mortgage, notes, and "deflation" had chased me from the farm some months ago and I had begun to feel safe in the city. I confess that the Ball room was all new to me. The gilt chairs—the decoration—made a glittering ornate setting strangely out of harmony with a farmers' meeting. Nevertheless I tried to get to one of the gilded chairs—but I didn't succeed. A sure enough invited delegate with a big blue badge herded me off to an alcove with a bunch of other rubes. There we stood, on the outside looking in. We would see the invited "farmers" lolling about. Ball rooms evidently held no terrors for them. I turned to a gray-headed six foot Westerner and asked "Why aren't you in there?" His reply was indicative of all our thoughts—"Hell—I'm a farmer." Another man with the unmistakable signs of weather and work added: "You're right. The farmers are out here and those who farm the farmers are in there." They were: Bankers, Grain Gamblers, Railroad Executives, Fertilizer Manufacturers, Implement Trust and conservative Farm "Leaders."

When it became apparent that there would be some seats left the real farmers—"dirt" and all were permitted to clump in. We found seats on the edges under the scrutiny of the delegates. And then we settled back to see and hear how this conference was going to solve the riddle of Farm Bankruptcy.

There was an atmosphere of expectancy. Cameras were set up and trained upon the platform. Then our Farm Statesmen appeared. Secretary Wallace—and Congressman Anderson, permanent chairman of the Conference, and the Chaplain of the House. From the other side came President Harding followed by four or five detectives. The audience got to its feet. As the President walked by he seemed to blush, with shame or modesty? The Chaplain stepped forward, extended his arms and prayed—that this conference might be guided by "infinite wisdom" to a solution of its problem—Farm Bankruptcy. Thus another Conference was born. President Harding reached into a coattail and pulled out his set speech. We all listened attentively. Many of us had expected a definite constructive program of action—we were disappointed. As the Washington Post said, "President Harding emphasized in a general way the necessity for some action of a remedial character." That's about all. He did emphasize that farmers weren't the only ones who had suffered—I accepted this as his apology for inviting the Trusts and Grain Gamblers. Then he made a break which livened up his otherwise dreary monotone. He said:, regarding the farmers' hard times: "It is a truly national interest"—"and not entitled to be regarded as primarily the concern of either a class or a section—OR A BLOC!!!" In all the copies sent to the press the words "Or a Bloc" are missing. It was the case of the whole situation—an extemporaneous remark not for the consumption of the farmers back home.

The most significant part of his recitation was his pounding out that "as a laborer the farmer is greatly underpaid in comparison to labor in other occupations." This utterance sounded the keynote for other speakers. They consistently reiterated that the road to the farmer's salvation lies in the reduction of freight rates via a reduction in wages—by cracking labor on the head.

Harding's speech was finished with an explosion of flash lights and a tucking away of the document. The body guard fell into single file and our President was no longer with us.

He had done his bit for the farmer and could now return to those problems of Big Business with which he is more familiar.

The President was followed by Anderson, the Chairman, who gave a report of his Joint Congressional Commission.

He admitted his helplessness and said that these periods of "depression" are inevitable and follow definite cycles. Evidently also—they get worse and worse.—Never before [illegible] mortgaged debt so large. Never were there so many sheriffs. Never before was there so great a difference between what the worker pays, and the farmer gets.

Mr. Anderson carried President Harding's generalities to more definite points. For instance: He called our attention to the fact that farm products had dropped farther and faster than the products of Big Business. Why? Because B. B. was "better organized to resist the decline." Do leaders of the conference, who tell us we must have "better organization," and who have written Big Business to this farm conference, desire then that the farmers' organizations come to some working or gentlemen's agreement with B. B. organizations? Obviously this is their "solution." And as the Conference proceeds, there is every indication of this being the plan.

VII to IX.

The "farmers who farm the farmer" are worried at the slump. Their softest graft—the farmers—are becoming restless and even radical. Working Farmers have forced their Congressional representatives into a "Farm Bloc" which is assuming alarming significance to the Administration politics. They hoped thru this Conference to steal the thunder of the "Farm Bloc"; to get the farmers to back a reduction in wages of the Railroad workers in order to get a reduction in freight rates—a simple way for this Republican Administration to do something for farmers in preparation for the next election.

But I have been sitting there in the Ball Room among these alleged "dirt" farmers. Their average age is close to sixty—their average appearance gives the lie to the very name of the Conference—their hands are soft and their eyes are hard. They fraternize with the Big Business representatives. You can't tell one from the other. Here and there you do see a man who smacks of the out doors—and sunshine; who has a friendly, self conscious attitude—but it is also noticeable that such men are not busy in the Committee rooms. They will have plenty of time to "see the sights" of Washington.

Thru out the whole opening session there were only two incidents that let in a little ray of light. The first was Mr. Hagan of New Jersey, Ex-State Commissioner of Agriculture. He was evidently out of place. He demanded that the Machinery Trust stop insisting upon cash from dealers. The [illegible] of the U. S. [illegible] of Corn, Wheat, Wool and Cotton on a cost of production basis. He ended with a plea to support the Farm Bloc in Congress. All this came like a bomb after the soft soap of his predecessors. He opened his address by stating his surprise at receiving an invitation—judging from the applause which came mostly from "outsiders". I do not believe Mr. Hagan will get any more such invitation. But we were glad he had received a blue badge and was "Among those present".

The second incident was even more dramatic. Unwritten but with an obviously political motive. Bryan sat with the outsiders—some mallicious spirit whispered in Chairman Andersons' ear and he spilt the beans by falling for the suggestion. He invited Mr. Bryan to take the platform.—Mr. Bryan certainly did.

The audience jumped to its feet. It was a spontaneous tribute to a political ghost, long since declared "dead."

But Bryan put his finger on many live truths. He said he had to admit that this Congress might do more for farmers than the previous ones "because this one is more scared." Then he praised the Farm Bloc. Mr. Anderson appeared more and more worried as Mr. Bryan waxed more and more eloquent. Bryan said he wasn't a specialist but was a generalist—a sort of Government machinist. And he evidently considered the machine out of whack. He told us that Big Business and Wall Street had had their Blocs in Congress for thirty years—why not the farmers? I hoped he would add, "and why not the industrial workers?" But it was evident that he too was trying to make political capital out of a situation. And when politicians fall out honest workers profit. So Bryan said many things now being labelled by the press as indiscreet. For instance, he [illegible]

ing before the farmers. He intima[illegible] that the railroad interest in [illegible] conference was not wholly unsel[illegible] Inasmuch as farm products make over 50 per cent of the gross R. [illegible] freight tonnage they realize that their best customer goes bankr[illegible] their profits will suffer. As he put [illegible] "They can't get rich carrying [illegible] ing both ways."

After this the chairman announ[illegible] that to facilitate matters comm[illegible] had been selected. Mimeograph[illegible] copies were then circulated. [illegible] Delegates Only. A glance at the "farmer" committees is illumina[illegible] Take the Committee on Agric[illegible] and Price Relations. It is made [illegible] of two big farmers, one [illegible] manufacturer, four conserva[illegible] farm "leaders," one editor, one [illegible] mission man, and dear old Sa[illegible] Gompers.

Another: The Committee on [illegible] Transportation: Five big farm[illegible] two editors, one farm imple[illegible] manufacturer; one fertilizer [illegible] facturer; two railroad execu[illegible] three lawyers, four city men, [illegible] commission merchants, one [illegible] manufacturer, two farm "lea[illegible]

Verily, the lion and the lamb [illegible] expected to lie down together. [illegible] President said: "I can make no [illegible] appropriate observation than [illegible] your work will be of value [illegible] as you address yourselves to [illegible] realities, the matters of fact." [illegible] Brother farmers, get one of [illegible] mimeographed copies of the com[illegible] mittees from your nearest [illegible] president of grain gambler [illegible] —and face the realities and [illegible] ters of fact. We as working [illegible] are expected to hope for [illegible] from committees made up [illegible] majorities of all the paras[illegible] ests which have bled the [illegible] America dry for generations [illegible] are expected to assist them in beating down the [illegible] living [illegible]

[illegible] mining industry is in a [illegible] uncertainty which has not [illegible] since the days prior [illegible] miner's strike in Roosevelt's [illegible]ation. In the Central Com[illegible] region which comprises [illegible] Pennsylvania, Indiana, Il[illegible] and Ohio and which has oper[illegible] under a union agreement for [illegible] years, part of the operators refused to attend the con[illegible] between operators and [illegible]. First the Southern Ohio [illegible] withdrew, then the East[illegible] Ohio and Pittsburgh operators. [illegible] co-operative action between [illegible] and Eastern Ohio opera[illegible] came as a surprise to union [illegible], because of the competition [illegible] the two districts. There [illegible] no reason for surprise. The [illegible] factions of the ruling [illegible] can usually manage to smooth [illegible] their differences when they face [illegible] common enemy—labor.

Reports from the Eastern Penn[illegible] Mining districts show that [illegible] than 30,000 of the 145,000 hard [illegible] workers in that region are idle [illegible] working only part time. This [illegible]employment in the industry is [illegible] regular. Miners can never [illegible] on work for more than two [illegible] or three fourths of the time. This is a fact which operators do [illegible] stress in their statements to the [illegible].

A convention of anthracite coal [illegible] of Pennsylvania, represent[illegible] 150,000 workers will be held in [illegible]mokin, January 17. The war[illegible] contract expires March 31, 1922. The union will demand at [illegible] a 20 per cent. increase in wages, while the operators will undoubt[illegible] attempt to force a reduction. Unemployment, distress, starva[illegible] are forcing the miners into [illegible]tion.

DRUMHELLER COAL OPERATOR BREAKS CONTRACT

Capitalists everywhere are generally unscrupulous in dealing with the workers. Their policy is to get away with as much as they can. The Western Canada Coal Operators Association has a contract with District 18, United Mine Workers of America, which is supposed to hold until March 31, 1922. In December, however, the Collie Coal Company reduced wages 25 per cent. on the basis of an agreement which they persuaded two of the men to sign. The other men were aroused, got into touch with district officers, who called a strike. In spite of the fact that there has been no disturbance, special constables have been sworn in.

A NEW DODGE

The case of the Sunbeam Collieries in the Province of Alberta, Canada, has brought to light the fact that it is practically impossible for workers to collect unpaid wages in that province. The company owed large sums in wages, but made the claim that there was no money on hand to pay the men. In the meantime, the mine has been turned over to another company, and while the directors state that they intend to pay the claims, the chances do not seem good.

The statute which does this injustice to the workers makes the directors of the company liable for wages under certain conditions, one of which is the return of a writ of execution unsatisfied in whole or in part. To comply with the condition, it is necessary to sue the company and recover a judgment. Then it is necessary to sue the directors. These two actions take up a great deal of time, which can be indefinitely extended by legal stalling.

A further, almost insurmountable difficulty is put in the workers' way by a recent decision on a test case. It was held that the claims of wage earners against a common debtor can not be joined in one action. Each claimant, then must bring separate claims—an almost impossible proceeding, considering the time and money required.

These statutes may be recommended to our supposedly more enterprising United States capitalists.

RANK AND FILE REFUSES TO BE SOLD

The New York Tow Boat Exchange, representing owners and operators of harbor tow boats, thought they had the job all nicely done when the New York Arbitration Board cut wages on all classes of work on tow boats $20 to $50 a month. The Arbitration Board is composed of twelve members, six representing the owners and operators, three the marine engineers, and three the masters, mates, and pilots. The engineers signed on the dotted line of the new agreement reducing wages, but a mass meeting of the workers in the United Masters, Mates and Pilots sustained their representatives in refusing the cut. A strike has been called, and all tugs on which the new wage scale was to be put into effect, are tied up. The Harbor Boatmen's Union is breaking up the United Masters, Mates and Pilots. 3,500 workers are concerned; 1,500 members of the Masters, Mates and Pilots organization, and 2,000 of the Harbor Boatmen's Union.

WAGES SLASHED ON DEEP SEA SHIPS

The American Ship Owners Association has cut wages of marine employes 15 per cent. to 33⅓ per cent. This cut follows a 15 per cent. cut last Summer, which was followed by a strike in which the workers were beaten. It is feared that this defeat with the surplus labor available will keep the workers from making a fight. However, a reduction from $72.50 to $47.50 for able seamen and from $52.50 to $35 for ordinary seamen may teach the men that there is only one way to meet the situation.

At the same time the greatest capitalist of all, the United States Government announces through the Shipping Board a 15 per cent. reduction on government ships.

BOARD OF ARBITRATION FULFILLS ITS FUNCTION

A Board of Arbitration has handed down a decision which cuts wages of 10,000 unskilled workers in the independent paper companies of the United States and Canada to 32 cents an hour or $2.56 a day. A large reduction was made last August, bringing down wages on all classes of labor 10 to 26 per cent.

The union made no fight at this time, and is not planning to make one on the present cut. Consenting to arbitration has brought the usual results, since the impartial member of the Committee, Judge Irvine, voted with the employers.

THE OPEN SHOP DRIVE IS FAILING

It is backed by all the money and power in the world. But on the whole it has failed to break the workers, because they are learning to do what the workers in the building trades in Chicago are doing to stick together and fight.

[illegible] in [illegible] Association to reduce [illegible] per cent. This action [illegible] despite the fact that [illegible] the usual 1,700 workers [illegible]ployed in the twenty [illegible] involved.

OPEN WARFARE AT [illegible]PORT ROLLING MILLS

Armed strikers from the [illegible] Rolling Mills and the Kentucky [illegible]litia present to protect the owners engaged in a pitched battle [illegible] across the Licking River. Pushed hard enough by the iron tactics of the capitalist class, the workers will learn to resist.

CONVENTION OF LUMBERWORKERS INDUSTRIAL UNION OF CANADA

The Coast Branch of the Lumberworkers' Industrial Union of Canada, has held a mass convention. The workers are making a determined effort to regain ground lost through failure to stick together and to throw out labor spies and stool pigeons. The organization was formed in January 1919 in response to the effort of the boss loggers to reduce wages. Not only did the workers prevent the reduction but they forced better conditions in the logging camps. Lately, however, the organization has become demoralized. The workers again seem to realize the necessity of pulling together in an effective fighting organization.

BUILDING UNIONS FIGHT OPEN SHOP

The Citizens Committee in Chicago, an alliance of contractors, real estate men, and financiers interested in building projects, formed to enforce the Landis award for reduced wages, has been fooled. They thought they could stick together better than the workers. But when the Union carpenters struck, on four big jobs, involving a construction cost of $4,500,000, the cement finishers, painters, plumbers, steamfitters and hoisting engineers walked out in a sympathetic strike.

THE NEW LABOR MOVEMENT

For many years the American Labor Movement has staggered under the weight of Sam Gompers and the rest of the old time [illegible] unionists. But now SOMETHING IS HAPPENING. Rumblings [illegible] heard all through the Labor Movement—rank and file organization moves toward industrial unionism, new revolutionary voices.

The machinists union, the second union in size in the United States, is headed by William Johnson, an old timer. But others are coming on. Among the candidates from the San Francisco district for the presidency of the union is William R. Knudson. He stands on a straight platform of the class-struggle, affiliation with the Red Trade Union International, the destruction of the capitalist system, the establishment of a workers' republic. At the end of his platform comes the following call for action:

Fellow workers: — Unite your forces! On the political field demand the unconditional surrender of the capitalist class. On the industrial field erect a gigantic industrial organization capable of running the industries when the capitalist system shall have collapsed. Let us scrap the old defensive methods. Let us assume a militant offensive, thereby insuring the ultimate triumph of labor's hopes.

Four Months' Peak of Unemployment Reached

200,000 persons are jobless in the city of New York. 75,000 of these are ex-service men according to the officials of the veteran's organizations. These are the figures made public by the Industrial Aid Bureau which yesterday morning had 800 applicants for jobs; the majority of the applicants were professional people and highly skilled mechanics. No immediate relief for the critical condition is in sight in the opinion of Bird S. Coler, Commissioner of Public Welfare, who told the bureau that there are more people out of work in the city than at any time in the last four month period. The large number of technical men and mechanics for whom there is usually a demand even in times of depression is taken to indicate that the last level of industrial stagnation has not yet been reached. In the financial district the opinion prevails in the highest financial circles that unless the European situation is speedily adjusted and trade resumed disaster may overtake the whole structure of production and exchange.

"Are Bolshevickies really bad?"
Asked little Charlie Capers.
His father chuckled, "Yes, my son,
According to the papers."

TO ALL BRANCHES OF THE FORMER AMERICAN LABOR ALLIANCE AND THE WORKERS' COUNCIL GROUPS

Dear Comrades:—

The Provisional Committee of District 2, Workers' Party of America, calls upon all the branches of the Workers' Party of Local Greater New York (old and newly formed) to elect delegates to the City Central Committee at their regular branch meetings, or, if necessary, have special meetings for that purpose.

Each branch shall send one delegate for the branch at large, and one delegate for each fifty members or major fraction thereof, (i. e., branches consisting of twenty-five members or less send one delegate, twenty-six (26) or more, two, seventy-six or more, three, one hundred twenty-six (126) or more, four, etc.

Delegates will not be seated without proper credentials.

A full report of the First National Convention of the Workers' Party will be given by prominent delegates. Matters of vital importance pertaining to the organization of the Workers' Party, and its future activities will be taken up. All members are urged to attend this meeting. Sympathizers are welcome.

Order of Business:

Report of Delegates to the Workers' Party Convention.
Report of Provisional District Committee.
Election of Officers.

The Confession of the Conference

The liberal press of the country, convalescing from the most severe case of the blind staggers it has experienced since inoculated with the germ by Dr. Woodrow Wilson, has finally discovered that the disarmament conference was not a disarmament conference at all; it has discovered that it was not even a conference on the limitation of armaments but for the most part it is in the dark as to its real object or objects.

Accepting the great man theory, basing its conclusions on superficialities, the liberal press takes the statements of the politicians and militarists, compares them, notes the discrepancies, gives a sigh of disillusionment, criticises individuals and then hopes that from "a step in the right direction" will come some good for the world. The Marxian, analysing current events using the method known as the materialistic conception of history, expects nothing from the conferences of the rulers but added misery for the working masses; rarely is he disappointed. The results of the Washington Conference are no exception.

Only a most critical condition in the affairs of world capitalism could have brought together the representatives of powers ready to fly at one anothers throat, could have brought together around a conference table nations whose economic interests are so divergent that war would already be raging were it not for two things:

> The financial chaos in which all except the United States find themselves and the certainty that war now would result in the power falling into the hands of the despised workers of every capitalist nation or in the destruction of what is called industrial civilisation.

It should be remembered that the press agents of capitalism never, except under the stress of dire necessity, call things by their right names. To do so would alienate the sympathy of the fools who support the system; in a world sick of war what would arouse greater popular enthusiasm than a disarmament conference? So a disarmament conference it was and with joyful hysteria the unthinking of all nations applauded. Popular opinion was wrong as usual.

The conference was called for two reasons neither of which had anything to do with disarmament; reasons so far removed from any connection with disarmament that the whole incident becomes nothing, nothing more than a tribute to the power of the press of the world to make things seem to be what they are not.

Much has been said of the crying need for the reduction of taxation preceded by a decrease in expenditures for military purposes, but it is doubtful if this reason weighs very heavily with the lords of war and finance. It is with the lower section of the capitalist class and the middle class groups that this reason has weight. In world politics these groups can exercise but little influence. There has been no real disarmament despite the frenzied pleas of the taxpayer. What, then, brought the warring factions of the world's imperialists into conference?

THE WEAKNESS OF WORLD CAPITALISM AND THE RISING TIDE OF WORLD REVOLUTION. NOTHING ELSE.

The immediate problems confronting the rulers were the necessity of setting up a new front against the revolutionary movements of Europe as a defensive measure and the equally urgent necessity of arranging for the rapid industrial development of China as the last field in which imperialism can find the two things it loves—cheap and plentiful labor and fabulously rich natural resources. Could China be industrialised rapidly enough capitalism could be stabilised temporarily.

The capitalist class, although it operates internationally, has not yet succeeded in destroying the national jealousies and hatreds growing out of national divisions. The truth of this statement is proved by the fact that the Washington conference was unable to quell antagonisms and unite on one program for the preservation of the system. It is because of this failure that the defenders of capitalism, who have been breathing defiance to the revolutionary masses of the world ever since the Russian revolution of 1917, are now compelled to meet and treat with the representatives of the Revolutionary Russian government.

In the four years that have elapsed since the Russian revolutionists seized power and gave new inspiration to the tired and discouraged fighters in the ranks of the workingclass, the opposing sides in the class struggle have suffered much. History, however, is on the side of the workers; theirs is the rising class; their unity grows greater as time passes. The capitalist class and its hangers-on fight for a dying system, a system that can no longer fill human needs, that cannot even compose its differences when faced with destruction.

Stripped of the humbug and sentimentality with which both the capitalist and liberal press have surrounded the Washington conference these cold facts stand out clearly.

Since the above was written French imperialism has furnished added evidence of the impossibility of a peaceful settlement of the rivalries between national groups. It is extremely probable that the shrewdest politician of them all—Lloyd George—is quietly cursing the conference, which instead of strengthening capitalism, has succeeded in laying bare its weakness to the ribald gaze of the revolutionary workers.

Secretary of Labor Davis has again won the hearts of the humanitarians. After listening to the appeal of the wives and children of some of the striking miners of West Virginia he asked the governor of that feudal barony to postpone the evictions until the weather was a little milder. His (Moose) heart was touched.

We lay little claim to the gift of prophecy but we venture to predict that Governor Allen of Kansas is about due to meet Ole Hanson in whatever secluded spot Ole is infesting.

Penetration Tactics

[illegible] revolutionary [illegible]. We discuss vast topics but they remain—topics. Some imp of the perverse sits at the radical ear and whispers against improvements in practice. We make an industry of the things we are about and though giving glad welcome to new thought we form into petty competing groups, hawking small slanders and resisting change.

Where is the observant among us who can say that we are supplying much more than a hippodrome and catering to an habitual crowd for a collection revenue and selling literature which barring its sensational features is never read? Are we not after all a circus with a trained patronage who come to us regularly because for the particular evening we have a greater "attraction" than others on the local boards? Note the handclapping. See how it rises as our performer dances perilously [illegible] have a [illegible] put out a [illegible] we had when we put out the [illegible]. Now we have a celebrity. He has [illegible]. Our "mass" will get a kick out of [illegible] the Auditorium or the Skating Rink for [illegible] a large quantity of throw-aways and we put up [illegible]. We pay for a little space in the newspapers and get our [illegible] interviewed in advance of the date. We fill the auditorium. But it is the same one percent of the population. If we have an overflow it is the same bunch that came late and overflowed before when we had an overflow. We develop a narrowed [illegible] perspective pointing always inward, and we cease to be able to form accurate judgments of what is going on in the worker world or any other world around us.... And we give Moscow a false census of the state of our advance!

This is not knocking. It is taking stock. We do well. We must continue to do what we have learned so well how to do. But let us supplement it by spreading our fan-like into the mass that has never been near us, the mass that will break us down in crisis, or that may be neutralized, or that, enlightened, may join us for the supreme moment.

W. Z. Foster is preparing this in a splendid way for the trades-unions. He probably does not hope for a majority of union members, perhaps not more than a control group in the few members who attend the union meetings. We need not interfere there. Many of us will be in that work the most important so far attempted. But where are the workers who do not attend the union meetings, and the unorganized workers and those who for one reason and another are excluded from union membership. And the non-strike workers and the arts and professions. And the capitalists themselves into whose ranks certain avenues of intelligence will be required as time goes on.

Say we have fifty militants in our center or in any given center. Make forthwith fifty group classifications in the non-revolutionary mass. Some will require subdivisions. Now assign your militants each to his specialized task of penetration, acquaintance, invitation and propaganda and hold to survey. There is a subtle flattery in vested responsibility and each coming with his report should vitalize things in an inovative way.

Bruce Rogers.

Sharing Alike

In this great and glorious country of ours on which the sun sets but seldom, because it might be seized and made the basis for a stock issue by our enterprising business men, it is a favorite dogma that rich and poor, laborer and employer, share alike in prosperity and adversity, that particularly in adversity must all, without complaint suffer reduction in income and standard of living. In the Pullman cars and the best hotels, where the exponents of 100 per cent Americanism are to be found in large numbers, this theory is accepted as the gospel and many a piteous tale is told dealing with the exactions of the plumber, electrician and carpenter when business is bad for the traveling salesman, the lawyer, the corporation executive, the advertising man and other hangers-on of the system.

It will be remembered that the Federal Reserve Banks, in order to speed up the coming of normalcy, shut off credit throughout the country, bringing down wages and prices of farm products to the producer. The farmer and wage-earner were severely "deflated," but the banks, like the fond parent, stated that it hurt them just as much as it did the deflatees. That their sufferings were mental, if any, is shown by a few figures compiled by John Skelton Williams, late Comptroller of Currency, giving some of the salary increases received by officials of the Federal Reserve Banks while the process of deflation was going on. The figures follow:

> Benj. Strong $30,000 to $50,000; Pierre Jay $16,000 to $30,000; J. H. Case $20,000 to $30,000; E. R. Kensel $4,000 to $25,000; L. F. Sailer $7,000 to $25,000; G. L. Harrison $4,000 to $22,000; L. H. Hendricks $6,000 to $18,000; A. W. Gilbart $1,800 to $12,000; six others from $1,500 to $7,500, $9,000 or $10,000.

Therefore, brothers, let us be of good cheer. It is heartening to know that somewhere in this broad land there are families of overworked bankers that need not know the pinch of poverty; that their fathers and husbands are receiving from just and wise employers enough for them to struggle along until the charitable wage-earners can get back on the job and produce a surplus that will justify further increases to these uncomplaining victims of capitalism.

Beginning to Rally

Jim Connolly said many years ago that a timid working-class invites oppression. The reluctance of organized labor in the United States to join in one powerful effort and resist as a unit the wage-reductions that have made such inroads on the income of the workers who still have jobs, has given the employing class much confidence and encouraged it to demand that the workers continue to submit to wage-cuts although the cost of living is, according to the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Labor, something like 78 percent higher than it was in 1914.

In the face of the general apathy some unions have chosen to fight rather than tamely accept the mandate of the bosses. The Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the International Ladies' Garment Workers, the Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen and the Carpenters' Union of Chicago have all put up a good battle. They have resisted the employers' demands and have by the force of their example given new hope and courage to the labor movement.

The Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen have had the hardest fight of all the unions mentioned above. They are opposed by one of the most powerful capitalist groups in America, but had the labor movement as a whole rallied to their support they would have won a clean cut victory.

The Carpenters' Union of Chicago was the single building trades organization in that city to stand out against the Landis award. For several months they worked to unite the affiliated unions of the council for an offensive against the contractors and builders' associations and only recently have they succeeded. The spirit of determination shown by this organization is welcome indeed in times like these.

Unless we are very much mistaken the example of the fighting organizations combined with the discovery by the workers that reductions will continue as long as they submit to them, is beginning to leaven the labor movement and before long there will be plainly visible a determination to fight the [illegible] at every turn of the road. This spirit will inevitably lead to a closer unity of the forces of labor if the militants will keep up the good work they have started.

According to the daily press the example of the late Roosevelt has reformed a pugilist. If it now can be made to work over a few wrestlers, a contention we have long held will have been maintained—that Roosevelt is greater dead than alive.

Since the first of the year only seventy bank presidents have announced that the remedy for the present depression is increased production. The latest figures available show that none of them has as yet gone to work.

[illegible] among the Jews [illegible] of British imperialism [illegible] of Ireland for the last 750 years [illegible] a return to [illegible] will be able to discover just about what they [illegible].

The [illegible] and the Jews—national groups having little in common [illegible] by force of circumstances at last have acquired a common oppressor in the shape of British imperialism. The [illegible] and Jews will be living evidence of the fact that capitalism is no respecter of nations or creeds.

Officers and Members

When a wage-earner joins a union voluntarily he admits that he realizes the impossibility of combating the industrial system of capitalism as an individual and subscribes to the doctrine that in organization there is strength.

Unfortunately most union members let the matter drop there apparently assuming that labor organizations are something that maintain themselves and function without it being necessary for the bulk of the membership to pay any attention to the affairs of the organization. It is because of this attitude that the active conduct of the affairs of the trade unions has fallen into the hands of an element designated by the radicals as "reactionary" or "conservative." It will be found on investigation, however, that in practically every instance, those who now hold office and frame the policies of labor were, before their election, among the most active; sooner or later control passes into the hands of the active elements whether those elements are conservative or radical.

It is the lack of interest in their own affairs on the part of the mass that makes many an official reluctant to initiate any policy that calls for action against the employing class. He distrusts the membership, has a poor opinion of their fighting spirit and stamina, and feels that it is not incumbent upon him to start a fight which his membership shows no sign of desiring other than grumbling at conditions imposed by the employers. It is the task of the class-conscious union member to rouse his fellow-workers to the necessity of struggle as well as to fight reaction in official circles. He will find when he undertakes the task that there is just as much reaction in the rank and file, so-called, as there is in officialdom. Once the militant minority in the unions wins support for its policies from the general membership, it will be found that many of the officials are not nearly as reactionary as they now appear to be.

This paper holds no brief for officialdom but we do hold the opinion that many of its faults and weaknesses merely paralell the same faults and weaknesses in the rank and file.

Bitter Bread—or Sweet

WE KNOW that the Workers' Government of Soviet Russia is poison to those who ruthlessly oppose the aspiration of workers to labor for themselves alone.

These enemies of the workers played Kolchak, Yudenitch, Denikin, Wrangel and the blockade to win—AND LOST!

As if in league with the world's Imperialists, came the famine. And the world's Imperialists are playing the famine TO WIN!

Governments which will not recognize the Workers' Republic and classes of men who hate it are sending bread to the Russian people.

THIS IS BITTER BREAD! Yet the hungry must eat! THe starving children, women and men of Soviet Russia will have to swallow their pride and accept this charity.

HELP FROM YOU, given in good faith, given in sympathy with the hopes of Russia's people, would not be charity. Soviet Russia looks westward towards you who understand. And even though you do not wholly understand all that has been attempted in Russia, you do know that her people are laboring and starving and dying to solve the common problem.

American Labor, American Sympathizers—this appeal is addressed to you! Demonstrate your friendship. Prove your sympathy. Give the Russian workers to understand that YOU are not with those who would play the famine to win for Imperialism.

You can do this by giving your money, your clothes, direct to the Soviet Government of Russia. Your money, so given in all earnest, would buy SWEET BREAD! Your clothes would warm the hearts and encourage those who even now, freezing and starving, half dead, MARCH ON toward the brotherhood.

Soviet Russia has heard from the Imperialists; has heard both by sword and bitter bread.

Soviet Russia is waiting to hear from its friends. She is hoping for famine relief from workers' hands and from those who respect workers' hands.

Other bread may feed the body. The bread of friends will feed both body and soul.

You have given before. NOW GIVE AGAIN—this time a gift in sympathy with the aspirations of the Russian workers, peasants and soldiers, through an organization which collects famine relief to SAVE SOVIET RUSSIA from the Imperialists and for itself.

ON THE RUN

James A. Stillman, who is running a close race with the Sultan of Turkey for the Brigham Young medal, resigned from his position on the executive board of the Consolidated Gas Company; probably to escape asphyxiation. It is reported that he intends to wind up his business affairs and is planning to make his home in Paris. It is expected that in that environment he will be able to compete with the Sultan on more favorable terms away from the handicaps that greedy American lawyers impose on amorous adventures.

400,000 TOILERS HOMELESS; DISEASE SPREADS; HYLAN FLEES

Mayor Urges "Smile Week" to Help Toilers Forget Homes Are Built Only for the Rich; Deaths from "Flu" and Pneumonia Growing

New York City is short 80,000 Apartments-HOMES.

This means that 400,000 men, women and children are without adequate shelter—NO HOME SURROUNDINGS.

That situation is duplicated in the nation.

The Joint Legislative Committee on Housing of the New York Legislature, Senator Charles C. Lockwood, Chairman, says:

"The present costs have driven building activities into the construction of business and residential properties and of the more expensive apartment houses to the exclusion of reasonably priced tenements."

That means that there are plenty of homes for the rich. The profiteers and the parasites have the money to pay.

Those 400,000 homeless are the men, women and children of the working class. The jobless breadwinners cannot pay enough [illegible] to feed the golden appetites of the landlords.

So there has been practically no construction of homes for the workers. IT DOESN'T PAY.

This legislative committee admits that the stringency in apartments of the type used by the poor is greater today than it was when the emergency rent laws now in force were enacted. Says the report:

"Your committee finds overwhelming evidence that the emergency in housing conditions that existed, particularly in the City of New York, at the time the emergency rent laws were passed, still exists, and that, with respect to the cheaper class of tenements that formerly rented at from $4 to $11 per room, the emergency has grown and is to-day more acute than it was at the time the laws were passed."

Yet the only solution the committee has for the present criminal conditions is the passage of more laws. Proposed legislation will be submitted to the state legislature Feb. 15, is pointed out.

Hylan Goes to Palm Beach

While 400,000 homeless are imprisoned in the city, starving and freezing, ready victims for every disease that is ravaging the city and nation, Mayor Hylan has escaped to the sunny climes of Palm Beach, Fla., "to enjoy himself and pay no attention to busines affairs."

Samuel Untermeyer, after investigating much and promising more, is also scheduled to depart for the same place to rest from his labors.

When "Bill the Fat," Taft, was asked for his solution of the unemployed evil, his prompt response was, "God only knows."

Hylan also has a solution for the evils confronting the masses of the workers of the city.

"Smile," Says Hylan

Next week is to be "Smile Week." The 1,000,000 children in the city's schools are to be asked to smile whether they are cold, hungry or in need of a doctor.

"Every one likes to see a happy face," says the Mayor.

Probably that is why he is leaving New York City for Florida, the winter playground of America's parasites.

In New York City, aided by the lack of proper housing, disease goes stalking abroad.

Tuesday, there were 812 new "flu" cases, 186 new cases of pneumonia. The deaths from pneumonia on this day mounted from 35 to 91. Deaths from the "flu" went up from 8 to 12.

Says You Should Be Warm

"One thing I must insist upon is that apartments and tenements be kept warm," is the hypocritical advice given by the Health Department to the city's unfortunate.

There will soon be no tenements or apartments for the workers to rent, if present conditions continue.

While there is no new building going on (because there is no money in it) the State legislative committee reports that the older tenements of the kind used by the poorer classes have become obsolete and uninhabitable, while many others have been and are being torn down to make room for business buildings that are encroaching upon these neighborhoods.

This disaster threatens the masses of the workers in the city. Unemployment has brought 6,000,000 to the verge of starvation in the nation's big industrial centers. New York has its share of these.

Lives Menaced

The New York Legislative Committee says:

"The congestion among the masses of people in the great cities, and particularly in the City of New York, is increasing to such an extent that it has become a menace to the lives, health, morals and safety of the entire community. In many districts there are from three to four times as many human beings housed in the same number of cubic feet of living space as before the war.

"Your committee is satisfied that as a result of the shortage in this class of living accommodations, the lives and health of the population of the City of New York ARE IN GRAVE DANGER FROM THE RESULTS OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES, APART FROM THE PERILS THAT LURK IN THE UNHEALTHFUL SURROUNDINGS WHICH THE POORER CLASSES OF OUR POPULATION ARE COMPELLED TO LIVE."

The Gift of Capitalism

Hunger, aided by poor housing, makes of the suffering masses a ready victim to disease of every kind.

Thus does capitalism, in its mad hunt for profits, bring the masses thru misery to the verge of desolation and death.

Landlords, bankers and employers are parasites. Those who depend upon their bounty and perform no useful labor are also parasites. They will have no place in a sane social system.

If for every drop of blood drawn by the lash another [illegible] by the sword, the judgments of the Lord are pure and righteous altogether.—Abraham Lincoln.

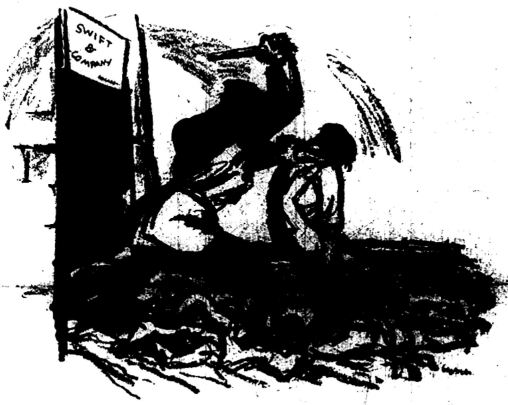
MEAT



In the above cartoon Bill Gropper has caught and depicted the brutal spirit of suppression animating the "Big Five" packers in their drive against unionism. Here he has shown better than mere words can the fact that in all their struggles for a few more crumbs from capitalism's table the workers are everywhere met by that effective instrument of the employing class—the state with its policemen's club.

Demonstrate!

Against Unemployment, February 26th!

The Workers' Party of America has set aside February 26th as a day of demonstration against the curse of capitalist class rule and unemployment. Meetings and demonstrations where possible, under the iron rule of capitalist dictatorship, will be held.

The date will be in fact, an international day of working class protest for the Workers' Party of Canada has also set aside this date for the same purpose.

The National Office of the Workers' Party in New York City has sent out instructions to all its locals to make special preparations in the way of well advertised meetings and demonstrations for this occasion. Unemployed councils where organized and the union labor movement generally, are to be urged to participate.

Slogans declaring for "Work or maintenance at union wages," and for "Unrestricted trade with Russia and recognition" of that government, will be used. Declarations urging the advancement of economic credit to Russia by this government will be made.

The present unprecedented unemployment which seems to not yet have reached its peak, has brought about a condition involving the most intense suffering on the part of millions of American workers. The workers are urged to rise in protest against this damnable condition of slavery and to take steps to end it and place in its stead the rule of the working class in industry and government.

Six-Gun and Rifle Is the Only Law in Logan County, Murderer of Hatfield Admits He Is Spy In Pay of Big Coal Companies

Summary of Important Testimony

This is one of a series of articles prepared by the American Civil Liberties Union, 138 West Thirteenth Street, New York City, and released through The Federated Press, summarizing the important testimony taken by the United States Senate sub-committee in its recent investigation of the causes of the coal mine troubles in West Virginia.

The articles present the West Virginia situation from the viewpoint of those who regard as supremely important the maintenance of civil rights which the United States Constitution guarantees but does not afford.

The mine workers in the unorganized fields of West Virginia, particularly in Mingo and Logan counties, are trapped between the courts, the state militia, the mine-guard system, and the notorious Baldwin-Felts strike-breaking detective organization. [illegible] committee.

Take first the mine-guard system. The testimony shows it to be in use throughout Logan county. The fact is practically undisputed. Yet the first issue of "Coal Facts," the propaganda organ of the mine operators issued in Charleston, W. Va., contains a leading article headed "The Truth About the Mine Guards," which attempts to belie the facts.

"Logan County," it says, "is one of the richest and most prosperous counties in the state." It goes on to speak of the fact that Logan County—one of the richest in the state—is assessed only enough money to pay for eight deputy sheriffs. The reason we learn a few paragraphs farther down:

"Consequently," says the article "the coal operators of the county have been called upon to provide the funds for the employment of 39 additional deputy sheriffs. These deputies are under the strict authority of the sheriff, just as the eight deputies whose wages are paid by the county."

"Last year," one of the operators told the committee," our association contributed $46,640, or a rate of 4.9 mills on each ton of coal mined. This year (1921) including September, the sum is $61,517.

One might wonder why it is only in the unorganized coal fields that the operators are called upon to provide for the mine-guard system. The evils of this system, the Senators were shown, are increasing, and nowhere are they so cruel as in Logan county.

"So far as Logan county is concerned," E. T. England, the present attorney-general of West Virginia, informed the committee, "I feel that the mine-guard system, as maintained there, is one of, if not the greatest of, the sources of trouble in that particular county.

Mine Guard System at Work

"If anyone comes there who has a 'suspicious' appearance, they will ascertain what his business is, what his name is, and what he is doing there. If he gives 'satisfactory' answers, they tell him to go ahead; if not, they tell him he has no business there and that he had better get out of the county on the next train."

In Mingo county the condition is similar, except that there the Baldwin-Felts organization is used more openly to intimidate union members and organizers of the United Mine Workers.

The publicity man for the Williamson operators of Mingo county, one Olmstead, told the Senators that in one month the operators contributed $1,800 to pay for eight deputy sheriffs.

In this district the Baldwin-Felts organization plays the leading role in suppression. They, like the operators' deputy sheriffs in Logan, evict union miners from the company-owned houses, hound the union organizers, and engage in spy and provocative activities.

Railwaymen's Strike Halts Business in All Germany; Jail Leaders; Seize Funds

The first general railway strike that Germany has ever experienced is now tying up all traffic in the nation, although union officials are under arrest and the strike funds of at least one branch of the railwaymen's organization have been confiscated by the Social Democratic government.

In the district occupied by the Allied troops trains are running but only within the borders. At the boundary line the strikers are picketing the lines and stopping all trains. The security police and the various organizations of ex-officers are patrolling the lines and guarding the railway stations. Noske is mobilizing a corps of strike-breakers, and there is little evidence that the government intends to consider the demands of the railwaymen until all coercive means have failed.

The situation is the most critical faced by the government since the Kapp "putsch"; drastic measures against the strikers may arouse the entire working class against a government already despised, while granting the wage increases demanded means an additional financial burden the government dare not assume. Germany is a tinder box that may burst into flame at any moment.

THE FAMINE!

with masses of the workers of all countries have been active in grappling with a natural catastrophe of this character.

This is probably in large measure due to the ever increasing class consciousness of the workers of all lands and especially to the realization that the magnitude of the catastrophe was very materially heightened by the inhuman and dastardly crimes of various capitalist governments, in particular those of Britain and of France, against the first Workers' Republic.

The fact that over 100,000,000 pounds ($500,000,000) was expended by the British Government alone in subsidizing attempts to overthrow the Workers' Rule in Soviet Russia, that munitions, stores, aeroplanes, and uniforms were lavishly distributed by Churchill, the British war minister, to Wrangel, to Denikin, to Kolchak, and to Yudenitch, that it was the systematic policy of the capitalist forces in Russia to blow up the bridges in order to starve Petrograd and disorganise Russia's transport services—all these facts in Britain and parallel ones in other countries served only to awaken in the working masses a strong determination to make what amends were possible for these secret crimes of their ruling class and to rally to the support of the workers and peasants dying like flies in the stricken Volga Valley.

From the days of August onwards, from the time when the immediate incidence of frightful famine conditions became certain, in every country, city, town, and often in villages and hamlets, workers of all countries were active organizing all relief measures in their power to alleviate the situation.

Mass Sacrifice Rises High

The international solidarity of the working masses the world over has never been shown so vividly, mass sacrifice and mass generosity never rose to so high a level as it has in the past months when the impoverished and half starving workers of Austria and of Central Europe donated from their poverty for their brothers in even worse distress. It has been the rule rather than the exception for the workers of industrial plants and factories in Austria to give one hour's pay weekly for this purpose. The workers of Czecho-Slovakia and of Germany were not far behind. In Bulgaria, in Sweden, in starving Poland and equally in the more prosperous countries of Western Europe the same spirit has been manifested.

The pity is that these heroic efforts achieve comparatively insufficient results, largely owing to the low wage levels and low rates of exchange in the European countries. Thus, while the American worker may be taken as averaging $30 in wages per week, the British worker averages only $13 or $14, the worker in Germany $2.50 per week, the Austrian worker $1.50 per week, and those of Poland even less.

SO THAT AN EQUIVALENT PROPORTION OF WAGE BEING GIVEN TO FAMINE RELIEF PRODUCED ONLY ONE-HALF IN THE CASE OF THE BRITISH WORKER, ONE-TWELFTH IN THE CASE OF THE AUSTRIAN WORKER OF WHAT A SIMILAR PROPORTION PRODUCES IN THE CASE OF THE AMERICAN WORKER.

Not only that, but wheat and grain has to be purchased almost entirely at American prices. Even the wheat purchased on the London market is mostly American wheat shipped across at American prices.

No Corn or Wheat in Europe

Nowhere in Central Europe, neither in Austria, Germany, nor even in France is any corn or wheat available for shipment to the famine areas.

IT IS THESE FACTS THAT PLACES AMERICA AND AMERICAN WORKERS IN THE POSITION OF BEING ABLE TO ACHIEVE MUCH GREATER RESULTS IN FAMINE RELIEF THAN THE WORKERS OF ALL OTHER COUNTRIES PUT TOGETHER. The wheat surplus of the world available for famine purposes is, moreover, almost entirely situated in America.

While this is the situation as regards practicability of relief, what is the situation as regards the famine itself?

A careful study of all the statistics and reports available, together with a careful questioning of all famine relief workers available, led me to the conclusion in November last that the death roll was going to be anywhere from SEVEN TO TEN MILLIONS. At the time when I published these figures thru the medium of the London Daily Herald many believed that these figures were alarmist and much too high.

Higher Estimates Made

On the other hand all the latest reports show that this estimate was conservative and too low. Nansen now reports that 33,000,000 people are affected in place of the 20,000,000 which was the original figure, and that fifteen millions will certainly die unless succored. THIS MEANS THAT, ALLOWING FOR ALL PRESENT RELIEF PLANS GOING THROUGH, EVEN THEN FIFTEEN MILLION PERSONS WILL DIE.

The factor which was missed in our calculations and which is now becoming apparent is that districts adjacent to the famine areas which had some sort of a harvest and where the harvest was not absolutely burnt up as it was in Samara province and other provinces, had sufficient food for three or four months and this is now giving out, and these other districts too are rapidly approaching a famine condition.

This successive growth of the famine area and of the number of people affected is likely to grow still more so that it is frightful to think of what may happen before the next six long months are passed that separate us from the reaping of the next harvest.

It is with these facts in mind that the central committee of the Workers' International Famine Relief Committee—an organization through which is co-ordinated the relief work of practically all the workers' political and industrial organizations in all civilized countries—sent through to the United States to put the situation clearly before the American workers and the workers' famine relief organizations at work over here.

They Struck First Blow

The workers and peasants of Soviet Russia who struck the first decisive blow in the world revolution and who have for four long years defended the citadel of world workers' rule with their blood, have thereby incurred the unceasing and undying hatred of all forces of capitalism and of privilege. Harried unceasingly by the armies under Koltchak, under Denekin, under Yudenitch, and under Wrangel, armies subsidized and fitted out by the French and British Governments, those brave comrades are to-day nearly at the end of their strength and have to compromise with capitalism to defend the revolution.

In any case and at all times would it be our duty as workers and as proletarians to afford them every assistance in their struggle, but today in the face of this overwhelming calamity whose horrors surpass description it is a hundred times more our duty to do all that we can.

Whilst the capitalist governments at Geneva and again at Brussels with cynical cruelty refused adequate aid to the dying millions on the Volga, the responsibility for help at all devolves more and more completely on the working masses.

American workers can bring help—and large-scale help. They can bring bigger help and save more lives of the workers and peasants on the Volga than the proletariat of all other countries combined.

It is with America and American workers that the power to save the famine victims lies.

Let Us Repay Debt

Let us then repay our debt as workers and as proletarians to our Russian comrades who have [illegible] each [illegible] of the [illegible] by [illegible]

[illegible]

The best way to help is to give [illegible] regularly [illegible] only one [illegible] to save our brothers [illegible]

And second to that, the further duty is to take what part we can in building up the organization for famine relief. Actual results depend [illegible] organization built up to take and transport the relief.

[illegible] of Soviet Russia," we have the machinery for transforming donations for relief into immediate shipments of corn and foodstuffs with a maximum of efficiency and a minimum of costs.

WHAT REMAINS IS FOR EVERY RANK AND FILER, EVERY MILITANT TO GET ACTIVE IN HIS UNION BRANCH OR WHATEVER INDUSTRIAL, POLITICAL, CO-OPERATIVE, OR EDUCATIONAL ORGANIZATION HE MAY BELONG TO AND SEE THAT THAT BRANCH, OR THAT LOCAL, IS THOROLY ORGANIZED FOR FAMINE RELIEF.

If we all do our best steadily and regularly in this way, the world proletariat, and especially the workers of America, will be able to strike terrific blows to free the Russian Workers' Republic from the horrors of famine.

HUMANITY AND POLITICS

The latest message from Moscow reads: "A large section of the workers quite fail to make a sound estimate of the possible political consequences of the famine as well as of the possible consequences of bourgeois relief action.

We beg our comrades to take note that the Capitalists do not undertake the relief work from any humanitarian motives but because they think of using the famine for their own political and economic ends."

A defeat of the Russian workers will mean a defeat of the workers of the world.

HUNGER BANQUET FEB. 11

We have already secured the following prominenet speakers for the Hunger Banquet for Organized Labor on Saturday evening, Feb. 11, at Webster Hall: Sidney Hillman, Joseph Schlossberg, Timothy Healy, Abraham Lefkowitz, Lewis Gannett, A. Brownstein, Alfred J. Boulton and many others.

Use your influence to secure the endorsement of your organization for this affair and to make sure that your organization is represented. Your organization has received tickets and a letter requesting affiliation and endorsement.

HAVE YOU ENROLLED?

Section F. S. R. organizations are developing with great rapidity. Meetings are being held in each section during the week. Urge your members to join. Have them enroll at 208 East 12th St., 61 Canal Street, 250 West 25th St., 1347 Boston Rd., 59 East 105th Street, 226 Roebling St., 229 Sackman St. Active comrades who reside in sections where no organizations have been started, should get on the job and wake up the district. Coney Island, Flatbush, Boro Park, Queens, Astoria, Greenwich Village, Washington Heights, the Lower East Side, are still waiting for someone to wake them up. Start a bazaar, concert, dance, clubs, etc., for Russian Relief.

Remember the lecture and pictures at the Lexington Theatre on Sunday evening, Feb. 26. Paxten Hibben will be the speaker. Get your tickets from the local secretary.

LOS ANGELES TOILERS AT WORK

It will not be an exaggeration to state that the Los Angeles Branch of the Friends of Soviet Russia belongs in the column of the organization's most active branches. No effort is spared by the Los Angeles comrades to make their undertakings record-breaking successes. The last affair, which was a grand concert in Los Angeles' largest theatre, netted $2713 up to date. The concert committee expects a net income of $3000 judging by the many tickets outstanding.

The Los Angeles Branch of the F. S. R. is endorsed by the Los Angeles Central Labor Council which is represented by two delegates. There are 34 labor unions and other workers' organizations represented. The general meetings are attended not only by delegates, but by the public as well. Many who are eager to find out how the relief work is carried on, and to give assistance to the organization, are obliged to stand up all evening for lack of seating capacity at the headquarters of the L. A. Branch of the Technical Aid Society for Soviet Russia, where the meetings of the F. S. R. are being held.

The next big event on the program is a bazaar, February 11, 12 and 13, Brooklyn Hall, Brooklyn and Soto Streets. The entertainment committee has been working on it for the last three months, and judging by the amount of valuable articles collected, this affair also is assured of success. The slogan is: "DO YOUR SHOPPING AT THE F. S. R. BAZAAR."

Farming the Farmer with the Conference "Con Game" at Washington Exposed

By H. M. WARE
Agrarian Organizer, Workers' Party.

The first report sent from the Farmers' Conference in Washington gave only an introductory background. Invited by the Secretary of Agriculture, 300 delegates were present, only 51 of whom could in any way claim to be real farmers. The other 249 were padding plus the representatives of great Capitalist exploiters of farm and city Labor.

After the preliminary session, the hand-picked Committees retired to write up their cut and dried "Reports." While these meetings were in progress, the invited farmers and those not admitted to Committees sat in the Ball Room of the great hotel.

Implement Trust Sobs

Out of one or another of the Committee Rooms would come representatives of such farm organizations as "The Implement Industry," Mr. William Black of Louisville, Ky. Then this poverty-stricken organization would give us a sob-story that would make the farmers' condition seem prosperous.

He described the horrors of an "inventory loss." Brother farmers, you may have lost money, crops, sleep and even your farm, but if you have been spared that terrible "Inventory loss" be happy and contribute your few remaining pennies to the machinery trust.

Or if you feel like it, there are other deserving charities. We heard from all of them. One farmer dubbed them "the sob sisters."

The Poor Milling Trust

After the Machine Trust came the wail from the Milling Industry, which changed into protestations of friendship for the farmers "for all farmers" (North Dakota farmers notice).

Then this representative of the Grain Gamblers, Mr. James F. Bell, of Minneapolis, patted his kind on the back as having fathered the reactionary American Farm Bureau Federation, an organization supported by business interests, advertised by the controlled Agricultural Press and led by a high-salaried man, who is quite used to this Conference game. In a speech in the Senate, La Follette points out that Mr. J. R. Howard, President of the Farm Bureau Federation, met manufacturers, coal operators, lumbermen and other big business interests in secret sessions in December.

In press reports of these sessions the farmers were made to appear in agreement with their exploiters. Now a man receiving the salary which Mr. Howard does should not be expected to feel the same pinch most of us got in this "inevitable deflation." But farmers will not stand much longer for secret deals with their enemies. These secret conferences included our worthy Granger, Mr. S. J. Lowell, Master of the National Grange, and he too is responsible and guilty.

Leaders Meet the Robbers

It is not surprising, therefore, that at the Washington Conference the most important question was—Reduction of Railroad Freight Rates, or that when the committee reports began to appear, these so-called farm leaders, who had previously and secretly met the farm robbers and lobbyists and lawyers, should be instrumental in framing resolutions proposing a reduction in railroad workers' wages.

One resolution reads in part, "Probably the chief source of relief which the farmer may rightfully expect and demand is the form of lowering of the prices of products which he buys. This is prevented at the present time by a level of retailers' profits far in excess of any income which the farmer is able to receive and by high industrial wages and freight rates. It is imperative that the farmers have reduced transportation costs. To accomplish this end, we recommend (a) the immediate repeal or amendment of the Adamson law covering the national agreements, the savings thus effected to be immediately reflected in reduction of freight rates."

Demands Lower Freight Rates

Let it be said here that the farmers of Kansas may be proud of John Tromble, President of the Farmers' Union of Kansas. He rose like a shaft of light in that pit of picked delegates—a gray-haired virile leader—and denounced in ringing terms the underhand attempts to stir up the enmity of one set of workers against another. He told of the railroads in the South and Middle West which had reaped great dividends and ended by demanding that the rates be lowered by reducing profits and squeezing the water out of the stocks of these exploiters.

His speech increased an evident restlessness and dissatisfaction which was growing among the real farmers of the Conference. After the Kansas farmer, another from Montana took the floor. He soon made it plain that the hard luck stories that the trusts had spilled were bunk. He explained the cinch which a railroad that had Government guarantees, and owned mines, had; how they could overcharge for coal and let the Government foot the bill. He also made it clear that farmers and city workers would rise or fall together—that wages paid city workers and the price received by farmers for food are closely related.

Gompers to the Rescue

If a vote had been possible at the moment these men finished, the real farmers present would have voted solidly against the resolution, and the silk-shirt farmers would not have dared oppose them—but then the wily Anderson, who it is rumored is being groomed for the job of Speaker of the House of Representatives and acting as chairman, scanned the anxious faces of his floor lieutenants. Then guess whom he recognized? None other than Sammy Gompers. And the wisdom of his choice became apparent as Gompers proceeded. He started with the sentiment, All for the workers. He got purple in the face and repeated himself, he exhibited his ignorance and ended by saying that "some farmers were prosperous" or words equally open to misunderstanding. The audience hooted him. The Secretary of Agriculture in inviting Gompers proved his sagacity if he aimed to increase the misunderstanding between these two great sections of the American working masses, the industrial workers and the working farmers.

The report was referred back, in spite of Gompers, and finally passed, "resolved that Capital and Labor share equally in the reduction of freight rates."

Sentiment for "Bloc"

The Conference heard a few scientists and one or two honest men, who have a real interest in their work. But on the whole it was obviously a planned effort to strike at the Railroad Brotherhoods. Only secondarily to this did the [illegible] Agricultural Bloc [illegible] sentiment [illegible] Bloc that this attempt [illegible] to the more subtle [illegible] ness the judgeship tendered [illegible] ding to Senator Kenyon [illegible] ed by him. Kenyon, he is [illegible] the leader of the Farm Bloc [illegible] Senate. Let us hope he will [illegible] on the porridge.

The [illegible] must also depend upon more [illegible] means. And they will, [illegible] farmers! Secretary Weeks will [illegible] ward the offer and contract [illegible] Ford to Congress, but there the [illegible] mosphere will become unfavorable and it will die a-borning.

There were twelve committee [illegible] ports. Most of them pure bunk [illegible] generalities.

In the last evening we adjourned [illegible] another hall. There we received Se [illegible] retary of Agriculture Wallace's [illegible] surance that "never before had [illegible] representative a Conference of Far [illegible] ers, met"—to which he added [illegible] blessing, and we were thru.

Gildea Battles Old Guard In Montana Federation of Labor; He Refuses to Quit

In Montana as elsewhere there is a more or less bitter fight between the reactionaries and the revolutionists for control of the labor organizations.

The membership of the unions affiliated with the Montana State Federation of Labor decided in the last election that a change should be made in the personnel of certain officials and elected as president Charles Gildea, a member of the United Mine Workers.

His opponent, Stephen Ely, also a member of the United Mine Workers, had been elected by the radicals to succeed an official who was known to be a tool of the mining companies.

Ely Part of Lewis Machine

Ely is a part of the Lewis machine and holds a job as executive board member in the United Mine Workers.

His loyalty to the Lewis machine, exceeding his devotion to the cause of labor in Montana and elsewhere, as responsible for his recent defeat.

By political juggling and trickery ly has succeeded in retaining the esidency of the State Federation, spite the expressed wish of the mbership, and as a result there is ch dissatisfaction and talk of lits and withdrawals.

These occurrences—the usurpation power by individuals with whom e rank and file is disgusted—has, in e past, been made the excuse for e setting up of dual organizations d the division of labor's forces.

The blame for this rests of course upon those who will and do put office above the welfare of the labor movement.

Gildea Issues Clarion Call

Now comes the encouraging part of this tale. Charles Gildea, thirty years in the labor movement, veteran of a thousand hard-fought battles on the industrial field, old and weary, but with his gray head held high, has sounded a call to his supporters that has been heard all too seldom in the labor movement.

Had all the radicals who have suffered temporary defeat at the hands of reactionaries taken the position nnounced by Charles Gildea there ould be to-day a real labor movement in the United States.

In a statement sent to the Butte lletin, official organ of the Monna State Federation of Labor, Gil says:

Opposes Dual Unionism

"Permit me space to reply to the mbers of the various unions who ve communicated to me a desire to e me set up headquarters in opposion to the office of the present te Federation of Labor officials, ssrs. Ely and Taylor. During my ire career I opposed the establish of dual organizations.

"It indeed amuses me to hear men radical tendencies giving up an ganization as impossible of purifiion, and at the same time, talking out throwing over the entire capilist system.

"The present officers of the Monna State Federation of Labor eated a canvassing board, and deared Ely president, in face of the t that a majority of the members reed that he should not be presint.

"No self-respecting man would ke the office of president in view the fact that after serving one m a majority voted against him. realize that it is the duty of the ecutive board to administer affairs tween conventions.

"The question of my qualifications ould according to the laws of the ganization be brought to their attion, and they should dispose it.

Exposes Trickery Used

"There is nothing in the laws that ve Secretary Taylor, or Ely, the ower to reconvene another canvassng board except the one that should eet on or before October 25 of ection year.

"In this instance they did not even ring together the old canvassing oard, but had an almost new one ade to suit their purpose.

"The whole affair will have a ighty good effect in due time. It lready shows the membership that me of those who are now in power, d feebly serve the rank and file ll stoop to unprincipled means to g on to an official position.

"All I ask is that the membership ho want a more progressive and ilitant organization in this state, to ep on the alert.

"We will remain on the inside and ork not only to make an organizaion that will live in spite of any opposition, but will tend to purify the radical movement by exposing the rank hypocrisy of some who heretofore posed as radicals.

Bribed and Flattered by Job

"The acting president of the Mine Workers of this state who posed as a radical for many years is already shown up in his real colors. It is well that this should be, because our battles against the capitalist system will grow more fierce as its decay becomes more glaring.

"And the elimination of those who can be bribed by flattery or a job, or any kind of an emolument, and who therefore are not to be trusted is mighty good work at the present time."

Pointing the Road Toward the Better Day for Organized Labor

Help West Virginia

In Russia people are starving because crops have failed and the capitalists of the world stopped all imports into that country for more than two years.

In West Virginia, United States of America, men, women and children are freezing and starving because the coal barons have thrown them out of their homes and are herding them like cattle with the aid and assistance of the state authorities.

These people are miners and the wives and children of miners.

They have worked all their lives to furnish fuel for us and to add to the profits of the coal and steel trusts whose owners are snug and cosy in their winter homes.

These workers have fought a good fight. They are still fighting as well as they can against the most powerful industrial and financial combination in the United States; a combination that can and does rally to its support in the fight against these workers all the powers of the state and national governments. These workers fought for a very small thing—to enforce their right to join a union and live like human beings. They faced the private armies of the coal companies, the state militia and federal troops. Martial law was declared by a coal-company governor and enforced by a coal-company tool. They could not break the spirit of these fighting workers, they could not massacre them as they would like to, so they—the rulers, our rulers—have decided to starve them to death.

This they must not be allowed to do. The workers of this nation are not well enough organized to do what should be done—march into West Virginia and free these workers. What CAN be done is this:

Send donations to the United Mine Workers, District No. 14, Charleston, West Virginia.

After you have done that decide to remember the West Virginia case when the day of accounting comes.

The Sacco-Vanzetti Case

The agitation which has made the Sacco-Vanzetti case one of international importance, and which undoubtedly postponed a legalized murder, must not be allowed to die down merely because these victims of capitalist persecution have been granted a reprieve on appeal to the supreme court.

The agitation must be kept up in the press and on the platform. Their persecutors must not be allowed to think that the workers of this country have lost interest in the fate of their comrades.

Publicity is one of the things that those who work in the dark fear. The rulers are never certain that approval will be given their murderous plans if the facts are known.

The work must go on until everyone in this nation knows that two workers in Massachusetts are to be murdered because they hold views of which the masters of bread do not approve.

One More Disgrace

The packinghouse strike has been called off. The Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, the organized unit of the striking workers, received unexpected co-operation from their fellow employes who belonged to no union whatever. From the organized labor movement as a whole they got nothing but expressions of sympathy in their great fight against odds.

This has been the fate of almost every organization which has tried to stem the tide of wage-reductions,

It shows that the American labor movement as now officered and led, has no policy except bluster when employment is plentiful and servile submission when work is scarce.

No program of education designed to remedy this condition of affairs is being conducted on the contrary, no issue of a capitalist paper is complete without some patriotic statement from a trade union official lauding a government that is so openly an instrument of aggression in the hands of the employing class that a blind man can see it.

Rapid and intelligent work on the inside of the unions is needed and every worker who has any working class loyalty left should rally to the call of the Trade Union Educational League.

Birds of a Feather

With what a fine gang of bandits, bootlickers and general collection of scum does our Sam Gompers associate!

At a recent meeting of the National Civic Federation he was one of those who applauded the remarks of one Paul Miliukov, a down-at-the-heel left-over of the Kerensky regime.

The applause came when Miliukov opposed the sending of delegates to the Genoa conference, because the Bolsheviki would be there.

Captain Emmet Kilpatrick, a "Red Cross" worker who spent nine months in a Russian prison before he decided that counter-revolutionary activities under the guise of charity were not popular under the Soviet rule, paid Gompers a high compliment by saying that he was "the greatest enemy of revolution in America and but for him the revolution would have been won long ago."

The noble Red Cross hero was also opposed to famine relief.

A fine nest for the head of the American labor movement!

Is it not enough to make every honest worker hang his head in shame because he has tolerated, through his inactivity, the contemptible utterances and actions of this senile degenerate.

The Hunger "Banquet"

Anyone interested in finding out just how the Russian famine victims in the Volga district live can do so by attending organized labor's hunger banquet Saturday evening, Feb. 11.

The hunger "banquet" will consist of the same food, prepared in exactly the same manner in which it is served to the starving Russians by the various relief organizations.

It will offer a sharp contrast to the New York living standard and will bring home as no mere description can the utter misery of these innocent victims of imperialistic greed; misery that all efforts so far made have relieved but little.

There will, however, be more food for the brains of the guests than for their bodies. Among the speakers will be Sidney Hillman and Joseph Schlossberg of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Timothy Healy of the Stationary Firemen's Union, Abraham Lefkowitz of the Teachers' Federation, Alfred J. Boulton of the Stereotypers Union, A. Brownstein of the Furriers' Union and Moissaye Olgin.

The friends of Soviet Russia expect that Webster Hall, 119 E. 11th St., will be packed to capacity next Saturday evening.

FIGHT FOR YOUR CLASS

[illegible] fight for your class at every point.

Armed Thugs Rule West Virginia Coal Fields

has huge interests and where the word "union" is expunged from the vocabulary of every miner.

Parts of Lively's confession were so "raw" that they drew from Senator McKellar the exclamation:

"It violates every sense of right I ever had. I never could have believed a thing like this could happen, and I am not surprised that you are having trouble in Mingo county."

Lively told the committee he had been a member of the United Mine Workers of America since 1902. "In 1920 I was expelled for 99 years," he said. During that period I was working for the detective agency, the Baldwin-Felts people. I worked for about ten years for them, remaining a member of the miners' organization at the same time.

"It was part of my detective work to get official positions in the union. While working for the agency I attended a convention of the Mine Workers in Charleston, W. Va. I was to find out what was going on. I worked for the agency in Illinois, Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado and West Virginia.

"After I completed my work in these various states I came back to West Virginia in January or February, 1920. I went straight to Mingo county, to do secret service work."

Breaking Up the Union

When Lively arrived conditions there were comparatively peaceful. A quiet, orderly unionizing campaign was being conducted by the mine workers and no discrimination had been reported. Lively immediately went to work in one of the mines and took out a union card. Soon a large number of union men were reported to the employers as "active" and were summarily discharged. Eviction notices were served upon them, and Baldwin-Felts men were employed by the coal owners to force them and their families out of their homes.

Lively admitted that he himself had helped in union organization. "I got into the confidence of the organizers of the various local unions, making myself an active member," he said. "I assisted in the organization of War Eagle, Glen Allen and Mohawk locals."

The sheriff, who controls the police powers of Logan county, is Don Chafin. The man who controls the extra-legal officials of Mingo county is T. L. Felts, head of the Baldwin-Felts agency. Chafin, the committee learned when he testified, is worth—according to his own valuation—$350,000. He admitted being heavily interested in coal lands, and said he was interested in several banks, some of which are the depositories' of mine operators.

Chafin has sole and complete control over those who work under him as deputies. The formality by which the operators make the employment of these 39 extra deputies appear "regular" is to deposit the money with the county, but with the proviso that it be specifically used for deputies. It then goes straight to Chafin, who controls the distribution of the fund.

The only difference between the Baldwin-Felts detective methods and the Chafin methods is that Felts is paid directly by the mine operators, while Chafin must make out a receipt for money received and send it to the county officials. Both command large numbers of men privileged by the state government to continue a campaign of terrorism against members of the United Mine Workers of America, against their wives and children, and even, in some cases, against their aged mothers and grand-mothers.

145,000 Anthracite Miners in Pennsylvania Back Demands with Threat to Strike April 1st

WITH LABOR IN ITS DAILY STRUGGLE

The wage scale convention of the anthracite coal miners held in Shamokin, Pa., expressed the willingness of 145,000 workers to strike April 1st, if their demands are not met by the operators.

Up to the present time, the operators have refused to meet in conference with the representatives of the union, in spite of the fact that in 1919, when the present contract was made, the operators agreed to do so before its expiration. There is no doubt that they will try to evade this agreement.

If they do so, the union officials, according to their habit, can transfer the credit for the strike to the shoulders of the operators.

All of the union officials from Lewis down have vociferously disclaimed any desire to call a strike, tho they claim they will do so, if necessary, to enforce the union demands.

The important demands are: the demand for an increase in the contract wage scale of 20 per cent and of $1 per day for day men, making a minimum of $5.20 a day; the demand for the eight-hour day in all classes of work, and the demand for the check-off system.

The operators are raising a howl, claiming that they will be ruined and that the mines will be closed down if there is not an immediate wage reduction. According to their figures the cost of mining coal in the Shamokin region is $4.20 a ton. It retails for $15.00 a ton. This cost estimate is no doubt greatly padded. It was stated in the convention that the miners in central Pennsylvania do not receive more than $1 for mining a ton of coal and that the cost of mining is $1.75.

A reduction in the wage scale of this great group of workers would give a tremendous impetus to the downward wage movement all over the country.

Trouble in Soft Coal Fields

Operators in the bituminous fields are trying to force down wages in conjunction with the same move in the hard coal region. The workers are determined to resist any cut and are ready to fight against it. In the meantime, Hoover comforts himself with the fact that 30 per cent of the soft coal in the country is mined in non-union fields.

Garment Workers' Strike Won

The International Ladies Garment Workers' Union has called off the New York strike, and the workers are rapidly going back into the shops under the old conditions.

Both employers and union officials welcome an investigation by the federal government into the trade and President Schlesinger says he hopes that when the atmosphere has been cleared of legal controversies the way will be open for a lasting agreement.

Cost of Living and Wage Cuts

The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor has recently made a survey of the cost of living in five large cities: New York, Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia and Washington.

According to their figures, the cost of living has decreased 18 per cent to 24 per cent since June, 1920, when prices were at their peak. The cost of living in New York was 78.1 per cent higher in December, 1921, than it was in 1914. Detroit living costs were 82.4 per cent higher, Chicago 72.3 per cent; Philadelphia 74.3 per cent, Washington 63 per cent higher than in 1914.

The Cry for Pre-War Levels

The cry for pre-war levels in wages persists among the employers throughout the country and they have organized a tremendous drive to force wages back to that level.

The workers must organize the same kind of a drive to keep wages up, remembering that their real wages dropped 10-20 per cent from 1914 to 1920.

The efforts of the capitalist class have not abated. This week most of the Rhode Island mills have posted notices of 20 per cent reductions. At the same time, the American Smelting and Refining Co., the United States Smelting, Mining and Refining Co., and the International Smelting Co. have announced wage reductions of 50 cents a day for workers receiving $3.75 on more and 40 cents for those receiving less.

Mass Strikes in Germany

Scattering reports from Germany indicate that there is a tremendous unrest among the workers there. In Saxony, the railroad workers elected Communist strike leaders over the heads of the union officials. The striking Dresden workers, who walked out at noon January 20, stalling the Vienna express, have received assurances of support from the railroad workers of Leipzig and Chemnitz.

The workers in the Solingen cutlery industry threaten a complete tie-up unless wage increases are immediately granted. In Bielefeld the transport workers voted to strike. In Hamburg a carpenters' strike was answered by a complete lockout in the building trades.

Verboten—Tobacco and Picketing

The Amalgamated Tobacco Workers of America are learning that whatever the constitution of the United States says or does not say, whatever the statutes say or do not say, and whatever the courts may say about picketing being legal, if peaceful, that as a matter of fact effective peaceful picketing is punished by fine or imprisonment or both.

Two years ago Local 527 of the A. F. of L., a Chicago local, was engaged in a strike, which the court endeavored to break by an injunction against picketing.

The strikers defied the injunction and 32 of them, men, and women, were sentenced to serve jail terms from 20 to 90 days and to pay fines from $25 to $500 each, a total of $6,700.

The local is now affiliated with the Amalgamated Tobacco Workers of America. The class-conscious workers who were sentenced, are now being called, after two years delay, to serve their jail terms and pay their fines. The Amalgamated is standing by these workers and will give them every support a workers' organization is capable of giving—legal, financial, publicity. Workers should rally to their support, to show the leaders who refused to take up this case, that the rank and file in all industries resents this desertion of class-conscious workers and are determined that it shall not occur in cases in which members are involved in future.

Metal Workers to Unite

The metal workers in New York and vicinity, at present organized in independent unions, are being called to a conference to plan for unity. The call is addressed to all metal workers' organizations upon the initiative of the United Labor Council of Greater New York and vicinity, in which organization 11 lodges of the Amalgamated Metal Workers of America take a leading part.

The metal workers have long been in the forefront of the labor movement and were among the first to adopt forms of organization planned to lead to industrial unity

It is therefore not surprising that now, when the need for unity is greater than ever because of unemployment and reduced wages that the metal workers should show themselves ready for any step towards unity which can be taken in reality without damages of an aftermath of dualism.

The call to the conference for unity leads to a natural step to unite existing unions, and is not a move to form any new union outside of the existing unions.

Such a step towards unity is one which workers can understand and which they strive to carry out everywhere, and at all times when their standard of living is attacked.

The call is clear and carries the message of unity to all workers of the metal trades. The call will be responded to by the workers. Only bureaucrats who want jobs and theorists who want "perfect" or "ideal" unions instead of organizations built by workers to meet the needs of their struggle can oppose the call and what it means.

Join Red International

The coast branch of the Lumber Workers' Industrial Union of Canada has decided, with but two dissenting votes, to affiliate with the Red International of Labor Unions. The resolution embodying this action reads as follows:

"That the coast branch of the Lumber Workers' Industrial Union of Canada unconditionally adopt the principles laid down by the Red International of Labor Unions, and calls upon the general organization of the L. W. I. U. of C. to immediately apply for affiliation with that body. In the event of the general organization refusing to affiliate with the R. I. of L. U., the coast branch executive to immediately apply for and secure the affiliation of the coast branch of the L. W. I. U. of Canada with the Red International of Labor Unions."

The coast branch of the Lumber Workers' Industrial Union comprises the majority of the membership of the entire organization, and it is probable that organization as a whole will endorse the stand taken by the coast workers.

Revolutionary Surge in British India Is Growing

London.—The papers here regard the campaign of "civil disobedience" recently inaugurated by the Gandhi forces as the most serious and dangerous manifestation yet seen in India.

The movement began in but two districts—Bardoli and Anand—but has already spread to the district of Guntur.

It is believed that the plan is to cover as wide an area as possible by including district after district.

The non-cooperation movement has gained great headway among the Hindu peasants because of the emphasis placed on the immorality of paying taxes to the invader.

Official bulletins do not attempt to disguise the seriousness of the situation. They state that "the mass of inflammable material is so great that the possibility of widespread disturbances cannot be ignored."

The outrages of the British troops have alienated what friendly sentiment might have been left among the native population, and it is now admitted that the recent tour of the Prince of Wales, with its outstanding ceremony and splendor offering a sharp contrast to the general misery has merely served to aggravate and intensify the growing hatred of everything English.

Chicago. Speaking before a mass meeting here, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, organizer of the Workers' Defense Union, urged more aggressive agitation for the release of the 150 remaining political prisoners.

THE WORKER
Wants To Grow

To grow, to increase its circulation, it depends solely upon those who want to see in the field a fighting paper representing the militant, class-conscious workers of the United States.

We want everyone who agrees with the policy of this paper—the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of a workers' state by the revolutionary action of the workers themselves—to subscribe and to get at least one fellow-worker to subscribe.

Our circulation is now more than ten thousand copies per week and within the next month we want to increase that to fifty thousand.

IT CAN BE DONE IF THOSE WHO READ AND LIKE THE WORKER WILL DO THEIR PART.

We will do ours. We will furnish the best that can be had in cartoons, educational matter and news stories. We will give you a paper that you need not be ashamed to work for, write for and boost for. We will put out a paper that you will want to read even tho you do not agree at present with all it contains.

Every fight of the workers in this country will be the fight of THE WORKER. It fights for the working-class alone and on that class it depends for its support.

Big Plans Perfected for Carrying on Many Tasks Now Facing Workers Party

The first meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the newly organized Workers' Party has been held in New York City. A full attendance of fifteen members was present at all times and two alternates participated whenever necessary. The session consumed eight days due to the volume of work that confronted the new organization.

A special session was held immediately after the adjournment of the Convention to enable the fraternal delegates of the Proletarian Party to confer with the C. E. C. before rendering their report to their organization. After considerable discussion the C. E. C. adopted a motion reaffirming the invitation to the Proletarian group to join the Workers' Party, and announcing a readiness to provide a sub-committee to work out details of merger with a similar group from the other side at any time this invitation is accepted.

Work Between C. E. C. Sessions.

One of the most important decisions of the committee was on method of conducting the work of the Party between bi-monthly sessions. For this purpose an Organization Committee of four members of the C. E. C., and a "Committee on policy" of seven, were chosen, these bodies jointly to constitute the "Council of Administration," to which matters of major importance can be referred.

For the administration of organization work, in accord with the constitution, the country was divided into fifteen organization districts, each to be canvassed from a designated headquarters city, under the direction of a District Organizer.

Nation Divided Into Districts.

The districts are as follows:—

1. All New England, except Connecticut. Headquarters: Boston.
2. Metropolitan New York, up to Poughkeepsie, including five northern counties in New Jersey, Connecticut. Headquarters: New York.
3. Southern New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia. Headquarters: Philadelphia.
4. Ohio and West Virginia. Headquarters: Cleveland.
5. Southern Illinois, Wisconsin, northern Illinois, and the Calumet region of Indiana. Headquarters: Chicago.
6. Michigan and Indiana. Headquarters: Detroit.
7. Southern Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska. Headquarters: St. Louis.
8. California, Nevada, Arizona, New Mexico. Headquarters: San Francisco.
9. Washington and Oregon. Headquarters: Seattle.
10. Up state New York. Headquarters: Buffalo.
11. Western Pennsylvania, Virginia. Headquarters: Pittsburgh.
12. Northern Wisconsin, Minnesota, North and South Dakota. Headquarters: Minneapolis.
13. Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Montana. Headquarters: Denver.
14. Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas. Headquarters: Oklahoma City.
15. The South. Headquarters: Atlanta.

Select National Officials.

Many considerations entered into the fixing of these arbitrary boundary lines, principally industrial contiguity, transportation and membership conditions. Some of them may be altered if a better arrangement can be discovered in practice. The cutting up of states for the purpose of promoting better organization work does not mean that the political activity of these states will be allowed to suffer thereby. Eighteen states have been designated for immediate state organizations, and where such states are divided between two district offices the one best equipped will have charge of the political electioneering activity for the entire state. These districts are also subject to renumbering.

The committee also designated the entire staff of national officials, as directed by the constitution. Those chosen are:—

National Chairman: James P. Cannon.

National Secretary-Treasurer: Caleb Harrison.

Assistant Secretary: William F. Kruse.

Director Lyceum and Literature: Elmer T. Allison.

Agrarian Organizer: Harold Ware.

Editors: J. Louis Engdahl, Jay Lovestone and William Dunn.

District Organizers: 3, A. Siebert, 4 Charles Baker, 5, Charles Krumbein, 6, N. Loonin, 7, Robert Sullivan, 9, Charles Greenhalgh, 15, Mary Raoul Millis. The other districts were referred to the Organization Committee.

Plans for Publications.

It was decided to merge the two present papers, "The Workers' Council" and "The Toiler" into one new six page weekly organ, to be known as "The Worker." A sub-committee was elected to study the question of starting an English daily.

A monthly magazine, to be known as "The Workers' Review," educational in character and 64 pages in size, was also projected, and it will be issued as soon as 3000 paid up subscribers have been secured. Robert Minor was chosen as editor-in-chief of the new monthly when it appears, and an editorial board was chosen, consisting of Comrades Bittleman, Hartman, Lore, Lovestone, Olgin, Poyntz, Trachtenberg, and Wilenkin.

National Office Opened.

The actual selection of the headquarters was left to the Organization Committee, in the St. Denis Building, 80 E. 11th St., accepted by the full committee. This committee is working actively in equipping the new office for the work to be done.

The Literature Department has the first publication of the Party well under way—a compilation of the Program, Constitution, and other convention proceedings.

Several other books are also projected.

Matters that were referred to the Administrative Council after discussion by the full committee were: Agrarian Organization, Young Workers' Leagues, woman's activity, lyceum work, and several nominations for district organizership.

Special sub-committees were elected to prepare reports on the following matters:—Maintenance of Press, Trade Union Activity, Education, and Finance.

The next meeting of the committee will be held during the first week in March. All communications to the Workers' Party should be addressed, until further notice, to Caleb Harrison, National Secretary, Room 402, 80 E. 11th St., New York City.

Fifty Billion Gold Rubles Indemnity Claim of Soviet Russia Against Oppressors

MOSCOW.—Basing its demands upon the precedent established in international law by the Alabama claims collected from Great Britain by the United States, the Soviet government is preparing to present claims against the allied governments and their nationals for debts of the old regime and damages to property sustained since the revolution.

In this field of its new economic policy the Soviet government has decided to proceed without reservations and will charge the allied governments for property destruction and loss of life suffered through the offensive of the Czecho-Slovaks, Wrangel, Kolchak, Denikin, Yudenitch, Petlura, Semenoff, the invasions by the Polish forces and hundreds of minor attacks that never found their way into the newspapers of the western nations. The news of the preparation of detailed figures of actual damage by the Soviet experts has apparently dampened the enthusiasm of many delegates to the Genoa conference whose governments have had their own bills against Russia prepared for months and years. It is admitted in high official circles that the Soviet government is in a position to prove the complicity of most of the allied nations in the various anti-Soviet campaigns and that the Soviet government can, if it so desires, publish documents that will not read well in nations whose populations have been waiting anxiously for three years for the rulers to rebuild the shattered industrial system rather than waste the national resources in military campaigns which have, without exception, ended in disaster.

Legal experts generally hold the opinion that by far the largest portion of the amount to be asked by the Soviet government constitutes, under international law, an absolutely valid claim. Compared to the sum total of reparations claimed as due it by the Soviet government the counter-claims of the allied governments pale into insignificance. The amount that will be demanded by the Russian administration is variously estimated as from 50,000,000,000 gold rubles to twice that sum.

Recognition of the smallest total would place the allied nations in Russia's debt for the next decade.

Women! Rally for Our Prisoners!

Comrades in Prison! Comrades awaiting trial! Comrades facing deportation! In Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania,—many states have rendered up their casualties of the Class War.

To finance the appeals, to conduct the trials, to give aid and comfort to our comrades and their families—these are the duties of the National Defense Committee.

There must be an immediate mobilization of all available forces. Every Branch of the Workers' Party should create a committee on Defense and Relief at once.

Women and Defense Work.

It is in this kind of work that women excel. Their greater understanding and consequent sympathy make them eminently effective workers in this department of revolutionary working class activity. And our comrades who are called upon to sacrifice their liberty to the cause are entitled to every consideration. Women should therefore occupy an important position in the Defense Committee.

Visualize the awful monotony of prison life! Torn from family and friends; a world encompassed within cold stone walls; never to see the beauties of a sunrise; the nerve-wrecking sameness of prison fare; caged at night like a vicious animal, and until dawn to hear the walk, walk, walk of a menacing brute called guard.

The Case of Paul Manko.

Back home a family bereft. Take the case of Paul Manko! Arrested for the distribution of a leaflet, he was convicted and sent to prison in July 1921. Immediately upon his incarceration in Sing Sing he was thrust into solitary confinement. When he was taken out of the dungeon he was a maniac and is now in the Hospital for the Criminal Insane at Dannemora, N. Y. Back in New York City a frail little Russian woman and baby-boy wonder what it is all about. Were it not for the relief furnished by the National Defense Committee, their misery would be complete.

Saturday, January 21, the Supreme Court of New York sustained the conviction of I. E. Ferguson and C. E. Ruthenberg. This case must now be taken to the highest State court. Appeals of Gitlow, Winitsky, Misher and Manko are under way. Philadelphia presents a defense situation involving 38 State cases and 30 deportation cases. Pittsburgh has its quota, as has Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, etc. J. O. Bentall began a two year sentence in Fort Leavenworth, January 20.

Furnish Relief for Families.

The affiliated Divisions of the National Defense Committee began the year 1922 with an aggregate Defense obligation of $14,016. Additional large sums are needed to carry on the work already begun and to furnish relief for families.

Social affairs of various sorts should be arranged. A dance, an entertainment, mass meetings, etc., where the question of political prisoners in America may be kept before the working class. Recently Chicago held a bazaar under the auspices of the local committee and succeeded in raising a really substantial sum for defense and relief. New York Division will do the same in March. Contribution lists should be circulated and defense stamps sold. In all these activities women show an admirable efficiency. Experience proves that in the sale of literature and in collections women get the best results.

Women Prove Fitness.

Defense and relief of class war prisoners is a distinct department of revolutionary activity. In this activity women have proved their fitness. It is absolutely necessary that this work be extended. We therefore call on every Branch of the Workers' Party to create its Defense Committee in which women shall occupy an important place.

Drifting Towards Internationalism

(An analysis of the economic factors underlying the Genoa Conference)

If there were any one single accusation which the bourgeoisie would resent more than any other, it would be the one that its economic order brings about the co-operation of all nations, thereby laying the basis for internationalism. And yet, the entire history of its development has been one continuous substantiation of the statement in the Communist Manifesto: "National difference and antagonism between people are daily more and more vanishing, owing to the development of the bourgeoisie, to freedom of commerce, to the world-market, to the uniformity in the mode of production and in the condition of life corresponding thereto."

Recent developments furnish additional proof of the verity of the statement quoted above. They indicate in an unerring manner how in spite of their apparent nationalism and avowed patriotism, the various sections of the bourgeoisie are in practice forced to recognize that the world is essentially one economic unit, the component parts of which—the different nations—are mutually dependent upon one another. Thus, "they are wiser in their conduct than in their philosophy."

First Attempt Towards Communism

The war of 1914-18 was the logical result of the capitalist scramble for foreign markets. As a result of the war the capitalist system collapsed and its weakest link—Russia—was replaced by the Proletarian Dictatorship; the first attempt on the part of the international Proletariat towards the realization of its goal—a communist society. But no sooner had the Russian revolution shown its true character, when our capitalist world was up in arms against it. No weapon was spared, no means left untried. The bourgeoisie and its willing servants called to their aid the most inhuman of all weapons—the economic blockade. It was decreed that a nation of one hundred and fifty millions shall perish than be permitted to make a step forward along the path of social progress.

But experience taught our rulers that not only could Bolshevism not be overthrown, but that the blockade was a two-edged sword which smote its wielder as well as the enemy. Soviet Russia starved, but capitalist Europe could not reconstruct; Soviet Russia was being driven to ruin, but capitalistic Europe was following its trail. In time our capitalist rulers have recognized this. The blockade is slowly being lifted and Russia is gradually allowed to resume trade relations with other countries.

Capitalism Shifts Attack.

For four long years the capitalist governments had used all devices at their command in order to overthrow the Bolshevist government of Russia: subsidized counter-revolution within and abroad, printed and circulated forged documents representing the Bolshevist officials as German spies, have persistently refused to recognize the Soviet government while recognizing the representatives of the Kerensky regime long after its demise. And now—paradox of paradoxes!—the same capitalist governments have officially invited the Russian Soviet governments to an economic conference. The same ruling class—the bourgeoisie—that blockaded Russia, will now assist in the rehabilitation of Russian industry and economy.

What applies to Russia, applies in a somewhat modified form to Germany. Having emerged victorious on the military field, the Allies determined to crush Germany, economically. The treaty of Versailles reduced Germany to the level of a colony of the victorious Entente and its workers to virtual slavery. But this could not be. It soon became evident to the victors that Germany could not pay indemnities unless her industries were running. Here again was a two-edged sword: a Germany economically ruined meant no indemnities; a Germany with well-developed industries meant a revival of German competition—the defeat of the very object for which the war was fought. For a time the policy of demanding reparations and yet the preventing of the rehabilitation of German industry continued—the goose, though killed, was to continue laying golden eggs.

Ruined Germany Ruins Europe.

Slowly it dawned upon the diplomats—first upon the English, then upon the others—that a ruined Germany meant a ruined Europe. The world is economically so closely knit together, that one nation cannot go down to the abyss without pulling the others along with her—it is a unit, the component parts of which are mutually interdependent. John F. Sinclair, a western banker, who has recently returned from Europe, writes in "The Nation" of January 18, 1922: ". . . having in mind a United Europe, the German reparation payments should be changed so as to provide for either a suspension for five or more years, or a total cancellation of all payments, both principal and interest. It is not possible to figure out an equilibrium for Europe so long as this large threatening cloud overhangs."

And so, Germany too has been invited to the Genoa Conference. Undoubtedly, the new policy adopted towards her will be in consonance with the plans suggested by Sinclair. Here again, the victor will assist the vanquished to rise. The triumphant have decided not to follow up their victory lest it turn out to be one of those about which it has been said: "Another such victory and we are done for."

Sees no change of Heart.

Lest we be misunderstood let us state emphatically right here that we are not of the belief that the rulers of the world have undergone a change of heart. We are aware of the fact that at the conference tables they will exact the utmost possible concessions from Russia in return for the extension of credits, resumption of international relations and possible recognition. We also fully realize that in the future, as in the past, they will not permit a single opportunity to slip by, of harassing, interfering with or attempting to overthrow the Bolshevist regime. Nevertheless, we also recognize that as a result of the conference, Russia will be afforded a breathing spell, a means of rebuilding its ruined industries.

We know full well that the resumption of trade relations with Russia is intended primarily (1) to restore Russia as a source of raw materials for Europe. John F. Sinclair, in the article referred to above, states in part: "It will be necessary for Europe to save Russia in order that Russia can save Europe. . . . Europe's food salvation is Russia"; (2) to provide a new market wherein capitalism might dump its surplus products; (3) as a new method of struggle against the new regime Russia established. Having failed to crush Soviet Russia by means of the sword, the capitalist governments will now attempt to crush it with kindness. As our liberals would say: "Reaction has had its day, now the liberal policy is to be adopted." Yet we can face this new venture of our capitalist friends fearlessly and bid them a God Speed. Whatever the motives of our rulers, every cargo of products poured into Russia will but strengthen the new regime, every machine will but assist in increasing productivity—one of the requisites of the higher order.

Now, as to Germany. Undoubtedly, in adopting a milder attitude towards Germany, the victorious Entente but hopes to stave off the inevitable breakdown of the entire capitalist machinery. Nevertheless, this will not be without its benefits: it must bring home to masses of workers the lesson of the interdependence of nations and thereby help to break one of the weapons of the bourgeoisie—the bugbear Nationalism.

True, the postponement, decrease or cancellation of the German indemnities are intended for the purpose of stabilization of the existing order. Germany, being the key to central Europe, its stabilization is the prerequisite to the stabilization of Central Europe. Hence, this leniency towards Germany. But then this will not be without its effects on the proletarian masses of Germany. It will remove one of the main causes for the acquiescence of the German working masses to their present deplorable condition. It will tend to shift to the background the problems of "saving the fatherland" and bring to the fore the Class Struggle.

All Hostility to Vanish.

It now remains but to point out that while the various sections of the bourgeoisie approach the problems of economic reconstruction from somewhat different points of view, depending upon their economic interests—thus for example, French statesmen still insist on the continuation of the "blood and iron" policy towards both Russia and Germany, while England counsels moderation—all of them, without exception, agree on one fundamental. As if by tacit agreement, they all ignore the root of all evils of our social make-up—the exploitation of one man by another. And indeed it is perfectly natural for the ruling class and its spokesmen not to scratch beneath the surface to the very root of the evils. Such an act would necessitate the admission that society is divided into two hostile camps—exploiters and exploited—and consistency would then demand the abdication by our rulers of their places of privilege—an act never yet recorded in the annals of history. This final step must be left to the proletariat—the direct offspring of the bourgeois mode of production. It constitutes the only force in modern society which, by ultimately acquiring political supremacy, will abolish the cause of all our social evils—exploitation. "In proportion as the exploitation of one individual by another is put an end to, the exploitation of one nation by another will also be put an end to. In proportion as the antagonism between classes within the nation vanishes, the hostility of one nation to another will come to an end."

Workers to Reconstruct Society.

Yes, the International Proletariat alone is capable of reconstructing society on a sound basis. Daily it is growing ever more conscious of the task which history has imposed upon it. It is gathering its forces, clarifying and unifying its ranks in preparation for the final conflict. Capitalism may succeed by manoeuvering and dickering to prolong its existence a little longer. But its doom is sealed—its end is near. "Its fall and the victory of the proletariat are equally inevitable."

AMONG OUR READERS

ISN'T IT FUNNY?

Editor, The Worker.—It's funny, n't it, what a fuss the capitalist press makes over the death of a pope or a banker? Especially when one of these parasites meets his doom by some accident, which is indirectly or directly attributable to the characteristic negligence of the grafting politicians who rule the city.

Only a short time ago, a well-known banker, A. Barton Hepburn, experienced a mishap at the Fifth Avenue and 23rd Street crossing, which resulted in death.

Immediately the leading capitalist newspapers were full of details regarding the incident, and questions were asked as to why the underground passageway, which was being constructed there, has not been completed. Investigations were clamored for, and columns were devoted daily to this trivial affair.

Workers who read the capitalist sheets cannot help but reflect over the solicitude displayed by the press over this accident. Would the papers have been aroused in the same manner if some plain worker who toils in the factory had been the victim. Most certainly not. Just think of the rmy of workers maimed, crippled, illed outright in the industries be- ause of the greed and indifference of xploiters of the stripe of the de- eased Hepburn. And as if to prove hat bankers belong to one class and workers to another class who do not deserve any consideration, here is a little item tucked away in an obscure corner of the "Times," which is a cold-blooded, cynical expression of capitalist regard for the "welfare" of the workers:

"A man is killed by industrial accidents every six minutes, and one is injured every fourteen seconds. The total of fatal accidents last year was over 25,000, while 600,000 were more or less seriously injured. The average age of those killed was 37 years, which left a life expectation of thirty years. If the average income of these workers be placed at $1,000, which is conservative, each death means a loss of $30,000, which comes to the staggering total of $750,00,000.

"In the State of Wisconsin alone there was an average of 15,000 industrial accidents a month, which has been estimated to mean a total of 2,870,000 days lost. Massachusetts re- orted 180,000 accidents last year, ennsylvania 668,000 accidents and 0,000 deaths and California 100,000 ccidents and 440 deaths. A large ortion of these deaths and accidents e probably preventable. More than ,000 people are killed, for instance, very year by falls from ladders."

Isn't it funny?—L. L.

The General Strike

By LEON TROTZKY

In his "Terrorism and Communism."

The general strike is only a mobilization for the proletariat and its setting up against its enemy, the State; but the strike in itself cannot produce the solution of the problem, because it exhausts the forces of the proletariat sooner than those of its enemies, and this forces the workers to return to the factories. The general strike requires a decisive importance only as a preliminary to a conflict between the proletariat and the armed forces of the opposition, i. e., to the open revolutionary rising of the workers. Only by breaking the will of the armies thrown against it can the revolutionary class solve the problem of power—the root problem of every revolution.

The general strike produces the mobilisation of both sides and gives the first serious estimate of the powers of resistance of the counter revolutions. But only in the further stages of the struggle, after the transition to the path of armed insurrection, can that bloody price be fixed which the revolutionary class has to pay for power. But that it will have to pay with blood, that, in the struggle for the conquest of power and for its consolidation, the proletariat will have not only to be killed, but also to kill—of this no serious revolutionary ever had any doubt.

Marseilles Congress of French Communist Party Calls Workers of France to War on War

By HEINI NEUMANN

[Written especially for "The Worker"]

The Communist Party of France held its first National Congress in Marseilles during Christmas week 1921.

After the departure of Longuet and Renaudel in Tours in December 1920, the young party had devoted 12 months to its establishment on a firm basis and had accumulated its first experiences.

After Tours it was faced by enormous tasks of organization, as the report of the Comité Directeur to the Marseilles Congress interestingly shows.

Together with Longuet and Renaudel the majority of the deputies and propagandists, many intellectuals and officials of the party went over to the Dissidents.

They took the cash, the archives, the newspapers and a considerable portion of the organization apparatus with them. These deficiencies had to be repaired by intensive detail work.

In Marseilles there were 350 delegates who represented 94 district federations with 120,000 members. The party is by far the strongest in France; it groups about itself the nucleus of the working masses of the country.

Alongside it, the two unimportant groups of the Socialists (tendency 2½) and the "French Socialists" belonging to the Second International play practically no part.

See Crystallization at Work

Altho the organic building up of the party has gone very far, it is still in the process of political transformation, of crystallization to a clear and serried section of the Third International.

The Marseilles Congress was a stage in this process in which the party took up various problems placed before it by the present situation. In the debates at Marseilles the various tendencies within the party attempted to form a common platform, a basis for work in the future. The discussions were often of a very lively nature. Differences of opinion on various subjects clashed.

However, the general impression was such as to remove completely any thought of a serious endangering of unity—a split in the party. Only isolated comrades and small groups such as that of the "Journal du Peuple" are in fundamental opposition to the party.

The Congress rejected all of the propositions put for it by these groups. Frossard declared, "Those who combat the policy of the party thereby automatically exclude themselves from the party."

Loriot Hits Wobbling

Loriot, on the other hand, criticised the irresolute policy of the party executive against such Right tendencies and reproached it with the fact that a sheet such as the "Journal du Peuple" could appear with the collaboration of prominent members of the Communist Party.

On the very first day during the discussion on the report of the executive committee of the party, there ensued a long and in part angry debate on the interior situation of the party and the reorganization of the Central Committee.

Loriot introduced a resolution which proposed the transformation of the Comité Directeur in the direction of increased centralization. A presidium of five members was to be formed from among the 24 members of the Committee which should have charge of the political leadership in order to do away with the hitherto prevailing overburdening of the members of the Central Committee with technical and administrative tasks.

Rappoport and other comrades attacked this motion of Loriot. They accused him of desiring an oligarchical centralism. As a substitute motion a motion of Frossard was adopted which in large degree curtails the powers of the Committee of Five.

Trade Union Question Important

The most important question before the Congress was that of the trade unions. The Congress was to decide whether Communists organized in the trade unions are obliged to spread Communist propaganda, to be active for the Communist goal and to diffuse the influence of the Communist Party among the workers organized in the unions.

This problem, which perhaps exists in no other country in the world has been brought up by the unique character of the French trade-union movement.

The organized workers are very distrustful of all political parties as a result of the reformist past of the Socialist Party.

They obstinately adhere to the Amiens resolution which proclaims the "neutrality" and "autonomy" of the trade unions and their independence of all political parties.

Far be it from the French Communists to infringe upon the independence of the trade unions or to thrust them under the sovereignty of the party, as the party's enemies falsely maintain.

However, an increasing number of the party's members realized that this situation cannot go on indefinitely and that the inactivity of the Communists organized in the trade unions, their timidity to work for the Communist goal must come to an end.

The Comité Directeur laid before the Congress theses on this problem. Altho these theses allow very much for the historical traditions of the trade-union movement and its desire for independence, they were severely attacked. Subsequently the theses of the Comité Directeur—after they had been considerably amended in committee in favor of the "autonomy wing"—were adopted by a vote of 3,963 against 372.

Take Up Peasant Problem

As a result of the fact that France is largely of a peasant structure, the discussion on land propaganda was of very great importance.

As a whole, unanimity prevailed as to the necessity of drawing the small peasants together with the workers into the front of the class-struggle against the Capitalist Republic.

In the theses on the agrarian question the old idea of Guesde is again brought forward, that it is necessary to maintain intact in the party's program alongside the measures necessary for the seizure of power, the usufruct of the small peasant's property in the transition period.

Provincial delegates from the agricultural provinces made important statements as to the situation among the French peasant masses.

The representative of one of the "departements" stated: "Our peasants are by instinct revolutionary, but they are insufficiently educated. The revolution cannot be made without them. One must have seen with what interest the peasants attend our propaganda meetings.

"However, our rural propaganda is not easy. To-day the peasants have become well-to-do land owners. After the war there set in a period of enrichment which made our work more difficult."

In opposing these statements, Vaillant-Couturier pointed out the miserable condition of the rural wage-laborers, who live in wretched hovels, are systematically poisoned by alcohol and who eke out a beggarly existence on a starvation wage. We must fight for the eight-hour day for these workers. Vaillant-Couturier sharply attacked Blanc's statements.

Exposes Legend About Riches

He stated that the legends of the enrichment of the peasants are of the same nature as the other legends of the enormous wages in the cities. He gave numerous examples of the difficulties with which the French peasant has to contend. The mortgage burden is continually growing. Taxes are increasing.

Rappoport and various others protested against the passage in the theses which speaks of the granting of "perpetual usufruct" to the small peasants. Unity was obtained on the following:

"The usufruct of the soil will be guaranteed to the peasants until they renounce the parceling out of the soil as a result of their experience with collective ownership on large estates."

The War Against War

[illegible]

[illegible] the Congress [illegible] and Renoult that in case of war or even of danger of war the party should lead the masses to resistance with all the resources at their disposal, going as far as general strike and armed uprising.

This conclusion is of extreme importance for the international working class when it is considered that France is the land of the strongest militarism.

Big Literature Department of Workers Party to Meet Demands of Radical Hosts

A capital of $5,000 to finance the establishment of a literature department of the National Office of the Workers' Party is to be raised in loans from the membership according to plans adopted by the Party's Administrative Council.

One of the first decisions of the Executive Committee after the close of the convention was to establish a great literature department in its headquarters.

The committee realizes the value of printed propaganda and at once set to work on the problem of finding ways and means of supplying its own organization and the million and more radicals and revolutionists of the country, with the literature of the world labor movement.

Publish New Works

With the idea of setting at once in motion the machinery of a nation-wide sale of this literature, the director of the department brought to the committee at its last weekly meeting a complete plan for raising a sufficient capital in loans from the party's membership to publish a number of new works and to lay in a complete stock.

The plan, roughly, is to secure the services of all party members in making and soliciting loans from class-conscious workers in sympathy with the party, and from party members. Loans are to be made in denominations of from $3 to $25 and are for thirty days. The loans are to be repaid in literature at a ten per cent reduction to the lender.

All to Push Drive

All party local secretaries are to get behind the drive. They are to be sent receipt books and are to accept the membership loans which are to be forwarded to the National Office. The Department will issue certificates to each comrade making a loan showing he has helped finance the establishment of the literature department.

The literature department is now receiving shipments of books and pamphlets from various publishers. Shelving space is being installed and the department is prepared to fill orders for practically any book or pamphlet of the revolutionary movement. Orders received daily show the party members are boosting the national literature department.

Pittsburgh Scene of New Illegal Raid; Refuse Bail

Pittsburgh.—Israel Blankenstein, charged with violation of the Pennsylvania anti-sedition act, was arrested here on January 25, after his residence had been raided and his papers and other belongings confiscated without warrant.

The district attorney refused to admit the accused to bail and forced him to submit to a preliminary hearing without his being allowed to employ counsel.

Alfred Cahan, attorney for the National Defense organization, applied for a writ of habeas corpus and the hearing was held February 1.

Altho in the hearing on the writ the court declared that there was no evidence of violation of law against the defendant and despite the fact that matter introduced as evidence had been seized in the course of an illegal raid, the writ of habeas corpus was not granted.

The accused was ordered held for the grand jury in $10,000 bail; the court stating that if the grand jury found no additional evidence he would be released. Efforts are now being made to have the bail reduced.

CANNON AND BAKER FREED

Kansas City, Ky.—The indictment under the Lever act against James P. Cannon, well-known in labor circles here, chairman of the Workers' Party, and Charles Baker, of Akron, Ohio, has been dismissed following the sustaining of a demurrer by the Supreme Court. Cannon made some speeches in the coal fields during the strike of 1919 which the local authorities apparently believed came under the provisions of the Lever act, designed to prevent interference with the production of war necessities.

All cases against coal profiteers were long ago dismissed and the section of the act applying to them repealed. For this reason the attack on Cannon and Baker aroused widespread interest.

News from the International Front

Egypt

In a Manifesto issued to the workers of the world by the revolutionary Socialist Party of Egypt, the significance of the struggle against British imperialism is brought into bold relief.

It is plainly stated that the struggle for independence waged by the peoples of the Orient is also a struggle bearing a class character.

The workers of the world are enslaved by one enemy—the capitalist plunderers.

"We, the proletariat, are ready for a long and bitter struggle, are forming our battle lines, are organizing our forces in the trade unions and are bringing together the workers of the city and country. . . . On the victory of Socialism and on the seizure of power by the proletariat depend the independence and the emancipation of the peoples of the Orient. And by the indissoluble union of the workers of the West and of the East we will vanquish our common enemy —capitalist imperialism."

From the above it is evident that the laboring masses of the Orient are turning to the revolutionary workers for guidance. A bitter fight is now being waged against British domination. The country is in the grip of huge strikes and demonstrations.

England

The economic depression in England is more acute than ever before. There are 1,834,000 registered unemployed, and 1,476,000 or 39 per 1,000 of the population in receipt of poor law relief.

Industry is paralyzed, foreign trade is practically at a standstill. The prospects for trade revival are remote and the misery arising from the unemployment is so intense that the public bodies charged with the responsibility of providing relief are bankrupt.

This condition is stimulating the movement for unity among the workers. Negotiations between the Communist and Labor Parties have been reopened. The latter has delegated a special sub-committee to draw up a questionnaire to the executive committee of the Communist Party. This document will be referred to the Party Congress in order that the reply to it come direct from the membership and be final.

There is also some talk of a new Triple Alliance. The possibility of an agreement for closer working between the Trade Unions, the Co-operatives and the Labor Party is being considered seriously in many circles.

Amalgamation of trade union forces is another sign of the general unity movement. The National Union of Ships' Cooks, Stewards and Bakers has amalgamated with the British Seafarers' Union. The new organization will be called the Amalgamated Marine Workers' Union.

France

The splitting tactics of the Yellow Amsterdam International are taking on serious proportions. The reactionary labor leaders are resorting to outright union smashing in order to check the growth of the revolutionary forces in the General Confederation of Labor.

Apropos of this situation, the Executive Bureau of the Red Trade Union International has addressed the following statement to the Amsterdam Trade Union International.

"The attempt to shift the responsibility for the split of the Confédération Génerale du Travail to the Third International and the Red Trade Union International is a remarkable twisting of the facts. Did the Red Trade Union International expel the majority of the railwaymen from the C. G. T.? Did the R. T. U. I. expel 20,000 Tourcoing strikers? Did we throw out a number of unions from the French Employes' Federation or the Federation of Medical Workers, etc.? You know as well as we do who split the C. G. T. Your proposal to prevent the convocation of the minority congress which was called to protect trade-union unity, would have been unacceptable even if it could have been executed. The congress was not called to carry out the split, but to exercise the moral pressure of the organized workers on their leaders of the C. G. T. for unity. The proceedings of the unity congress demonstrated that the revolutionary syndicalists are prepared to do everything within human power to protect the unity of the C. G. T. at any price. Unity can be maintained if the leaders of the C. G. T. renounce the system of expulsions, and in case they do not attempt to reduce the revolutionary minority to silence and forcibly to transform revolutionary workers into reformists.

"In fullest agreement with the unity congress we are prepared to do everything to ensure the unity of the workers organized in the economic field in France. We believe it to be impossible to carry on a discussion on such an important question by means of telegram and radios and again emphasize our readiness to meet together with your representatives. In this connection it is self-understood that both halves of the French C. G. T. must participate in order to discuss before the forum of the international proletariat a question which interests the labor movement in all countries—the question of the unity of the French proletariat."

In every country the Communists are carrying on a vigorous campaign for unity against the capitalists. And in France as elsewhere it is the reactionaries who are fighting these efforts of the Communists and thus rendering inestimable service to the enemies of the workers.

India

The Second Congress of the National Federation of Trade Unions was held in the coal districts of the province of Behar in the first week of last December. A strike of miners had been on before the Congress met.

The mine owners called upon the Government to suppress the holding of the Congress, but the Government was too busy crushing the Nationalist movement to comply with this request.

More than 80,000 workers took part in the demonstration celebrating the opening of the Congress. The 36,000 striking miners and thousands of other workers lingered around the Congress hall during the sessions. Chaman Lal, Secretary of the Trade Union Congress, opened by saying: "India's political subjection is due to its economic subjection, and this the combined might of all organized workers would destroy." Following him, Viswananda, the miners' leader, said: "If the present misery of the workers of India is allowed to continue, then nothing can stop Bolshevism. Let them take heed, because the workers are determined to become the rightful owners of the wealth produced by their labors."

One of the most interesting features of the Congress was that the same Mine Owners' Association which asked the Government to break up the Congress, ended by requesting a hearing before the assembly of the organized workers. Permission to speak before the Congress was granted to the President of the Association, who declared the intention of reducing the working-week to 44 hours, and invited the representatives of the striking miners to open immediate negotiations. Promises were made in the name of the owners that decent houses should be built and schools provided for the workers' children. Still more, a deputation from the owners publicly apologized for having attempted to suppress the Congress, and presented a resolution condemning their own action. This incident shows the strength acquired by the organized workers of India in the short period of their activity.

In the last session of the Congress, two resolutions were unanimously adopted, one appealing to the workers of the world to secure peace and bread for Russia, and the second declaring that "wars can be avoided only by the united efforts of the working-class of the world." More than 100 unions with a total membership of 1,300,000 were represented in the Congress.

Italy

Political reaction, manifold attacks by the Fascisti, active under the open protection of the Government, a general offensive against the labor unions, and a reduction in wages are the order of the day. The answer of the workers to this attack is very feeble. Most of the trade unions belong to the General Confederation of Labor which is bound to the Socialist Party by a treaty of alliance.

Were it not for the driving force of the Communist Trade Union Committee and the instinctive force of the masses themselves, the Italian proletariat would to-day be in virtual peonage. The Socialist Party and the Labor Federation are doing next to nothing. They are hiding their criminal inactivity by attacks on the Communists.

Under pressure of the Trade Union Committee and its special appeals to the Italian Syndicalist Union, the autonomous Railwaymen's Union and the C. G. L. itself, the Verona Congress was called. Here the program of the Trade Union Committee received the vote of a strong minority despite the tricks and manipulations of the bureaucracy.

The slogans of the Communists were:

1. The formation of a united proletarian front.
2. The proletariat should not surrender its gains. On the contrary, it should fortify its position and extend them.
3. Resistance to the threatening extensive attack of the capitalists must be organized instantly by means of setting to work on the preparations for and the carrying out of the general strike.

Portugal

At the last Conference of the General Confederation of Labor it was decided to organize a railwaymen's union. In compliance with this decision, the First Congress of the Industrial Federation of Railwaymen will be held soon.

The rail workers are planning immediate international relations. They believe that the powerful international organization of the capitalists can be answered effectively only by the international solidarity of the workers. The union will be organized along industrial lines.

Lincoln and the Working Class

Abraham Lincoln is perhaps the most esteemed of our Presidents. Next to Lincoln, even Washington, the father of our country, has to take a back seat.

Lincoln's role in the struggle of the emancipation of the negro, his tragic death, and sundry remarks concerning labor, attributed to him have entangled Lincoln in a maze of mythical traditions.

It is not our task to unravel the mythical mysteries and manufactured history concerning any man. At this moment when the workers are so degraded by wage-slavery, when there is so great a need for working class solidarity and a unifed front against the common enemy, a word or two about the role of the working class and Lincoln's dealings with it in the anti-slavery struggle will not be out of place.

Rights, ideals, and attitudes take root in economic conditions. Lincoln represented the ideals of the lower middle class who together with the farmers constituted the majority of the people of the United States. As such he led the fight against "cotton culture"—the period out of which America was just rising. Today, in the epoch of steel culture, we can say that Lincoln was one of the very few in Washington who was fully aware of the fact that it was the workingmen of England who were the heart of the "popular sentiment" in favor of the North. Answering an address of the workingmen of Manchester he declared that the conduct of the English working class throughout the struggle against negro slavery was "an act of sublime Christian heroism which has not been surpassed in any age or in any country."

Charles Francis Adams then in charge of the American Legation in London, replying for Lincoln to the Address of the General Council of the International Workingmen's Association, of which Karl Marx was the leading spirit, said: ". . . . . They (the United States) derive new encouragement to persevere from the testimony of the workingmen of Europe. . ."

Were it not for the wonderful display of international solidarity by the workingmen of Europe, especially of England, the United States would very likely not have weathered the storm of the Civil War. Few of our American workers are aware of the magnificent role played by the English workingmen in the slavery crisis. It was only the heavy hand of the English working class, inspired by the International Workingmen's Association that prevented the government from lining up with the South in the war. It was in the interest of the English capitalists to have the Southern States be independent with tariff regulations of their own which should give England "undisturbed free trade."

The misery and suffering which the English workers were subjected to by the cotton crisis resulting from the Civil War were indescribable. Starvation, wage reductions, hunger-typhus (Marx called it famine-fever), jails, and poor houses could not drive the English workers to the support of the war preparations of their masters. They starved with exemplary patience. Their determination to fight against slavery carried the day, banished the possibility of English intervention, and saved the Union. So terrible were the hardships of the English workingmen that committees were formed in New York "for the purpose of collecting money for the starving weavers in the north of England and thus alleviating their misery."

Today more than ever before is there a need for working class solidarity. The courage and loyalty of the European workers in our crisis in the Civil War should remind us of the debt we, the workers of America, owe to the struggling masses across the ocean. Lincoln's remarks on working class unity are especially illuminating at this moment when we are presenting so divided a front to our common enemy—the capitalist class. Addressing the New York Republican Workingmen's Association, of which he was made an honorary member, Lincoln said: "None are so deeply interested to resist the present rebellion as the working people. Let them beware of prejudice, working division and hostility among themselves. The most notable feature of a disturbance in your city last summer was the hanging of some working people by other working people. It should never be so. The strongest bond of human sympathy, outside of the family relation, should be one uniting all working people, of all nations, and tongues and kindreds."

These words of Lincoln are as true as ever any words were. America's working masses have a world to gain from learning them and living them.

Murder Astir in West Virginia

How would you like to be an officer of a coal miners' union in West Virginia, accused of treason and held for trial in a county where the officials are in the pay of the coal companies and who have shown themselves to be aiders and abetters of cold-blooded murder?

This is what men face to-day who dare to challenge capitalism in its strongholds. The crime of these men is resisting the tyrannies of corporation gunmen protected by corporation politicians.

They can and may be murdered before they ever come to trial if labor does not bestir itself. There are still fools, however, who prate of democracy.

The Genoa Conference

Slowly but surely the Washington Armament Conference is petering out. All eyes are now turned to Genoa. Will America participate? What of Soviet Russia? What will France do? Where does Germany come into this show?

With Lenin announcing his readiness to sit side by side with Lloyd George and even Col. Harvey, many of our noble statesmen are getting hot under the collar. And rightly so. For years the Soviet Government has been attacked with the most hellish devices of abuse and destruction. Now the cursed Bolsheviks are given a place at the conference of conferences, for Genoa will far outweigh Washington and Versailles in political and economic importance. Besides, these Bolsheviks are given a seat at the head of the table. No doubt Russia will be the central issue at Genoa. It cannot be otherwise, since this conference is openly and primarily an economic gathering.

Official Washington has not yet made a decision regarding participation. The whole situation is buried in a maze of contradictions and conflicts. Wall Street being primarily interested in Europe as a market, is ready to debate reparations but not debts. Despite all of our Senatorial outbursts, America will not tolerate a cancellation of the $10,000,000,000 debt of European governments to this country. The [illegible] of [illegible] is of no tangible importance to American diplomacy. The United States is already deeply involved and still [illegible] entangled in world affairs—largely European [illegible]. Whether Washington officially accepts the invitation or not, Wall Street will make its voice heard and influence felt in the [illegible] of matters concerning its interests.

The victors are at a loss and in a conflict as to what is to be done with Germany. It has been well said that the imperialist statesmen must either milk the cow or cut it into joints. The cutting policy prevailed at Versailles. At that time the big industrial capitalists, bloated with gigantic war profits, were the dominant force in international politics. Today the situation is totally different. The industrial capitalists are now debtors who would give their eyes for credit. It was the great commercial crash following the post-war prosperity that has shifted the center of power. At Cannes we had a crash between these two forces. France has suffered less from the commercial crash. Its banks are largely under clerical and military control.

But as the imperialist powers are circling around for position, as they are preparing for new alliances and new wars, the workers of the world are face to face with a great opportunity to score a victory. The Genoa Conference is called to aid in the reconstruction of Europe. Hence the imperialists were compelled to invite Soviet Russia. These cross-currents of capitalist policy have brought us to a point where trade relations with Russia are probable. Russia will come to the Conference prepared to meet the demands and terms of the enemy. We need have no concern for Soviet Russia's conduct at Genoa. It is up to us, the workers of every country, to force the wavering hand of our enemy. Now is the time for all sections of the working class movement to unite in a drive for trade with and recognition of Soviet Russia. The invitation to the Genoa Conference is a great victory for Soviet Russia. It is a greater victory for the workers of the world. Let us all as one make it a greater victory—a decisive victory. Unrestricter trade with and full recognition of Soviet Russia must be our slogan.

Popular As Smallpox

Wonderful are the ways of the capitalist press.

The New York Tribune, commenting on conditions in Cuba as viewed by one Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank, says:

> The banker found no antagonism to Americans during his stay on the island, excepting that friction necessarily resulting when creditors try to collect from their debtors.

Inasmuch as the National City Bank holds a mortgage on Cuba and everything Cuban, a correct interpretation of the above means that Americans, especially American financiers, are slightly less popular than the smallpox.

Hopeful Signs

One of the most clean-cut expressions of loyalty to the Russian revolution we have yet seen is embodied in the resolution on that subject adopted at the recent convention of the Workers' Party of America.

This resolution, dealing with the realities of the situation, recognizes the tremendous importance, of the seizure of power by the Russian masses, to the world's revolutionary workers and its influence in clarifying questions of tactics and policy. It reads as follows:

> The Russian revolution is the first successful uprising of the masses under the leadership of the working-class against private ownership of capitalists and landlords in modern society. For the first time since the establishment of capitalism, the Russian workmen nationalized all the larger industrial establishments and declared the land the property of the nation to be used only by those who work on it with their own hands. Thus, the Russian revolution marks a new era in the history of our times and proves beyond doubt that, once organized in a strong party and conscious of its historic aim, the working-class may be able to seize the power of state in time of a revolution, establish proletarian dictatorship, and abolish private ownership in order to establish the Socialist order.
> Thru the Soviet government of Russia, the government of workers and peasants, being harrassed by constant war on numerous fronts compelled to fight for its very existence against the combined effort of the capitalist states, bled white by economic blockade and exhaustion of its productive forces, saw fit to reintroduce capitalism under state control, the rule of the proletariat remains the supreme power in Russia and the authority of the Soviets is now greater than ever. The Convention of the Workers' Party of America sees in the Russian Revolution the vanguard of all class-conscious workers of the world and the herald of a new era, the era of Workers' Republics.
> Whatever may be the future transformations and adaptations of the Russian Soviet regime, the Convention is fully aware of its colossal role in the stimulation of new thought and new regroupings among the workers of the world. Pledging itself to aid the Soviet Republic in its present crisis, the Convention sends its fraternal greetings to the workers of Russia and to their leaders, the fighters for a communist order.
> LONG LIVE THE RUSSIAN SOCIALIST FEDERATED SOVIET REPUBLIC!
> LONG LIVE THE RULE OF THE RUSSIAN WORKERS AND PEASANTS!

The above resolution indicates that now, since the first flush of almost hysterical enthusiasm engendered by the success of the Russian workers has died away, there is a disposition to learn and apply the very practical lessons in the work of organization and education taught by the great upheaval.

Just Another "Investigation"

Had the Knickerbocker Theater in Washington, D. C., the collapse of which caused the death of a hundred persons, been destroyed by a bomb, the secret service agents would be herding every suspected radical into jail.

Having been caused by defects in construction which those familiar with building operations claim to be the result of graft, various arms of the capitalist government merely prepared for an investigation which will follow sacred precedent and blame no one.

Building laws will be so amended that the contractors will be able to raise their prices without arousing too much indignation and the matter will be forgotten by all except the relatives of the victims of greed and graft.

Award "The Call" the Brass Check

We suggest that Upton Sinclair adds another chapter to his book, "The Brass Check," and that he includes therein the various petty attempts of The New York Call to head off the world social revolution.

We would suggest that special attention be given to the manner in which "The Call" maliciously misinterpreted the facts about the Russian Communist Party Congress.

This report appeared on its seventh page in the issue of Tuesday, January 31. The heading, written in "The Call" office, bears this startling information:

> "LENIN'S PROGRAM ADOPTED, DESPITE ZINOVIEV'S CHARGES OF BETRAYAL OF THE REVOLUTION."

The first paragraph of the article, also very evidently written in the office of "The Call," repeats the declaration set forth in the headline when it says:

> "The new policies of Soviet Russia, sponsored by Nicolai Lenin AND BITTERLY OPPOSED BY ZI- [illegible] OF THE PRINCIPLES [illegible]

Perhaps "The Call" doesn't expect its readers to get any further along than the headline and the first paragraph. William Randolph Hearst never does.

Far along in the third column of "The Call" story, however, after long and careful reading, we find out what Gregory Zinoviev, chairman of the Third (Communist) International really said. Here are his exact words taken from "The Call" itself:

> "The anarchistic elements say that our new economic policy is treachery to the revolution in favor of capital. These are trying to form a Fourth International. But these are weak, powerless groups destined to die out. It is no exaggeration if we affirm, that every victory on the economic front is at the same time a victory on the front of the world revolution."

Thus Zinoviev proclaims Russia's new economic policies a victory not only for the Russian Revolution but for the world revolution as well. The words that "The Call" deliberately puts into Zinoviev's mouth, is a statement of the position of those anarchists opposing the Russian Communists.

It would have been very appropriate instead for "The Call" to have put itself, and the Socialist Party for which it stands, into another element which Zinoviev condemns in this same Call story when he says:

> "The new economic policy of Soviet Russia is a basis for a campaign against the Communist International. The bourgeoisie and the traitors ascribe the difficult economic situation of Soviet Russia, economic decay and the famine, to the proletarian revolution and to proletarian dictatorship. They try to kill the revolutionary spirit of the proletariat by such means."

The working class awards "The Call" the Royal Order of the Brass Check. Hearst's prostitute journalism had better look to its colors. An added argument also for a real daily for the workers.

The Wish of Margot and Her Class

Margot Asquith, she of the many indiscretions—verbal and otherwise—told the reporters who met her as she landed from the Carmania the other morning:

"I admire prohibition. It is a fine thing. I understand that in America now the workingmen report for work on Monday morning."

After all, that is the main thing, and Margot unconsciously voices the great hope of her class which is:

That these rude, uncultured workers will always keep on working—for someone else.

Gary Rule Beats Kentucky Workers; State Troops Come at Company's Call

"Fight and Live!" Is Slogan of Jobless as They Urge Organization

The first demonstration that the Unemployment Council of New York has held since adopting the new policy of organizing the unemployed themselves was full of enthusiasm for the new tactics.

After presenting the fact that only organization counts and that whenever the bosses want to defeat them, they use organization, one of the speakers pointed out that even the government uses the organized power to crush them.

Only Hope is Organization.

"There is only one way to meet them and that is by organization. There is no use of your protesting individually. They won't pay any attention to it. The bosses recognize only one language and that is organized power.

"What do you intend to do then? What do you advise as a way out?"

"Organize!" went up in a mighty shout.

"Very well. We'll organize. That is the only proper method and when [illegible]

[illegible] the unemployed in the hall, numbering about 600 proceeded to organize. An Unemployed Committee of 21 was selected and will direct the affairs of the Organization. Unemployment Headquarters have been opened at 83 E 4th St.

All Unemployed Will Register.

All unemployed will register at headquarters and will be required to do work. It is understood that only by working as a unit and as an organized body will the Organization of the Unemployed be effective.

"When we have organized the unemployed in this city and have linked them up with the 10,000,000 unemployed in the country—then we will have an army that can do things. Then we will form a big union with the workers still on the job and they won't be able to stop us from making this a country of the workers."

This is one of a series of meetings that the Unemployment Council intends holding in the next few weeks.

Activity is being planned for the unemployed, since it has become apparent that the authorities will do nothing for them.

During the French Revolution the workers had for their slogan "We will live and eat or fight and die."

But the unemployed workers of this country have been given a different slogan: "Fight and Live. Work or Compensation."

Ex-Soldiers Want Jobs.

Over half the men present held up their hands when an individual who said he had some jobs to distribute asked how many ex-service men were present at a meeting held Tuesday night in the Labor Temple at the corner of 14th Street and 2nd Avenue under the auspices of the Unemployment Council of Greater New York. With the exception of a few stool-pigeons and curiosity seekers the gathering was composed of unemployed who have recently organized themselves to secure the right to work and live. Speakers urged them to devote most of their efforts to bringing the unemployed into one national organization, to cooperate with the unions and to resist all attempts on the part of the employers and their organizations to use them as strikebreakers.

The executive committee elected at a meeting held Saturday night reported through their chairman and made the following recommendations which were adopted:

1. To send a committee to the Labor Unions and ask their support and co-operation.
2. To tax each unemployed worker five cents per week.
3. To issue Unemployment cards.
4. To issue Unemployment credentials to committees.
5. To hold demonstration on water front on Feb. 13 at 2 P. M.

The following resolution proposed by the executive committee was unanimously endorsed:

WHEREAS, the interests of the organized workers are closely linked up with those of the unemployed; and

WHEREAS, the employers are using the unemployed to smash the labor unions, reduce wages and increase hours; and

WHEREAS, the Labor Unions are the sole organizations showing any real understanding and giving any support to the movement of the unemployed; therefore

BE IT RESOLVED, That the Organization of the Unemployed expresses its complete solidarity with Organized Labor; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the Organization of the Unemployed will support Organized Labor in all of its struggles with the bosses and will fight against scabbery on the part of the unemployed; and be it further

RESOLVED, That the Organization of the Unemployed, in return expects the Labor Unions to resist all attempts to increase hours and reintroduce overtime at regular pay, in the name of WORKING CLASS UNITY AND SOLIDARITY.

After the report of the executive committee a half hour was devoted to a general discussion of the unemployment problem.

The Steel Trust uses not the peaceable methods of arbitration and conciliation its press agents recommend to the workers. It depends upon force—brutal, ruthless force—to break every strike. Its "justice" is administered, as in West Virginia and Newport, Kentucky, by the type of brutes pictured above, armed by the Steel Trust and owned by the Steel Trust.

The Need of the Jobless Millions

MANIFESTO OF THE WORKERS PARTY

SIX MILLION MEN AND WOMEN IN THE UNITED STATES HAVE NO WORK.

No employer wants their services. Their income is cut off and misery and despair is their portion.

The warehouses are filled with the products of labor but the unemployed lack the necessities of life. There is a need for thousands of homes but building tradesmen walk the streets.

In the mid-west the farmers are burning their corn. There is no market for it altho myriads are hungry.

PROSPERITY PROPHETS SILENCED

The prophets of post-war prosperity have long since been silenced; even the callous publicists of capital no longer raise the cry of "more production" in the face of an army of workers idle because they have listened to and obeyed the advice of their masters' spokesmen.

The vision of a better day for labor after the war has faded. The crimson debauch of war is over. This is the morning after. It is time for the workers to take stock of the entire social system, of themselves and of the immediate needs of the hour.

THE BLOOD-STAINED PROSPERITY

The world-wide condition of unemployment prevailing in 1913-14 was brought to a sudden end by the world-war with its tremendous demands upon labor for the machinery of destruction.

Millions of workers were removed from production and became consumers and destroyers.

Factories re-opened, miners were busy as never before in the fields and forests the workers were driven at top speed. The United States experienced the greatest prosperity in its history.

True, it was a blood-stained prosperity but no one cared except a few whose complaints were drowned by the clang of the jail-doors as they closed upon them.

The workers forgot their recent misery and did not realize that capitalism had ended unemployment [illegible]

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE I. W. W.

Nothing has occurred more to be regretted since the formation of the Industrial Workers of the World than the oversight which happened when the organization overlooked sending authorized delegates to the Congress of the Third International held in Moscow, Russia.

The I. W. W. was one of the remarkable exceptions in the invitations extended to parties and organizations throughout the world. In truth, the I. W. W. was the one recognized economic labor organization included in the list.

To have been invited to send representatives to Russia should have met with an immediate and unanimous response from the I. W. W. It being a revolutionary organization, was most certainly interested in learning the facts and the effect of a great country, where the world's greatest revolution had recently transpired and the building of a new society was in process. Cavalry and Tanks Used by Troopers; Civil Officers Say State Militia Not Needed; Newport State Legislator Protests to Harding

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT)

NEWPORT, Ky.—This little steel town has for the last two months been the scene of a bitterly fought struggle between the Andrews Steel Company, a subsidiary of the steel trust, and its former employes.

A history of the struggle here gives one an accurate knowledge of the methods used by the steel corporation in every section of the nation when its long-suffering slaves engage in one of their periodical revolts.

The story of what has taken place includes a shut-down to force the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin [illegible] Workers to abandon their organizing campaign, the importation of strikebreakers, detective agency gunmen, the enjoining of strikers as soon as the Andrews plant was placed on the u[illegible] list, the fortifying of the company property, the installatio[illegible] machine-guns and other military equipment by the compan[illegible] constant provocation of the strikers by the company guards [illegible] form of sudden volleys fired upon pickets, the bringing in [illegible] companies of state troops and the usurpation of civil author[illegible] the military.

The company decided to attempt the resumption of operatio[illegible] December 27, after the shut-down following their demand that all [illegible]ization of the so-called unskilled steel workers cease.

Having allowed their imported thugs a free hand during the [illegible] been forced to erect iron-covered shelters to protect themselves from the fire of the guards, the company officials apparently believed that their provocative acts, upon the resumption of operations with strikebreakers, brought in by auto from Cincinnati, would lead to reprisals; therefore on December 19, the company officials appealed to Governor Morrow for troops, alleging with fine irony that the city and county officers had failed to control the situation.

Governor Morrow, upon receipt of the call, sent the following telegram to Judge Caldwell of the Campbell County Court:

Will you please report by wire conditions surrounding strike at the Newport Rolling Mill covering the danger of loss of life and the power of the civil authorities of Campbell County to preserve law and order?

After a consultation with Sheriff Joseph Dietz, Commissioner of Public Safety Christian Ebert and County Clerk William Millius, Judge Caldwell sent a reply to the governor's wire which read:

We believe civil authorities of Campbell County are able to preserve law and order at the present time.

The sheriff had already been asked by the company executives to send in a request for troops and had referred the matter to Commisioner Ebert who refused on the ground that no military protection was needed for the well-armed guards of the corporation.

Five days afterward the state troops were in Newport.

On their march to the plant they stopped long enough to set up a machine gun with the evident intention of showing the crowd of strike sympathizers, among whom were many women and children, that they meant business.

Following the arrival of the troops, the strikebreakers and guards, as is always the case, became bolder. What the strikers claim was a deliberate program of intimidation and provocation was indulged in with the troops always on hand to rescue and protect any company thug in danger of getting a taste of his own medicine.

Conditions existing here parallel recent disturbances in West Virginia, reaching the extent of civil war, altho the trouble has been confined to a much smaller area. The capitalist press has given but little publicity to the situation, principally because it is such a flagrant case of the state authority fighting the battles of the steel trust and because the methods used cannot stand the light of day. Any unusual publicity would attract attention and this is the last thing that the corporations heads and their understrappers holding state office desire.

February 4, however, the situation came to a climax. The company organized a parade—in which 450 state troops took part—composed of members of the local chamber of commerce and other business organizations. According to the statements of militia officers and company officials, the parade, which marched thru all the principal streets and the working class district, was designed to impress and overawe the strikers. That it was deliberately provocative cannot be doubted.

The show of military strength did not frighten the strikers who continued picketing the company plant. As a result of the hostile demonstration by the company forces, however, a crowd of men, women and boys, gathered before the mill gates

Sir Thomas Confesses He Helped Break Triple Alliance Strike Fearing British Soviet Rule

By ARTURO GIOVANNITTI

The Right Honorable J. H. Thomas is one of those distinguished labor statesmen of the post-bellum British order, whose constructive leadership, farsighted patriotism and sober judgment was supposed to bring about what next to a cock's egg and a sure cure for baldness is the most astounding feat in the world—a peaceful social revolution.

In order to do this with a perfect knowledge of his subject, Mr. Thomas went a couple of years ago on an exploratory expedition into the wilds of Soviet Russia [illegible] managed by the Communist International.

Had live members with a receptive mind and a desire to learn attended the Congress, with voice if occasion demanded, the members of the I. W. W. in other parts of the world would now have a better understanding of Communism at work, a realization of the Dictatorship of the Proletariat, during the transitory period after the overthrow of the Capitalist System, which will bring the culmination of the class struggle, finally developing into an Industrial Administration.

Every great mind in Russia knows that this is the end to be attained. It is the thing for which the I. W. W. is organized; the ideal for which some of our members lost their lives and many thousands have been imprisoned, for which most members have fought and suffered.

There are many hundreds of our members here in Russia, most of them have fought valiantly with other revolutionists. Their efforts have been appreciated, coupled with the fact that the I. W. W. has a revolutionary record, not only in the United States but wherever it is organized. This is the reason the I. W. W. was invited to send delegates t the Congress of the Third International, where they could have beer seated as advisory delegation witt the same official standing as any organization with political tenets.

The delegates could have later attended the Congress of the Red International of Labor Unions, and found a place to become a part of the world labor movement. It is immaterial to the I. W. W. as a revolutionary labor organization whether its headquarters are in Chicago, Ill., or in Moscow, Russia. Nor does it matter whether its officials speak the predominant language of the United States or not. In this country, which is a fifth of the world's surface, with an aggregate population of a hundred and fifty million people, the first great stage of the [illegible] is accomplished.

Early Release from Slavery.

[illegible] a diligent effort is being [illegible] to organize along comprehen[illegible] industrial lines. The political [illegible] of the workers is nothing [illegible] the physical protection of [illegible]. With Russia, the Com[illegible] Party and the Red International of Labor Unions, the I. W.W. [illegible] unite its members and its [illegible]; this should be the action [illegible] radical organization, for [illegible] matter, of every labor party, for [illegible] an early release from the bondage of wage-slavery. Every red-blooded member should feel that everything done to improve conditions in Russia is done for himself, for those in prison in every land, and for the organization of which he is a member.

That economic conditions here are not what they should be is not entirely the blame of the Russians, who fought four years in terrible war, three years in desperate internal conflict, its a vast territory stricken with famine, in all suffering a loss of many millions of valuable lives. These awful things have decimated the workers of railroads, factories, mines and farms. The fact that they are not further on the way to complete success is a fault equally mine and yours and of every worker, for the strength that we have withheld from Russia. It is true that the workers of England, by the threat of a general strike, prevented a war of the Entente; it is true that the I. W. W. expelled several thousands of its members because a few of the Marine Transport Workers' branch at Philadelphia loaded ships with munitions of war intended as thought for Wrangel's forces. But these are minor things. Our full duty will not have been done until we line up as a integral part of the International Revolution which has naturally established its headquarters in Russia. Here we find what is closer to our preamble and principles than any other movement in the world, be it the Red Syndicalists of France, Freie Arbeiter and Syndicalists of Germany, or the Federalist movement of Spain and South America, though all are as much indebted to the Russian Revolution as is the I. W. W. Here the first stage of the revolution, the overthrow of Capitalism and a protected foothold for the workers has been won, not of Russia alone, but of the entire world. With the support of this great stronghold the revolution in other countries will be that much easier.

Delay Blot on History.

With this revolutionary world center the I. W. W. should unite in full strength without question and without hesitation. The Communist International is the direct action instrument for the overthrow of political power of the capitalist class. With this the I. W. W. is true to its sacred ideals and its glorious history. The Red Trade Union International is the world-wide organization of the workers for the economic struggle towards the same great purpose. The Industrial Workers of the World should not stain its history with a single day of delay in joining the Red International of Labor Unions.

The Russian Workers' Republic eagerly expects a full delegation of live, open-minded, revolutionary workers to represent the I. W. W. at the Fourth Congress of the Communist International [illegible]

Workers of America!

MANIFESTO OF THE WORKERS PARTY

Sacco and Vanzetti are sentenced to die. The trial judge has refused to grant a new trial. The case will now go to the State Supreme Court. MEANWHILE, WE MUST ACT!

We must let the courts know that the toiling masses of America will not stand idly by while two of their number are foully murdered by law. THE EXECUTION OF SACCO AND VANZETTI WILL BE NOTHING SHORT OF LEGAL MURDER.

The evidence in the case shows conclusively to any fair minded person that these men did not commit the crime for which they are charged. We are convinced that the only crime committed by Sacco and Vanzetti is the crime of opinion. They hold views about the present order of society that are not to the liking of the powers that be.

This IS A COMMON CRIME. Millions of other workers are opposed to the present capitalist order; but the ruling class cannot execute them all. Ever and anon a few must be selected as the victims to furnish object lessons for the rest.

The day is gone when men can be executed openly for the crime of opinion; but in the Southland, Lynch law disposes of the lives of men during the darkness of night in secret places while in the North and West the powers that be can use popular prejudices to fasten crimes upon innocent workers in order to bring them to execution in a seemingly legal manner.

Sacco and Vanzetti committed no crime punishable by laws. In the minds of the ruling powers, there are millions of you, fellow-workers, union men and non-union men alike, who are guilty of the same crime that Sacco and Vanzetti really committed.

You are opposed to the system that makes bloodthristy plunlerers of a few and helpless victims of the great mass of wage workers.

If Sacco and Vanzetti go, and we show no protest, if we don't fight to save them, then there is no telling who will be next.

Arise, ye workers, and show to the masters, whose hands are dripping with the blood of thousands of innocent victims, that from now on we will call—"HALT!"

Save Sacco and Vanzetti! Attend the meetings and send, in voices millions strong, to the authorities of Massachusetts, a demand for a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti. Raise the funds to push the case thru every step of the legal maze of court procedure.

"You can say with certainty that hardly five per cent of the inhabitants of certain places will live till Spring. Ninety-five per cent will perish if no food is procured for them in time. The people still have a little hope, they are waiting and believe that help will come from somewhere. Anybody coming from the city or neighboring village is immediately surrounded by those inquiring about aid. It is difficult to tell them the truth—and thus destroy the hopes of the dying. Even news that seed will be furnished for sowing does not enthuse the peasants. 'Who will be here to do the sowing,' they say, 'when we are dead.'"

Ireland

The possibility of a national strike being forced on the Irish dockers is still the order of the day.

For another moment or two the shipping employers are hesitating and marking time.

But they may move at any moment.

After wrangling for several days with the I. T. and G. W. U., the dock bosses decided not to enforce the new cut for another week or so. They postponed the Conference.

Probably they will make new proposals and ask that those proposals be submitted to the men.

That will mean more delay. But in the meantime the status quo and the present wage must be maintained.

The bosses have offered the N. U. of Dockers to reduce the cut from 2/- to 1/- a day. This is being ballotted upon by the members of the English Union.

It does not necessarily affect the docker members of the I. T. and G. W. U.

EDITOR THE WORKER:

Enclosed please find front page of our journal for the month of January. Pay particular attention to Debs and "Radicals Form American Workers' Republic," and then look up that part of the New York graft investigation of the Building Trades which took place about a year ago before the Lockwood Committee, and I believe you will find where our Executive Board testified (one at least) to taking fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500) from the Marble Contractors' Association, and then see if you can't at least write us a good editorial on "Man who went to jail for his fellow-man," and "Man who betrayed his fellow-man and stayed out of jail."

Now if you think it all right, go ahead, and if you don't, it's just the same to me. I have been fighting this bunch for a year and they are trying every way to put the screws onto me, so if you would not mention my name, I would be obliged to you. Hoping that I may do you some good in the future, I remain,

Your Comrade,

FOR THE NEW DAY.

EDITOR, THE WORKER:—Glad to see The Worker appear, as I think no greater task confronts the working class in this country, than the building up of some means of communication between the workers of the different parts of the country.

The workers need some organ that will voice their wrongs, east, west, north and south, not alone weekly, but daily, some fearless mouth piece with a class program.

This position can be filled, must be filled in fast, by a paper showing how and where the worker is robbed.

Yours for the New Day.

lord of the admiralty, a liar, with whatever other qualifications Russian Communists and Commissars use instead of the democratic "damn."

"Do you mean to tell me," Thomas thundered, "that a British peer would tell a lie?"

Since then Mr. Thomas has traveled far and wide and up and down at the same time.

He has denounced the bloody dictatorship, he has been the guest of Samuel Gompers, he has knifed in the back the monster of the Triple Alliance, he has refused to fight his majesty's government for such a paltry reason as increasing and standardizing the miners' wages, and he has become President of the Amsterdam Trade Union International, Secretary-Treasurer of the Second Socialist (Canary-Yellow) International, and Privy Counsellor to his majesty the king, the emperor, defender of the faith, etc.

So many, indeed, are Mr. Thomas' titles, degrees and honorificences, that should he append them all to his honorable name he would need a visiting card as large as a desk blotter.

Attacked by "Communist"

It appears, also, that in the course of Mr. Thomas' career he was violently attacked by The Communist, a London publication, which accused him of having shamelessly betrayed the Miners' Strike, by preventing the general down-tools of the Railway Workers in their support.

Mr. Thomas (or should we rather say His Lordship?) was naturally incensed and infuriated, and forthwith sued The Communist for libel and defamation of character, asking a monetary reparation that ran up into the thousands of pounds.

The principle of the suit was not that His Lordship Thomas had been libelled as a plain citizen or as a privy councellor, but as a labor leader, and therefore the ethics and propriety of his actions were not to be committed to a juri d'honneur of the British Trade Union Congress, or of the Amsterdam Trade Union International or of the Second Socialist International, but to one of his majesty's own appointed judges and selected juries. Which, in the light of what Mr. Thomas had said to Chicherin, was quite proper, logical and fitting.

But let us refrain from comment and merely state the facts. The facts came out during the examination of His Excellency Thomas, which we transcribe verbally, if somewhat condensed.

Would Defeat the Revolution

Question: "Are you by conviction a chief of the constitutional tendency in the British Labor Movement?"

Answer: "I am."

Q.: "Wouldn't you think it wrong on your part to take the position of a chief in a revolutionary movement subversive of our constitution?"

A.: "I think I would consider it wrong."

Q.: "If you were in a position to defeat a movement which you consider revolutionary, wouldn't you attempt to defeat it?"

A.: "I would take steps to defeat it."

Fearing that this would not be sufficiently clear, Mr. Thomas went further, in his explanations. After the reading of that part of his speech of April 6th, 1921, to the Railroad Workers in which he condemned the strike of the Triple Alliance on account of its revolutionary consequences or possibilities, Mr. Thomas was asked, and answered, these highly illuminating queries from the bench, and answered them forth rightly:

Q.: "Do you mean to say that in your estimation Mr. Lloyd George would have been driven to resign and that the monarchy would have come to an end?"

A.: "That is just what I meant to say."

Q.: "So then, England would have been no longer governed by the King and the Parliament. By whom then?"

A.: "I was foreseeing a Soviet government."

Q.: "Do you mean to say that if the Triple Alliance had gone on strike, a Soviet government would have been set up?"

A.: "I said there was no other alternative."

Q.: "Is it then your contention that you saved the country from a revolution?"

Finds the King Tolerant

A.: "I think I did."

Q.: "That the country was saved by the cancelling of the strike order?"

A.: "Yes."

It was about this time, from what we can gather, that it became known that the Hon. Thomas had been elevated to the rank of Privy Councellor and Lord High Keeper of the Royal Bed Pan, or whatever other office is attached to this exalted dignity.

Having been asked how he could reconcile this role with that of a labor leader, the undoubting Thomas dodged the answer by asserting that he had found his majesty fair and tolerant and unbiased on industrial questions, and quite graciously disposed to listen to his (Thomas') pleadings and supplications for a mitigation of the burden of his (the king's) most faithful subjects, the [illegible] way that capitalism [illegible] it—by a war that destroys the surplus labor has created.

HARDER YOU WORK, SOONER JOBLESS

Under our system of production and distribution which rules our daily lives these periods of unemployment occur periodically. The more the workers produce in the ever-shortening periods of capitalist prosperity, the sooner they are jobless once more.

They receive, because of the displacement of labor by the machine and the enforced competition of worker with worker, just enough in return for their devotion to the masters of industry to enable them to live and reproduce their kind.

The workers send into the world-markets, in addition to their own necessities, an increasing quantity of wealth in the form of commodities in which the capitalists traffic. This process goes on in every capitalist nation; it becomes more intensive every day and every year while the circle of world markets is constantly narrowing as nation after nation advances from the agricultural to the industrial classification.

MARKETS GLUTTED; TOILERS IDLE

When the world markets are glutted the workers walk the streets until the products of their labor—denied them by the rulers, have been consumed or destroyed. This is, in general, the way in which the capitalist system of production operates.

Today, however, we are faced with an apparent contradiction. We were told by the apologists for capitalism that the post-war period would be one of unprecedented prosperity; that the nations of all the world would be clamoring for our products and that factories, mills and mines would be running day and night to supply the demand for commodities to replace those destroyed by the war-machine.

The workers were to be happy and contented with much work at high wages; grievances would be adjusted and capital and labor would work together to make this a land of plenty for all. This was the cry of the exploiters while the war was on.

WAR BURDENS STAGGERING

Now the contradiction can be explained. So destructive was the struggle for power brought on by the masters but fought by the workers that not only was the accumulated surplus destroyed but over large areas the whole machinery of production was swept into the furnace; in whole nations what we call industrial civilization has completely disappeared.

The financial burdens of the war stagger the imagination. The war-debts are so large they can never be paid.

The resources of many nations are insufficient even to pay the interest on the debts and the physical and mental status of the toilers has been lowered to a point where it is impossible for them to produce enough, in addition to their own needs, to satisfy the demands of the finance capitalists who hold a mortgage on the world.

STARVATION, MISERY, EVERYWHERE

There is a need for foodstuffs, clothing, housing, raw materials and machinery greater than ever before, but here in the United States, untouched by the war, the productive processes are at a standstill. The world cannot pay for the things it needs. The war destroyed too much.

International exchange is utterly demoralized. The issues of paper money have diluted the life-blood of capitalism—its medium of circulation—until it no longer functions. Instead, it poisons the parent body.

The world is in chaos and disease, starvation and unimaginable misery have the whole continent of Europe in their grasp.

War has at last failed to solve the question of unemployment. It was the last resource of capitalism and the system now confesses its inability to deal with it. The rulers of the world are helpless and afraid in the face of the terrible ruin their insane policies have brought to a suffering working class.

With unemployment the workers—employed and unemployed—must deal. They and they alone can solve the question.

They must organize for the salvation of themselves; for their own protection they must adopt a policy of immediate demands and force their program thru.

There is no saving force in society today except the driving power of the world's workers.

Every utterance and action of the rulers is a confession of bankruptcy. Nothing can save the situation but work.

The offensive against labor must be stopped.

The needs of the starving and freezing multitudes must be supplied by work paid for at union wages.

IF THIS MEANS THE END OF CAPITALISM SO MUCH THE BETTER.

The unemployed must be clothed, housed and fed not by charity but by the government.

But the two final shots were worth the entire cannonade. They were fired by MacManus, one of the defendants, the editor of The Communist.

Hurt $10,000 Worth

"Mr. Thomas, aren't you the Secretary-Treasurer of the Second Socialist International?"

"Yes."

"So you are a Socialist?"

"No."

Whereupon the jury found and the judge ruled, that His Most Worshipful J. H. Thomas, Secretary of the British Railroad Workers, President of the Trade Union International, Secretary-Treasurer of the 2nd Socialist International and Privy Councillor to his majesty the king, etc., etc., has been libelled, defamed, and hurt to the extent of 2,000 pounds ($10,000).

It may work out in England. Whether "The Communist" will pay or not, we don't know. But this sort of thing doesn't go, at least up to now, in America.

The Case of Gompers.

Samuel Gompers, who is councillor to the Civic Federation, and who consorts with the Schwabs and the Garys and dines with the President, would never attempt to collect two thousand cents from a Communist paper.

Maybe he thinks it is beneath his dignity; maybe he has not so much faith in the solvency of American communist papers, and maybe also, he has more decency than any of the British equivalents who went to Russia and shook the hands of Lenin, and called him comrade.

Or perhaps he does not think that American courts would feel qualified to pass on a question of labor ethics, principles and tactics.

This last hypothesis is worth [illegible]

We will risk the 10,000 Dollars, or the alternative of going to jail for 10,000 days, altho we cannot afford either.

The next time Mr. Thomas is chased out of England by the wrath of his rank and file, in the name of his majesty, of his holiness Karl Marx, of the Grand Llama, of Senator Lodge and of Landru, let him sue the "Worker" for assault, battery, mayhem, murder and indecent exposure of his most worshipful person.

All of which we synthetize in that epic, but unprintable word of Cambronne!

"…Out Again!" Say … Toilers in Big … Trades Fight

(By our own Correspondent.)

CHICAGO.—"Sold out again", is the way in which the last action of the Chicago Building Trades Council in accepting the Landis' award and submitting to its "open shop" clauses, has been characterized by men working in those trades.

In contrast to the splendid spirit shown by the rank and file who but a few days ago walked off in a body from every construction job where scabs were being employed, and their insistent demand for united action against the scabherding "citizens committee", some unions even voting unanimously in favor of calling a general strike of all building trades to stop this professional strikebreaking, this last yellow act on the part of the labor officials stands out in all its naked shame.

Altho it came as a surprise to many, the proceedings at the last Building Trades Council meeting, where this action was taken, were cut and dried, suggesting that everything really had been previously arranged by the high salaried labor leaders and only came up there to receive its official rubber stamp.

A motion was made to accept the Landis' award, followed by an amendment that all trades who were parties to the arbitration accept the award! thus eliminating the carpenters, painters, plasterers, elevator constructors, sheet metal workers, glaziers and fixture hangers from voting.

On roll call the amendment carried! 22 voting in favor and 5 voting present, the painters delegates being the only ones who protested, stating that they would fight even if they had to go it alone. However, the common interpretation is that that decision will apply to all trades.

The "citizens committee" will now be given free sway to continue its strikebreaking activities. According to statements made by its chairman, the committee has assumed certain obligations toward the scabs brought into town and they must therefore be given preference over union men.

This has been agreed to in principle by the worthy labor leaders thru their acceptance of the award.

The "citizens' committee" has also announced its uncompromising policy toward unions that refuse to submit.

It has declared in favor of the boss-controlled lollypup unions for building trades.

It has its forces organized upon a national scale. It is piling up millions of dollars to hire armed guards for the protection of scabs, and we may rest assured that this committee has no intention of quitting the game before all unions in the building trades have been smashed, if such is possible.

These labor haters and lackeys of high finance have organized their forces on a national scale. It is safe to assume that their self-appointed mission goes farther than only to the building trades.

In the past their slogan has been: "break the unions that refuse to accept the Landis' award".

In the future their slogan will be: break the back of all labor unionism."

Judge Landis has served as a valuable tool in their hands, in framing the award with its open shop clauses. Judge Dennis Sullivan, who in the past has handed down injunctions right and left against the workers, has likewise served as a valuable tool in their hands by his refusal to grant the injunction, asked for by the carpenters, restraining the "citizens committee" from interfering in the building trades dispute.

It is plainly evident on what side the law, the courts and the rest of the governmental forces are, and also that the aggrieved workers can expect no redress from this source.

To many workers who do not understand the class nature of capitalist society, this looks like a gigantic conspiracy against them.

But in reality it is merely the way in which capitalism protects its class interests and its entrenched privilege of exploitation.

The fellow who has been entrusted with union office, who was put there on the pledge that he would always preserve and promote the best interest of the organization, and now played into the hands of the enemy, by selling out to the "Citizens Committee," is the real conspirator.

He is the coward who told us that we were beaten and had better submit before we attempted to put up a fight. He is the yellow traitor that deserves to be kicked out and never allowed to enter a hall where honest union men gather.

The Landis' award, which this gentry have accepted, contains some clauses that will actually mean the death of unionism if they are to prevail.

It says that "there shall be no stoppage of work individually or collectively under penalties prescribed."

It says that "there shall be no restriction against any manufactured material except prison-made."

It says that "in case of scarcity of help non-union men may work with union men until such time as union men may be obtained."

These clauses put the workers entirely at the mercy of the bosses, who will be in a position to cut wages at their own convenience.

Pointing the Road Toward the Better Day for Organized Labor

Showing Signs of Wear

The mask of legality under which the divers methods of suppression are carried out by our exponents of capitalist democracy is becoming transparent enough in spots for even the dim vision of the scissorbill to penetrate.

This is due somewhat to the efforts of the Jeffersonian survivals to make democracy work in a highly developed capitalist country.

The strain upon the legal fabric, already showing the effects of time, is causing large rents to appear.

When, in response to demands that they live up to the letter and spirit of the law, the henchmen of the industrial lords have a law passed that legalizes their oppressive acts and permits them to evade the criticism of the liberal element, a valuable object lesson is furnished in the operation of modern government.

The miners of Kansas, having defended their right to strike with some success and much adverse comment having been made on the administration of the Sunflower state because of the extra-legal methods used to coerce the strikers, the attorney-general of that commonwealth, doubtless acting under instructions from the coal magnates, steps into the breach with the following measure:

> Any person engaged in any unlawful calling whatever, or who shall be found loitering without visible means of support, or who, being without visible means of support, shall refuse to work when work at fair wages is to be procured in the community, or who shall threaten violence or personal injury to fellow-workmen or to employers of labor shall be deemed a vagrant, and, upon conviction thereof shall be imprisoned in the city jail for a period of not less than 10 days nor more than 30 days for each offense, and shall be compelled to work at hard labor until sentence is fully completed.

Should this bill become a Law a striker automatically becomes a vagrant and can be treated as such.

It is little incidents like this that strengthen our contention that the parliamentary machinery of capitalism was set up by a rising capitalist class for its own purposes altho we know that the attorney-general of Kansas would not agree with us.

Another Struggle "Settled"

The struggle of the Chicago building trades against the organized business interests parading as a "Citizens' Committee," has been "settled" thru the surrender of the workers' organizations. Judge Landis has conquered again. Just how is told in another column by our own correspondent.

The Chicago building trades council is just like similar councils in other cities. It is composed exclusively of labor officials.

Many of these are elected by the various district councils of of the building trades' unions, most of them far removed from contact with the rank-and-file workers.

Some of them are big property owners and contractors.

A thoro house-cleaning of all building trades unions has now become a supreme necessity. All crooked officials should be immediately deposed so the rank and file may be able to offer effective resistance to the vicious attempts of the "open shoppers," without fear of being knifed in the back.

The tendency manifested in a number of unions to split away from the building trades council will not solve the problem, no matter how strong the provocation, or how rotten the present council may be. Splits of that kind never did improve any situation.

But the council should be reorganized. Representative building trades council delegates should be elected directly by the rank-and-file workers in the unions, subject to recall any time the union may see fit.

Elections should be carried out on the basis of, for instance, one delegate from each affiliated union, being one for the first 500 members, and one additional delegate for each additional 500 members.

Such a building trades council would be representative of the rank-and-file workers and put complete control in their hands. It would be able to put up a united front against the damnable "open shop."

The present situation has most forcibly demonstrated the utter unfitness of our prevailing form of organization and our methods of struggle.

It has led to fatal divisions within our ranks. New methods of struggle must be adopted, new and more effective forms of organization created. Men who will not shrink from the fight must be put in the responsible positions and thus invigorate the labor movement with a new spirit. Now is the time for all militant workers within the building trades to get busy for the complete amalgamation of their unions.

The Crisis in Germany

It appears that the railway strike and the sympathetic walkouts have been called off by the labor leaders.

The situation in Germany is replete with lessons for the workers of the world. The German workers have met with the strongest opposition and the fiercest repression in their efforts for freedom. They have made repeated attempts to shatter their chains. They have paid a terrific price for every effort. And their efforts have been incomparable in determination and revolutionary in purpose. In the course of the series of struggles, bloodier than any in the annals of the class war, they have lost their best blood, they have lost their most courageous leaders.

Had a strike as effective as this one occurred two years ago it would have unquestionably assumed a sharp, political character. To-day it is limited to narrow channels—devoid of concrete, far-reaching political objectives. And this in spite of the fact that the struggle in Germany is as dominantly political as it is in any country in the world. The German working class is plainly dead tired. It is exhausted from the furious battles it has gone thru.

But the fundamental reason for the plight of the German workers lies in the strong control the bureaucracy has of the trade union organizations. The labor-lieutenants of capital are in league with the capitalists against the workers. As a matter of fact they are contract-bound to sabotage every blow of the workers against their enemies. This was the cause of the 1918 outbreak being a still-birth. This was the cause of the German Revolution failing to materialize. This is the reason for the petering out of the whole series of revolutionary struggles in Germany.

The American workers must be on guard against such a situation in this country. As matters stand to-day we are no better off than the German workers. We cannot be too active in our unions. We cannot watch the labor bureaucrats too strongly. We must make the unions our unions. Then and then only will the unions be organs of militant struggles, organs of freedom and not a fetter on the labor movement in its struggle for better life.

in a counter-demonstration to encourage the pickets.

Militia Routes Crowd.

The militia immediately appeared on the scene and ordered the crowd beyond the dead line, a certain distance from the mill gates arbitrarily fixed by the officer in command.

The crowd did not move and a volley was fired into it, the troops charging with clubbed rifles.

The crowd, now thoroly incensed, fought back and the battle continued for more than an hour, resulting in many minor injuries and ten serious casualties. Two baby tanks and two troops of cavalry were used by the state forces in this battle. The crowd finally dispersed after desperate resistance and the troops patrolled the streets for some time afterwards, revolver in hand, forcing everyone off the thorofares.

Mayor Joseph Hermann was roughly handled when he attempted to intercede with some of the officers in command.

With the exception of the sycophantic business element and the company hangers-on the entire community is incensed by the deliberately planned outrages.

Herman Thompson, Newport's representative in the legislature, sent the following telegram to President Harding after the battle:

> Governor Morrow has sent troops to our town, shooting men and women. Please act.

Curtain Drops on Tragedy.

The curtain is about to drop on this little tragedy. It is only one of many in the America of to-day and it is not considered important enough by the capitalist press to be dignified by a headline. The strike is broken. It was broken not by the company itself but by its tool—the government; broken, as every strike of the workers for the last two years has been broken, for Gary is the government and the government is Gary—the steel trust.

Nothing can close this story of the Newport strike more fittingly than an extract from "The Mixer", a paper published for its employees by the Illinois Steel Works of Joliet, Ill.

It consists of a letter from King Gary to one of his retainers. It was submitted to the paper with joyous abandon by its delighted recipient and it reads as follows:

Gary to His Slave.

To Mr. John L. Doyle:

After your continuous service for fifty years as an employee of the Illinois Steel Company, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, I send you my photograph. We are gratefully appreciative of your faithful and efficient assistance.

E. H. Gary.
9-6-21

This, then is what the worker can look forward in industrial America; in this steel trust kingdom he gets bayonets, machine guns and baby tanks when he revolts; for faithful slaves there is the picture of the master.

Just one thing more. In the last quarter of 1921 the steel trust's net earnings were $19,612,033. Soldiers cost the steel trust, nothing.

PARSONS CHALLENGES LEGION

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Commander A. A. Van Dyke of the Minnesota department of the American legion has been challenged to a series of joint debates on "Americanism" by Carl O. Parsons, national organizer of World War Veterans.

Parsons declared that the present officers of the legion everywhere were aiding "big business" in its war on farmers and labor organizations.

"During my trip east I found post after post of the American legion going to the rescue of big business in breaking the strikes of the workers," he said.

"In West Virginia local attorneys and secretaries of chambers of commerce, as commanders of the legion, are actively taking the sides of the coal companies against the workers. The same thing prevails in other eastern states and as far west as Wisconsin."

Parsons then recited his experiences with the officers of the several legion posts in Kansas, where, he said, "the legion is lined up with the chamber of commerce in its war upon the farmers' organization—the National Nonpartisan League."

TIMBER BARONS SIT PRETTY

SEATTLE.—Here are a few figures on the timber industry which the International Union of Timberworkers vouches for:

Lumbermen are making $8.35 more a day on each man employed than in August, 1921.

Consumers are being charged 29 per cent more for lumber than in that month.

A profit of $2,500,000 is being made each month by lumber firms in the Pacific Northwest.

DETROIT.—Two enthusiastic meetings called to aid the defence of Sacco and Vanzetti, Italian labor men condemned to death in Massachusetts on what is widely considered a frame-up by the enemies of trade unions and radicalism, listened to the exposure by Elizabeth Gurley Flynn of the flimsy evidence on which the men were convicted.

THE ECONOMIC BOOM AND THE LABOR MOVEMENT

By LEON TROTZKY

Thruout Europe the labor movement is showing signs of a new period of revolutionary development. Tho it cannot definitely be stated whether or not we are approaching the decisive conflict, there can be no doubt that the revolutionary curve is steadily going upward.

Capitalism in Europe passed its most critical period in the year immediately following the war.

The acme of the revolutionary struggle in Italy (September 1920) was reached at a time when Germany, Great Britain and France had already overcome the serious stages of the political crisis.

What took place in Germany in March last was but the belated echo of a revolutionary epoch passed by, and not the prelude to a new one.

Capitalism's 1920 Offensive.

Having strengthened its first positions, Capitalism and its various governments adopted offensive measures in the beginning of 1920, thus forcing the labor movement into the defensive.

The Communist Parties became convinced that they were but a small minority, and they appear at times as if isolated from the majority of the working class.

This state of affairs resulted in what is commonly called "the crisis" in the Third International.

At present, however,—as has been maintained before—a change for the better is taking place. The revolutionary attack of Labor is developing; the perspectives of the struggle are widening.

The cause for this change are various and complicated. The basis for it, however, is to be found in the sharp ups and downs of world economics in which is reflected capitalist development during the post-war period.

Rulers Regain Courage.

The period most fraught with danger for the European bourgeoisie was that of demobilization, when the disillusioned soldiers returned and had to be fitted into the process of production.

The first few months after the conclusion of the war created great difficulties which furthered revolutionary development.

But the ruling classes regained their courage and inaugurated both a financial and political policy of considerable magnitude, intended to overcome the demobilization crisis.

The peace budgets of the various states retained the magnitude of war figures. Many enterprises were kept going by artificial means. Many orders were effected merely with the view of preventing unemployment.

Various governments included in their budget subsidies with which the prices of imported meat and grain were held at a certain level.

Economy Undermined.

In other words: the state's indebtedness was increased, the currency inflated, the very basis of economy undermined—all for political ends: to prolong the deceptive war time boom in trade and industry.

These measures provided the captains of industry with the possibility of perfecting the technical apparatus of their main enterprises and of adapting them to the purposes of peace industry.

But the artificial boom found its limits very quickly in the general impoverishment.

Industries producing necessities of life, were confronted with an extraordinarily limited market, which created the first wall of overproduction and retarded the further development of the large industries.

The crisis assumed a tremendous extent and tremendous forms. Incepted in the United States in Spring 1919, the crisis crossed the ocean, reached Europe in the middle of 1920 and thoroly enveloped it by May 1921.

Onslaught Without Leadership.

Thus we see that when the open post-war trade and industrial crisis commenced to develop (after one year of artificial boom) the first attacks of Labor against bourgeois society were nearing their end.

The bourgeois warded off these attacks, partly by means of persuasion and compromise, partly by employing force.

That first proletarian onslaught was rather chaotic, devoid of any definite political aims and ideas, without a well defined plan, without leadership.

Its development and its outcome proved to Labor that a change of its position within bourgeois society is rather more difficult to achieve than it appeared to be during the first months of the post-war protests.

Labor's uniformity in its chaotic state of revolutionary sentiment disappeared rather quickly. Internal differences were beginning to make themselves felt.

The more active section of Labor, the part least bound up with earlier traditions, united in the Communist Parties, being thru experience convinced of the necessity for clearly perceiving one's aims and also for organizational centralization.

The more conservative and less class conscious elements declined, for the time being, to consider revolutionary aims and methods. The labor bureaucracy promptly utilized the state of affairs and regained its [illegible]

Reaction Aid to Crisis.

The trade and industrial crisis in Spring and Summer 1920 broke out, as mentioned before, at a time when both political and psychological reaction had gained a foothold among the workers.

The crisis has undoubtedly increased the discontent of large sections of Labor, it has even at some places resulted in stormy manifestations of that discontent.

But after the defeat in 1919 and the internal differences resulting from that defeat, the economic crisis in itself was no longer able to give the movement the necessary unity and make of it a decisive revolutionary onslaught.

From this we see that the crisis does not influence the labor movement in as regular a manner as it appears to some people.

The political effect of a crisis (not its depth only, but its tendency as well) are determined by the entire political situation and the events preceding and accompanying the crisis, and above all by the previous successes and failures of Labor itself.

In some cases a crisis can be instrumental in rousing the revolutionary activity of the workers, in others it is apt to deaden the militant spirits of the proletariat and, if it lasts very long and demands too many sacrifices of Labor, to weaken not only the offensive energies of the workers, but the defensive as well, and that in an extraordinary degree.

Boom was Artificial.

Now, if this line of thought be following and completed, the following opinion can be arrived at:

If the economic crisis with its wide-spread unemployment and general insecurity had set in immediately after the war, the revolutionary crisis within bourgeois society would have assumed a decidedly more powerful and fundamental character.

In order to prevent this the bourgeois governments endeavored, by means of an artificial boom, to weaken the revolutionary crisis. That means the inevitable has been postponed for a year and a half at the expense of the still further destruction of both the financial and economic apparatus of capitalism.

Tho the crisis gained thus in depth and intensity, it did not coincide with the stormy wave caused by demobilization, but with a time of defeat, of a settling of accounts, when in one camp the masses had to start anew at the very beginning, and in the other were disappointed—all of which was the cause of many splits.

The revolutionary energies of Labor were directed inward and found expression in the formation of Communist parties which have become powerful factors in Germany and France.

Capitalism, which in 1921 artificially prolonged the unreal boom, exploited, once the immediate danger was avoided, the resulting crisis in order to deprive Labor of its gains (the 8-hour day, increases in wages) which in self-defense it had granted during the preceding period. Labor, tho it defended its positions, had to yield in the end.

The idea of conquest of power, of the Soviet system, of a Socialist revolution, naturally receded at a time when Labor was compelled to fight against a reduction in wages, and not always successfully in that.

Workers Retreat in Disorder.

In countries where the economic crisis did not assume the forms of overproduction and wide-spread unemployment, but another, even more serious form, that of selling out the assets of the country and lowering the standard of living of the workers (as for instance in Germany), the energy of Labor expended in increasing wages (while the buying power of currency was steadily decreasing) can be likened to a [illegible]

The German capitalists, together with their brothers in other countries, went over to the offensive. The workers retreated in disorder.

In a situation such as that, the March occurences took place in Germany. The explanation of those events is that the young Communist Party, alarmed at the apparent retreat of the labor movement, made a desperate attempt at utilizing the action of a group of militant proletarians to "electrify" Labor, and, if possible, to develop the action into a decisive battle.

Discusses March Action.

The Third Congress of the Communist International met with the impressions of the March action still fresh in the minds of the delegates. After careful examination the Congress realized the danger resulting from a clash between the "Offensive Theory" and that of revolutionary "electrification" and those deeper processes going on within Labor in connection with both the economic and political changes.

If in 1918-19 there had been in Germany as strong a Communist Party as in March 1921, it is very possible that the proletariat would have already been victorious in January or March 1919. But a Party such as that did not exist—and the proletariat suffered defeat. Out of the experience gained in that defeat there grew the Communist Party. If in 1921 it had acted as a Communist Party would have been obliged to act in 1919, it would have perished. That was stated by the last Congress.

The discussions of the "Offensive Theory" are closely connected with the problem of how to appraise the economic boom and its development. The spokesmen of that theory developed the following theorem:

Decay of Bourgeois Society.

The whole world is dominated by a crisis—the crisis of the decay of bourgeois society—which is bound to grow in intensity and thus revolutionize the workers.

Hence a Communist Party has no reason to look backwards upon its reserves; its task is to attack capitalist society. Under the pressure of the economic decay the proletariat must sooner or later fulfill that task.

That point of view could not maintain itself in so unimpaired a form till the time of the Congress. Its crudest points were eliminated by the Commission on the Economic Situation.

The mere thought that the crisis could be succeeded by a relative economic boom, seemed to the conscious and half-conscious followers of the "Offensive Theory", as something akin to—Centrism.

Regarding the opinion that a revival of trade and industry would not only act as a brake upon the revolution, but could on the contrary imbue it with fresh power—that point of view was held to be purely Menshevik.

The badly employed radicalism of the "Left" found an innocent reflection in a resolution adopted by the last convention of the German Party which levelled a personal attack against me.

This in spite of the fact that I had been merely repeating the opinion held by the Executive of our Party. I can console myself for that petty revenge of the "Left" since the lessons of the Third Congress have gone home everywhere and most of all in the German Party.

[illegible] of Workers Party Is Organized

The first meeting of the Local Greater New York City Central Committee, Workers Party, was held on Sunday, Feb. 5, at the Yorkville Casino, with an attendance of 95 delegates representing an approximate membership of 3,000 members.

William W. Weinstone was unanimously elected Executive Secretary and the following comrades, Assetour, Brody, Cohen, Fleisher, Green, Kassoff, Marshall, Obolonsky, Posner, Mrs. Ware, Weinstone and Woods of the former American Labor Alliance, and Mrs. Alexander, Glassberg and Lore of the Workers' Council Groups were elected a Provisional Executive Committee.

The Local is now officially established. All members are counted upon to make of Local Greater New York the banner local of the Workers Party.

Application cards have been issued and are to be returned properly filled out, immediately. Membership cards will be issued upon the receipt of the application cards, and branch financial secretaries are urged to expedite the return of the cards.

All branches that have not as yet elected their delegates to the City Central Committee are requested to do so at once, and forward the names of the delegates to the local office, 208 East 12th St., New York City.

A meeting of the Provisional Executive Committee elected at the first meeting of the City Central Committee will be held at the office of the Local, 208 East 12th St., New York City, Saturday, 8 P. M. All members are requested to be prompt.

All branches of the Local Greater New York are to notify the Local Office of any change in place or dates of their meetings.

BOOKS FOR WORKERS

The Toiler Bookshop maintained by Local Greater New York is now ready to furnish any books that the comrades may be interested in. Those we have not in stock we shall be pleased to order immediately. We are specializing in books dealing with the revolutionary movement here and abroad. We are now only a modest little bookshop but we will GROW. Our motto is, "If it is a book, we have it." We have Fostre's new book on the revolutionary movement in Europe. Get your copy now. Have your literature agent get a supply of literature for the branch, and then make the Toiler Book Shop the center for revolutionary literature.

Branch Organizers, Notice—Have you sent into the Local Office the name and address of the branch organizer, financial secretary, literature and other officers of your branch, also address and date of branch meetings? We must at once have a correct and up-to-date list of all branches. Each branch will receive a form for applying this information. Send this in at once properly filled out.

SPECIAL MEETINGS

Special meetings of the Workers Party branches of Local Greater New York will be held in the latter half of February and beginning of March. A representative of the Industrial Department will submit a report on—

1. Party Policies in the Industrial Field.
2. Immediate Activities in the Industrial Field.

Plans for immediate activities will be submitted and a registration of members by industries and trades taken. A thorough discussion will clear the ground for an intensive campaign in the unions and all other labor organizations. This is the first of a series of meetings in all Workers Party branches on Party Policies and Organizational Problems. It is of utmost importance that every member of the branch be present.

THE WORKER

The Worker is out for distribution. Send in your order for The Worker to the Office, 208 East 12th Street. Elect at your regular meeting of the branch a literature agent, whose function it will be to receive and distribute The Worker and other literature, as well as to organize a Literature Branch Committee to take care of the sale of party and other revolutionary literature at meetings of labor unions, other workers' organizations, mass-meetings, balls, "vetcherinkas," bazaars, etc. The branch literature agents must at once get in touch with the Local Literature Agent of the Workers Party. Comrade Frank Grund, 208 East 12th Street, and make all necessary connections as well as get all particulars needed.

F. S. R.

Branches are to elect representatives to the local Friends of Soviet Russia at their regular meetings. The representatives are to get in touch at once with the Local Secretary, Comrade Bert Miller, 208 East 12th Street, New York.

Organize the Housewives!

By KATHARINE GITLOW

The Women's Committee of the Workers' Party must consider the number of its own members with whom it can work. Our motto shall be, "START RIGHT, LAY OUT YOUR PLANS ACCORDING TO OUR STAND AND THEN PROCEED TO ACTION SO AS TO BE SURE TO BRING IT TO A SUCCESSFUL ACCOMPLISHMENT."

I would therefore suggest to the Women's Committee of the Workers' Party that all its efforts should be used in working among the housewives, for the following reasons:

The women workers in the shops can be reached through other methods. The women wage-earner considers her period of employment in the shop but a temporary thing, that soon through matrimonial luck she will get out of it.

Of course there are exceptions but not many. That is why I do not think the effort expended is worth while. Of course, if we shall have enough workers we shall be EVERYWHERE to educate and organize for the class struggle.

I consider the housewife's field the best one and it is there that I expect the best results.

The married woman in her daily life of providing for the family comes face to face with the class struggle.

She has to think about the paying of the rent, the grocery bills, and clothing for the entire family.

She does not think in the terms of herself. She thinks only of her children and husband.

The husband gives her the weekly wages that he earns, but it is she that must get along upon it, and when unemployment reaches the household it is upon the housewife that the entire burden falls.

She is home,—she must face the landlord, she must ask the grocer to extend longer credit to her, etc. She is in a position from which she does not expect very soon to be free.

Even when she is compelled to go back to the factory she does not expect anyone in the form of a man to lift the burdens from off her shoulder.

Therefore the housewife must start thinking. In fact she is always thinking about how to meet ends. She clashes steadily with economic conditions,

Once we have the housewife we get all. We will have the husband in the union which is very important because a good many ignorant women compel their husbands to scab on the union when they are out on strike. And when we have the mothers we also have the children.

In another article, if I shall be permitted, I shall back up with facts in my own actual experience with housewives the above arguments.

"Help Guide American Labor on the Road to Workers' Republic," Ashleigh to Gene Debs

Charles Ashleigh, poet of the working class, who went to the Leavenworth prison in Kansas with the Industrial Workers of the World, was released at the same time that Eugene V. Debs was given his freedom. Ashleigh has written Debs on the present struggle of the workers in this country and throughout the world in the following stirring language:

ASHLEIGH TO DEBS

Dear Comrade:

My pleasure at being released from the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, on December 25th, was enhanced by my knowledge that you also were given your freedom. My pleasure, however, is diminished by the thought of the sterling militants of the class struggle who remain still behind the bars, victims of the relentless dictatorship of American capitalism.

I am sure that you think, as I do, that there can be for us, who have been released, no peace, no cessation of activity, no real enjoyment of our freedom so long as one political prisoner remains in any prison of America.

Others Still in Chains

I need not remind you that there are still one hundred members of the I. W. W. in Leavenworth Penitentiary; that there are twenty or more victims of the anti-syndicalist law in the California state prison; that in the States of Washington and Idaho there are also class-war prisoners; that Jim Larkin, Ferguson, Gitlow, Winitsky and others are prisoners in the state prisons of New York; that Tom Mooney and Billings have also suffered for years from the revenge of California capitalism. In fact, there are still in this country hundreds of prisoners of the American class war; and I rely confidently on your expressed determination to abate not one jot of your efforts towards their release.

We may congratulate ourselves upon the fact that we have been released in a most interesting period. The class struggle all over the world is assuming new forms, the militants the world over are arriving at a new orientation, inspired and guided by the wholesome and heroic lessons of the Russian workers' revolution, seeking to apply those broad lessons to their own lands with special reference to the historical and industrial conditions in their respective countries. I know of your magnificent career in the foremost battles of the American proletariat. I know of your unflinching faith in the eventual victory of the American working class; and in this light I cannot but believe that, when you have had the opportunity to observe the present status of the American revolutionary movement, you will join with those vigorous and forward-looking elements of the American working class who have realized the futility of the capitalist state machinery for the securing of any benefits for the working class, and that you will join with those who seek to achieve on the political field, through the newly formed Workers' Party, and on the industrial field, through the consolidation of all militant forces in the American labor movement, and the alignment with the Red International of Labor, the victory not only of the American proletariat, but of the working class of the world.

Look to Debs for Guidance

You are undoubtedly the best known and the best loved of all prominent leaders of the American workers; and the American workers are looking to you now for guidance.

It is my sincere hope that you, who are to remain in this country, will carry on the work of guiding the American proletariat towards the establishment of a workers' republic, as I hope to aid in the establishment of a similar end in the country to which I am to be deported.

We have both known the punishment which the American capitalist dictatorship metes out to those who have dared to unmask its imperialistic plundering machinations. We have both, I trust, emerged from our imprisonment with our determination to carry on the class fight strengthened by our experiences. In far Russia the famine-wrecked citizens of the workers' republic will turn with eagerness to us, the victims of American capitalism, hoping that we will not give up the fight but that we shall go forward, inspired by their sufferings and their efforts towards the establishment of the proletarian's commonwealth of the world. You have it in your hands to lead the American movement out of its chaos of misunderstanding and disunion into the uniform and disciplined ranks of the adherents to the two great internationals which are the reservoirs of working-class power and the general staffs of the proletarian army: The Third (Communist) International and the Red International of Labor Unions. These two great forces will, of course, grow in strength and influence despite all criticism and treachery. Possibly it were better that you and I, wielding, as we do, the influence wrought by our recent incarceration, state immediately and unqualifiedly our adherence to those newly forged and efficient instruments of the World Proletariat.

With fraternal greetings,
Charles Ashleigh.

Charles Ashleigh was deported Tuesday noon, February 7. He reported to the immigration department Monday and was immediately taken into custody. Released six weeks ago from Leavenworth following a nationwide campaign in his behalf he is now on his way to England, deported as an undesirable because of his conviction with other members of the I. W. W. in 1918.

Leaving, Ashleigh said:

"In England I plan to be just as active in the revolutionary movement as I have been in the United States. Like Gene Debs I am a citizen of the world and as a member of the working class I owe allegiance to that class whereever I may be. I urge all class conscious workers to continue their agitation for the release of class-war prisoners until the comrades convicted with me are freed and until the jails of America hold not a single man or woman sent down because of his loyalty to and his activity in behalf of his class."

[illegible] Issues Fighting Organ

The Young Workers' League of America has entered the revolutionary struggle of the working class and with it comes into being its organ—YOUTH.

YOUTH carries the message of the revolutionary young in America. It will interest the young of the working class for it is written for them.

YOUTH deals with the problems of the proletarian youth. Indeed, it is a part of the young toilers.

As the official organ of the Young Workers League it will carry news of our movement, discussions of the problems confronting the young workers, theoretical expositions of the class struggle and news of the conflict thruout the world.

YOUTH is not the organ of an individual but the mouth piece of the revolutionary young workers, and as such invites all young workers to contribute—to make it what it should be—a weapon in the class struggle.

YOUTH must be circulated. The American young workers should read, and it will not be circulated by the capitalist class. If anything, they will suppress. It is up to the young workers thruout the country to give it wide circulation. Let it reach the smallest shop where young workers are employed, let it penetrate the most obscure village where the agrarian youth slave on the farm.

YOUTH invites criticism for it knows it is not perfect; and it can not even perform its function without the cooperative interest of young workers thruout the United States.

Read our first (February) issue. Write us what you think about it and how it can be improved. Make it your paper. Make it a paper for and by the young workers.

Send orders and contributions to National Organization Committee for the Young Workers League of America, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE.

On April 15 the convention of all young workers' revolutionary organizations will convene. This convention will lay the foundation for a powerful movement of revolutionary young workers in America. The Young Workers League of New York hails with pleasure this great event, which will again bring together the young workers' organizations in America into a national body.

To raise funds for the convention, the Young Workers League of New York has arranged a ball for the 18th of February, at 1347 Boston Road. All those who want to see the Young Workers League grow and prosper are urged to attend this ball and to bring their friends.

LOCAL.

The Young Workers League is growing rapidly. A Finnish circle has just been added to our ranks, and more circles are in the process of organization. [illegible] Special Congress of Third (Communist) International to Meet Feb'y 19th

World-wide interest is being manifested in the Special Congress of the Third (Communist) International called for Febr. 19, 1922, to which all the Communist Parties are to send a delegation twice as large as usual.

Last week THE WORKER published part of the proclamation issued by the Communist International calling this congress. This week we publish the conclusion of this proclamation, which is as follows:

The Communist International has always demanded that the workers who stand on the platform of the dictatorship of the proletariat and the Soviets join together in independent parties. It retracts not a word of what it said at the time of the foundation and of the building of independent Communist parties. It is convinced that each day greater and greater masses will realize how much it was right in all its actions. But in spite of all that separates us, it calls, "Working men and women of all countries, close your ranks in the battle for the cause that unites you, in the battle for that which all of you recognize as a common goal."

All workers, whether Communists, Social Democrats or Syndicalists, even if Christian or Liberal trade-unionists—do not desire to permit any further reduction of wages. They no longer desire to work while hungry and freezing, and therefore they must unite in a common front against the offensive of the employers.

Fear Loss of Work.

All workers, whether Communists, Social Democrats or Syndicalists, Christian or Liberal trade unionists—do not want to beg day in and day out from factory gate to factory gate for work; they all fear being thrown out of work. Therefore they must unite in the fight against everything which increases unemployment. And unemployment will be made perpetual in all industrial countries if the German proletariat, enslaved to the Entente and to German capital, will have to toil as international wage-reducers so that German capitalists will be able to flood the world market with German goods at coolie prices in order to pay the tribute of Versailles. Unemployment will grow if the capitalist world puts conditions of enslavement and subjugation to Soviet Russia and forces it to continue to starve or to defend itself with arms in hands. Therefore unite in the struggle for the cancellation of war debts, for the recognition of Soviet Russia and its building up on the basis of conditions which are in accordance with the interests of the international proletariat.

Not only unemployment is oppressing the working-class. It is threatened by the anarchy of production and is threatened by the fact that the capitalists can produce and export whatever they desire. The impoverished world requires a methodical distribution of raw materials and their methodical utilization. It demands the control of prices. All that is impossible as long as the working-class does not conquer for itself control over production, as long as the organs elected by the workers have not the opportunity of checking the free reign of the capitalist disorganizers. All workers must unite for the struggle, for this control of production which is not only in the interest of the proletariat, but also of the broadest strata of the petty-bourgeoisie which groans under the Bacchanale of high prices.

All workers, whether Communists, Social Democrats, or Syndicalists, and Christian or Liberal trade-unionists, are interested in preventing capitalist diplomacy from starting a new world conflagration, in depriving it of its occupation. Therefore, unite in the struggle against armaments, against capitalist intrigues.

Prepare United Front in the Shops.

The Communist International demands of all Communist workers, demands of all sincere workers, everywhere, in the entire world, in the shop and in the meeting-hall that they unite in one family of workers, who will stand together against capital in all the questions of the day. Create an iron will for proletarian unity, on which all attempts to separate the proletariat will shatter, come they from whatever side they may. Only when you, proletarians, in shop and factory so unite, will all parties which rest upon the proletariat and wish to be heeded by it, be compelled to unite for a common defensive fight against capitalism. Only then will they be forced to break their alliance with the capitalist parties.

However, if the proletariat unites, it will then be able to utilize the niggardly rights granted it by capitalist pseudo-democracy in the struggle for the improvement of the condition of the proletariat and for the strengthening of its positions. We say to you, "The proletarian giant cannot stretch its limbs and cannot raise itself to its full stature under the roof of the capitalist chicken-coop. When you begin to fight you will see that you need the sword of the dictatorship in order to win. But we know that this dictatorship is only possible when the great majority of the proletariat arrives at it through its own experiences, and therefore, the Communist International and the Communist parties will patiently and fraternally march together with all the rest of the proletariat, even when they [illegible]

We know that when you have united your forces, when the entire proletariat advances together, it will learn how great its forces are, it will see that the bourgeoisie which feels itself the lord over the ruins of the world will become as nothing against you.

In the iron conviction that you will go the way that your elite have marked with their blood, the way for which hundreds of thousands of Russian workers, for which Rosa Luxemburg, Leo Jogisches, Karl Liebknecht and hundreds of other unknown fighters have fallen, for which tens of thousands suffer in prisons in the firm conviction that the fighting proletariat will be compelled to follow the path of Communism, we call to you, "Workers of the world, unite!"

Long live the common battle-front of the proletariat against the bourgeoisie!

For the counter-attack against the offensive of capital!

For the struggle for the control of production!

Down with capitalist armaments and plots!

Away with the chains of slavery for laboring Germany!

Hands off Soviet Russia!

Bread and machines for the Russian proletariat!

Long live proletarian solidarity in every country and in the whole world!

PUT THE THESES IN THE LIBRARIES

Party Members and Fellow-Workers:

A little concerted action, please. Do this this week-today. Go to your library and ask for a copy of "THE THESES AND RESOLUTIONS OF THE THIRD CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL," adopted at Moscow last June.

No, you won't get it. That's why we want you to ask for it. If a few requests are made for this book the libraries will order it. We want to place one copy in every public library in the United States. We can do it if you make the demand for it. Organize a drive on the public libraries of your city for this book. Tell them it can be obtained for 50c. a copy from

Union Policy Outlined for Editors and dical Toilers by the Workers Party

How should the radical elements work within the labor n? An excellent answer to this important question is cond in instructions just issued by the Workers Party to the rs of labor papers on the question of trade union policy, but ld also prove of great value to every radical and progressive in the union movement. The instructions, in full, which ought to be preserved for reference whenever necessary, are as follows:

Trade Union Policy.

In this country the problem of revolutionizing the trade unions is a very complicated one due to the y years of activity by the radical in the direction of dual union-

ory of building new and ary labor unions has ch headway that a great active workers have the onviction that the Ame ration of Labor must be

ng out this policy it is apply any general rules dequately meet the situa- each industry. The Workers program covers pretty well specific industries in which the unions are strong and where are weak; and where the revolonary industrial unions are strong the trade unions are weak.

The object of this demarkation is designate into just which direction should throw our support. We st assume the attitude, however, when we support the trade ons in a given field that we do manifest this support by launch- attacks upon the dual unions just cause they are dual unions unless commit specific acts that out- the principles of solidarity.

The object of our work shall be win the confidence of the membership of the dual unions to our ogram, for the purpose of bring- understanding between the membership of the dual unions and that the trade unions.

The object shall be to promote armony between the membership of the respective unions; and not to increase the animosities that now exist.

In this manner the dual unionists can be most readily convinced of the value of abandoning their separatists tactics and induced to join the trade unions.

Again in industries where the Revolutionary Unions dominate our support should go to such unions; with the understanding, however, at we will not encourage the idea increasing the scope of the parlar union of the industry to other dustries.

That is, that we will not favor the of the lumber workers, for innce, adopting measures to orize other industries; or a pro-am to cover the organization of wage workers.

On Strike Situations.

All strikes should be supported. During strikes questions pertaining the merits or demerits of different organizations should not be dissed, unless there is definite evience that a certain organization is ploying policies in direct betrayal the strikers.

Only when there is evidence that organization as an organization rectly involved in a crime against ikers should there be an issue de. If rank and file members of given organization are known to acting contrary to the interests strike, such acts should not be d to the dignity of a major issue publication.

is a well known fact that many idual acts of scabbing are comed by members in unions of all s, acts for which the organizas cannot properly be held responsible. If we play up such acts provoke situations that arouse bad feeling, without contributanything of value to the labor ment.

Industrial Amalgamation.

In our work for industrial amalgamation we shall confine ourselves support vigorously such moves d issues that spring spontaneously from the unions at such times when the need for closer unity is most enly felt; rather than holding to y abstract pure and simple theory of industrial unionism.

For instance, in the metal trades, the Machinists at present are strongly in favor of one organization for the whole metal industry. This situation arises out of the fact that the machinists have been the first to el the bad effects of craft division.

Our task must be to develop with- the other organizations of the meal trades (polishers, blacksmiths, boilermakers, sheet metal workers, etc.) a keen understanding and appreciation of industrial solidarity.

While we should not ignore the lue of propaganda to carry out this k, we should ever keep in mind the workers learn almost en-y by actual experience.

t is during times of strike that we uld be ever present to point out weakness of craft division; and only that, but most important, should bring out issues that promote solidarity.

In the case just mentioned we should by no means confine our activity within the ranks of the machinists just because we can get a better hearing; but we should recognize at a greater task lies in the other organizations to bring them up to position of the machinists. If allow the work to be pushed om only one side it will be the [illegible] of unending friction.

In the shoe making industry there are at least four unions as well as leather workers and shoe machinery workers. In the ranks of all there is a strong tendency for one organization.

Because of the infamous character of the A. F. of L. organization, the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, there is a decided and justified feeling of hostility toward the A. F. of L.

In this instance our immediate task should be the formation of a single independent union of the entire industry thru amalgamation.

Don't Destroy the Unions.

In order that our activity should not destroy the unions we should always follow the course dictated by the live issues that grow spontaneously out of the every day struggles; issues in which every trade unionist is vitally interested.

When we take a progressive stand upon such issues the reactionary element cannot charge us with being more concerned with the specious propaganda of an outside body than the real interests of the union movement.

Our supporters in the unions will be fighting upon solid ground and better able to prevent splits upon a purely theoretical basis.

We should never allow the reactionary leaders to have any easy time getting material to bring charges against ourselves or our progressive following with a view to bringing about our expulsion.

When we cannot be charged with working in the interests of another organization we are in a better position to resist expulsion.

Sometimes Best to Retreat.

On this score we deem it advisable to emphasize the grave danger of expulsion. We will go so far as to say that sometimes it is even advisable to retreat on a particular issue rather than face expulsion.

We should always keep in mind that the principal aim of our immediate task is unity, and that reactionaries play upon the word unity to keep their power; but that the officialdom are ready to go to any length to maintain their positions, even to the extent of expelling opponents.

In each instance when the situation becomes critical in any union we should always exercise our intelligence to determine whether we can, or cannot, afford to face expulsion.

We can afford to face expulsion only when by such action will the officials lose the masses; and then we should always be prepared to hold the members together to maintain the union.

If expulsion would mean that we will have only an inconsiderable part of the membership with us it is advisable to retreat for the time being.

In military tactics victory is not gained by always advancing; it is the wise general who knows how to assure victory ultimately by retreating at the proper time. We should retreat when retreat is the only way to hold our forces together.

We enter a given fight always on the assumption that the greater number always are sincere even tho for the time they are against us. It is our object to stay with them to bring them to accept our point of view—that of the revolutionary struggle against the capitalist power.

SEATTLE.—Whether vacant office buildings and palatial homes in exclusive residence districts should be given over to the unemployed is the problem before the city council here. The Workers' Unemployed Council recently presented formal demands for speedy relief from the city.

WE JUDGE CAPITALIST MORALITY

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

The type of [illegible] capitalist press loves to tout is one of the many things which offer us a standard by which we can judge capitalist morality.

The one virtue, ostensibly holding the highest place in the capitalist morality is patriotism—love of country. Under capitalism this quality becomes nothing more or less than a blind loyalty to the ruling class and deviations from it are condoned only when these deviations work to the advantage of the world's rulers at times when the subject class is showing strength.

The finest example of the truth of the above premises we have yet seen is contained in the New-York Times of February 2 in a story concerning the marriage of Mrs. Marion Buckingham Ream Stephens to one Anastase Andreievitch Vonsiatsky-Vonsiatsky. The lady of the many names is one of seven heirs to a $40,000,000.00 estate and this of course gives her the entre to the news columns of any capitalist paper.

With her fiance, he of the weird cognomen, the case is a little different. He is employed in the Baldwin Locomotive works and for the nonce appears to be earning an honest living—enough in itself to make him an inconspicuous figure were it not for certain circumstances—generally termed romantic—shaping his destiny. Let this heroic youth of twenty-three years, about to marry a lady with $5,000,000.00, who admits the passage of forty-five summers, tell his own story:

"My family was ennobled but not titled by Czar Nicholas I. and [illegible] Poles and was thus rewarded. My father, Andre Vonsiatsky, was chief of the gendarmerie of Warsaw during Russian control. He was killed in an uprising in 1910. Naturally I became dedicated to the army. I have a cursed Bolshevist bullet in my body now. When the war began I was a student in a military academy and was too young to bear arms. But I was not too young when the revolution began."

Translated into the vernacular the above simply means that beginning with the great-great-grandfather of the hero of this tale, the Vonsiatskys, Poles by birth, were a family of stool-pigeons and gunmen working for the Russian czars against their own countrymen.

The great-great-grandfather sold out his own people to the czar and received for his treachery large estates and the rank of a noble.

According to the admissions of this degenerate scion of a family of spies and traitors, the custom established by the great-great-grand stool-pigeon has been faithfully followed. The father, loyal to the traitorous tradition, was chief of the gendarmerie in Warsaw under the czar and fought against his own people when they tried to throw off the czaristic yoke in 1910. He died at the hands of the oppressed masses he was betraying for gain.

The narrator of the moving tale quoted became an ardent supporter of the counter-revolutionary movements that sprang up after the power in Russia fell into the hands of the masses. He marched with Korniloff. Then with Denikin. Then with Kolchak. As the Times delicately puts it, "when the campaign of the latter resulted in a fiasco he fled to Paris by way of Constantinople". He now finds a snug refuge on our hospitable shores. Fame and fortune are his.

Two more extracts from the Times and this article nears its end.

"Both the mother and father of Mrs. Stephens were of revolutionary stock."

"Count Chirep Spirebovict, a Russian emigre, who is stopping at the Auditorium Hotel, said:

"The Vonsiatsky family had immense estates in South Russia which have been confiscated by the Bolsheviki, but should the political situation change Vonsiatsky would probably be able to match fortunes with his bride."

The whole thing is almost too lovely to be true.

The lady atones for the mistake her revolutionary ancestors made in assisting in the overthrow of the English aristocracy by marrying a hereditary traitor, whose family for four generations gained wealth and power by selling its country and its own blood into slavery; a counter-revolutionary emigre places the seal of his approval on the alliance and the great organ of capitalism in America by playing up the story shows us that the only treason frowned upon by capitalist morality is treason to capitalism.

Sell your country and its people but uphold the hands of the international plunderbund and not only will you be forgiven but you may seek successfully the hand of capitalism's fairest daughter.

Issue Famine Relief Edition of John Reed's Book "Ten Days That Shook the World"

John Reed's "Ten Days That Shook the World" (Boni and Liveright, $1) has been brought out in a Special Russian Famine Edition. Reed's wife, Louise Bryant, had arranged with the publishers that half of the price of each book shall go for famine relief.

She believes that her husband's memory can be best served by having his books work for the starving Russian workers and peasants in whose service he gave his life.

Tho published two years ago, the book has not grown old. It is a documentary account of the stirring November days in 1917, when the proletarian revolution overthrew the treacherous socialist-bourgeois coalition and established Soviet rule.

John Reed was in the midst of everything during those eventful days in Petrograd, and his book is full of first-hand facts about the greatest uprising in the history of the oppressed and the disinherited.

A great many more books will be added to the many already published about the Russian Revolution. John Reed's vivid narrative of its most critical period will always remain one of the outstanding contributions to the literature of the Revolution.

"There is a book which I should like to see published in millions of copies and translated into all the languages", says Comrade Lenin in his introduction to this edition of the book. And when Lenin says, "unreservedly do I recommend it to the workers of the world", we have the endorsement of the book by the best authority on the Russian Revolution.

To recapitulate: Jack Reed wrote the book. Lenin recommends it. Russian Famine Relief, as sponsored by the Friends of Soviet Russia, will receive half of the price of each book.

Nothing more need be said, except that the price of the book is only $1.00 and that it can be secured from the Literature Department of the Workers Party.—Alexander Trachtenberg.

SHINES AMONG THE MANY

Since the revolution, books on Russia have poured from the printing presses with the monotonous regularity of a cataract. But as here and there in a waterfall, a drop of water catches the sun and shines forth from the millions of its fellows so does "Through The Russian Revolution" by Albert Rhys Williams catch the eye and hold the attention of the reader.

The spirit of the book is shown in the dedication:

> "To the Workers and Peasants of Russia who fell in defense of The Revolution. Against riches, power and knowledge for the few you began a war, and with glory you died in order that riches, power and knowledge should become universal."

The book is filled with cuts of posters issued by the Workers and Peasants governments dating from the seizure of power, through the counter-revolutionary periods to the time when it became possible to begin constructive work. The reproductions of the posters issued by the educational bureaus are printed in their original colors and and are the first of their kind brought to the United States. They are a pictorial history of the revolution and are a delightful addition to even this brilliant book.

With the possible exception of John Reed's "Ten Days That Shook The World," this book is the finest piece of reporting in the English language. It tells a story and as you read it you live through every incident it depicts. And what a story it is; the first epic of the "dark people" surging up into light and liberty. Up they come and they stop for neither the cowardice and treachery of the Kerensky government nor the bayonets, machine-guns and grenades of an enraged officer class. Up they come and when even some of the Bolsheviks waver, the mass drives thru.

For an understanding of the Russian revolution this book must be read. All thru it, in every thrilling incident, runs this same red thread, the symbol of the mass.

In these days when so many leaders are offering themselves to the workingclass it is well to read this book; if you are a leader, read it twice.—William F. Dunne.

Another Anti-Strike Law to Help Suffering Public

ALBANY, N. Y.—Another anti-strike measure under the guise of an act to protect the public welfare has been introduced in the senate by Senator Duell, chairman of the committee on labor and in the lower house by Assemblyman Miller.

The bill is modeled on the Kansas law but is apparently designed to be more sweeping in its provisions. It provides for an "industrial term" of the supreme court and under the act the court is empowered to take over and operate essential industries in the interest of public welfare. The court would have power to fix wages, working hours and general conditions of employment for a stated length of time.

All controversies must be placed in the hands of a state industrial commissioner created by the bill and any ten citizens, not financially interested in the dispute may apply to the court for an order restraining any strike. The proposed measure is denounced by labor union officials as the most vicious yet brought forward.

SOMETHING "DIFFERENT".

Everybody needs money. The Unemployment Council most of all. It needs money to carry on its work organizing the unemployed. Altho it receives contributions from its affiliated bodies, this is not enough to carry on energetic work.

Hence the Council has aranged an "Unemployment Dinner", which will be different from anything held in New York City. Tickets are 75 cents. All in sympathy with the work of the Council should buy tickets. The dinner will take place at the Food Workers' Hall, 133 West 51st Street, on Sunday, Feb. 19, 2 P. M.

Death Stalks Across the Volga

Disaster and death face the vast population in the Volga District. Aid is coming too late to save 25,000,000 people. Maddened and crazed by hunger, men, women and children wander about in the snows on the steppes, to meet death in the bitter, biting cold.

Hope has been kept up by the belief that food would arrive in time; that here or there, somewhere along the railroad line, or far off in the hills food could be procured from a helping co-sufferer. But death has laid a devastating hand on the whole area.

Food cannot be obtained, since it comes too slowly—too late. Children may clamor; mothers may rave; men may struggle—but it is all in vain. The vast fields are covered with snow, with no green beneath.

The steppes are a blanket of death, hiding the naked bones of women holding in embrace—icy embrace—their infants. Death stalks across the Volga—across the sun-baked fields along the Volga, where the shows new reign.

And YOU! WHAT WILL YOU DO?

Shall an American worker hesitate? Shall the masses of American labor debate, while millions are starving—are DYING?

Soviet Russia needs food in ever greater quantities. It must be forthcoming during the next two months or a disaster such as the world has not yet known will be a fact. The need is growing. All that has been provided is but a small part of what is really required.

Millions Must Be Fed.

Even tho governments, particularly the American, has done considerable, it is clear and has been stated officially that only part of the starving population can and will be taken care of. WHAT OF THE REST? WHAT OF THE MILLIONS WHO STILL MUST BE FED?

WHAT OF THE NEXT SEASON, WHEN SEED MUST BE SOWN AND CROPS BE RAISED? WHAT OF THE FUTURE OF THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE, WHOSE CHILDREN ARE DYING BY THE MILLIONS?

CAN YOU, AMERICAN WORKERS—CAN YOU, AMERICAN FARMERS,—DARE YOU HESITATE IN THE FACE OF THIS CATASTROPHE?

Receive Call for Seed.

The call from Soviet Russia is for seed, for tractors and ploughs. (The International Workers' Relief Committee, the official international committee, in Moscow, has issued the following proclamation:

"The Workers Relief Committee is organizing associations for conducting home industry, it is taking over factories and equipping them with machinery of production, in order to provide possibilities of work to combat hunger effectively.

"The Relief Committee calls on all workers to collect tools and materials of all kinds, but especially to furnish tractors, so that whole Soviet farms can be taken over. Also send transport material, grain and sowing seed for the spring sowing.

"Also send trained workers, industrial and agricultural organizers, equip colonies of workers with tools and food. Form a labor army of the International Workers Relief. Procure these colonies from your midst. This must be done in order that live and active points of contact and solidarity may be formed with the factory workers of the industrial districts."

"No time dare be lost."

International Workers Relief Committee.

Special attention must be called to the appeal of the Soviet Government that as many tractors and ploughs be procured as possible. Especially tractors. The horses and cattle have died off. The small quantity of oats available will keep only a small number of horses. Hence there will be no draught animals for cultivating the fields—and further starvation will face the people.

Workers in Berlin have donated a truck. The workers in another factory have furnished a tractor. This example must be followed by the workers of America. Who will contribute the first tractor from America? Which city will be the first to furnish ploughs, in order that Russian fields may be turned into fields of food?

The Amsterdam Trade Union Federation dispatched the first ship to Soviet Russia in December. The Amsterdam Federation is taking care exclusively of children. A second steamer left Hamburg last month.

On Jan 6, a steamer of the International Workers Relief left Stettin for Reval, bearing 150,000 kilos of sugar, 10,000 bacon, 20,000 kilos fruit and 3,000 cocoa, and large quantities of shoes, clothes, etc.

A new Committee in Denmark was organized by the well known writer and teacher, Marie Nielsen, to collect foodstuffs and other necessaries for the children of the famine district. On December 29, the Italian workers transmitted to the International Workers Relief a further donation of 2,300,000 marks.

Activities in the West are continuing at their original pace. Seattle has held some fine meetings. Hulet M. Wells is making a tour of the western coast, which will take him to the south of California. Miners out in the west, who recently were lined up for relief, have been sending for literature. They wish to apprise the workers in the remote districts of the real meaning of Russian hunger.

Norman H. Tallentire eastwards, lining up the Kansas and Missouri. He be in Iowa.

The FSR is putting some izers in the field. The Minnesota organizer has already been appointed.

Chicago has been so successful in collecting shoes, that it has decided to continue the drive for footwear and open a shoe repair shop. Girls in Minneapolis collected $54.10, as cases filled with clothes collected in that city were being taken to the freight station. The band did not show up, otherwise treble that sum would have been collected.

Newark is in the midst of the clothes campaign. All the affiliated organizations are giving affairs of every character to swell the fund.

"The Junior Club of Revere, Mass., collected for dues $1.50, which we decided to give to the starving children of the Russian workers, and give them our full support."

New York is hard at work. The city was recently divided into sections, with Section Committees directing the work of their territory. Most intense activity is promised in this way.

"I am enclosing a very small draft for your work. I am sorry it cannot be more, but I have had to go without meals to get this. However I am glad to do occasionally what our Russian comrades have been doing for years."

With the children comprehending, and with the adults sharing their little the workers and peasants of Russia may be saved. Let each do his share!

And now! A retired minister, to whose wife had been given a beautiful watch and platinum chain set with diamonds, came to the office of the FSR and donated it for relief. The clergyman stated that he felt ashamed to own such a valuable when millions are starving for food.

A clergyman in Arkansas writes that he wishes to help. Another in Boston is circularizing all churches of his denomination.

Edgar T. Whitehead, the English delegate to the International Workers Relief Conference in Berlin, who after being detained at Ellis Island was released only with difficulty, is out in the middle west lecturing on the Russian situation. Allan S. Broms will shortly begin a tour of the east and middle west. Comrade Broms will deliver illustrated lectures on "The Russian Famine in Pictures."

Work continues with the [illegible] termination and persistence. The total is $360,000. The big features of the week were: Los Angeles [illegible], Chicago $1700, San Francisco [illegible], Boston $400, West Frankfort, [illegible] $349, Cleveland $250, [illegible], Rochester $150, St. Paul [illegible].

Civilizing America

The passage of the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill by the lower house of congress with only 119 chivalrous southerners voting "no" gives hope that in another decade we may be able to look the Abyssinians and the head-hunters of Borneo in the face.

The liberal magazines are jubilant over the remarkable victory for tolerance. We are glad for their sakes. They have had little to rejoice over since 1916 when they followed the standard of liberalism held high—out of reach, some say—by the late Woodrow Wilson.

Seriously, however, we can think of no greater indictment of the American government and the American people than that a magazine like The Nation should feel it necessary to comment as follows on the action of the house of representatives:

> "The passage of the Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill in the House of Representatives by the large majority of 230 to 119 is an achievement. Every American should derive distinct satisfaction from this, the most important legal step ever taken toward ending our peculiarly national disgrace. For this accomplishment the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which for years has labored to arouse the American conscience about lynchings and to crystallize public sentiment into effective legislation, deserves full credit. But the fight is not yet won; the bill still has to pass the Senate. Those who feel the sting when Europeans ask, 'Do you really mean that crowds gather to see men burned alive in America?' should give the National Association unstinted support until the bill not only passes the Senate and becomes law, but is enforced."

This is the year of our Lord, 1922. The last witch was burned several years ago, even in backward nations.

In the United States organs of liberal opinion give voice to a feeling of encouragement because one of our legislative bodies has expressed the opinion that it is not quite the thing in this day and age to beat, torture, burn and mutilate members of the colored race at the whim of degenerates who find supreme enjoyment in witnessing these spectacles of sadistic debauchery.

We are glad the Dyer bill passed the house, but our glee is tempered by the thought of those 119 "noes."

"Desmond Murder Shocks Los Angeles"—HEADLINE

This is indeed news. With the recent revelations concerning the denizens of Hollywood, of which Los Angeles is in reality only a suburb, we were of the opinion that about the only thing that could shock that real estate agent's paradise was one of the frequent earthquakes noted everywhere except in the Los Angeles papers.

Freedom

With each advance in social organization there arises an [illegible] over the loss of personal liberty. Much fair white paper [illegible] in the attempt to prove that the development of the [illegible] is hampered and his opportunity for free expression [illegible] when certain practices become illegal by virtue of a [illegible] decision.

These criticisms are heard more and more frequently in these days when the right of individuals to exploit their fellow men for personal profit is being questioned as never before.

The establishment of a workingclass dictatorship designed to facilitate the transition from capitalism to communism interferes with personal liberty in the same manner that compulsory sanitary regulations interfere with the right to dump one's garbage in the public street and yet it is the object of bitter criticism from both the liberty-loving capitalist and freedom seeking workingclass groups.

To the latter we recommend a close consideration of the following quotation from "The Nature of Man" by Metchnikoff:

> "In the progress towards the real goal of life, men will lose much of their liberty, but will receive in exchange a new feeling of solidarity. As knowledge becomes more and more extensive and exact, freedom to neglect it will be more and more limited. Formerly anyone was at liberty to teach that whales were fish; but now that it has been proved that whales are mammals, the mistake is not to be pardoned. Since medicine has become more of an exact science, the liberty of doctors has been restrained. Practitioners have already been sentenced for neglecting antisepsis and asepsis. Other forms of freedom, such as the freedom to neglect vaccination against smallpox, to spit on the floor, or to let dogs run loose without being muzzled, are worthy of savage days and will cease as civilization advances.
> "On the other hand, the knowledge that the goal of human life can be attained only by the development of a high degree of solidarity amongst men will restrain actual egotism. The mere fact that the enjoyment of life according to the precepts of Solomon is opposed to the goal of human life will lessen luxury and the evils that come from luxury. Conviction that science alone is able to redress the disharmonies of the human constitution will lead directly to the improvement of education and to the solidarity of mankind."

So it is that the liberty to idle, to be a burden upon society is now being restrained wherever the workers come to power.

With this restriction goes hand in hand a process of education in the new morality of labor, its sacredness and necessity.

The freedom of the few must be curtailed until they can gain the social vision.

No one knows as yet with what subject the next conference to be called by President Harding will deal but its results can be predicted with absolute accuracy.

Wanted—Homes

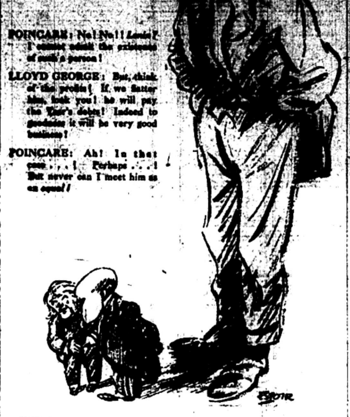
Wherever we turn we find chaos and ruin in capitalism. In every city of the United States there is a shortage of homes. The situation in New York is especially aggravated. According to the Lockwood Committee there is a shortage of at least 80,000 apartments in New York City; that is, there are almost 500,000 people who have no homes. Great stuff for the metropolis "of the land of the free and the home of the brave!"

Capitalism is run for profit and for profit only. When the war broke out, there was a huge demand for all construction materials. Steel, iron, wood, hardware, glass, bricks—all went into the hell of war to keep the flames of death a-burning. Of what importance are homes for the workers to live in when there is a need for hell-holes, trenches, for them to die in? This is plain talk, and any other in 1917, might have netted the indiscreet a free home in Leavenworth. Besides, war contracts netted higher profits than building deals. Hence the shortage in apartments today.

This mad game of the capitalists is showing its ugly head in another field. Not only have not enough new apartments been set up, but even the old have been wretchedly neglected. Repairs are a thing of the past. Of course "Labor is too high." All of this only adds to the misery and degradation of the working masses.

The question of proper housing cannot be settled under capitalism. Profit for the capitalists and comfort for the workingmen do not mix. But immediate relief is necessary. Well, how about the "people's" government doing something? How about the government setting up new apartments to be rented to the workers at cost of maintenance? How about compelling the landlords to clean out the hovels? How about lowering rent to meet the rapidly falling wages? How about the organization of a committee—on which the trade unions will have at least half the representation—which will get to work on these plans at once?

Workers, there is a crying need for relief. We must not let our enemies drive us into still lower degradation. We have had enough. It's time to cry "Halt!" Let us get together on these demands and force the hand of our enemy. We want homes for the workers. We don't give a damn for the capitalists and their profits.



POINCARE: No! No!! Lenin? I cannot admit the existence of such a person!
LLOYD GEORGE: But, think of the profits! If we flatter him, look you! he will pay the Tsar's debts! Indeed to goodness it will be very good business!
POINCARE: Ah! In that case . . . ! Perhaps . . . ! But never can I meet him as an equal!
Ellis

THE PRICELESS PIGMIES

When we hear the Pullman car philosophers talking of the way the unions limit production and how the workers lay down on the job we always wonder who makes all the things the employers have to sell.

Give the Soldiers a Bonus

The capitalists have organized a campaign of tremendous opposition throughout the country to the Soldiers' Bonus Bill. Congress is being bombarded with protests. Terrific noise is made about the cost of the bonus. "It will paralyze industry for years" is the cry of the Chamber of Commerce. Some liberal apologists even taunt the soldiers with a lack of idealism. "Why, how can you, the heroes of war, the saviors of the country, seek a reward for your holy services. You can't ever be compensated sufficiently. Then why make any attempt at compensation at all? Besides, it is a blot on our escutcheon of national idealism to seek monetary reward for noble services."

This is the kind of bunk handed out to our ex-soldiers. Some of them have been rewarded iron crosses, some the poor house, and very many others, wooden crosses. The remaining are left free to live at the sufferance of their capitalist masters and through the suffering of themselves. These fellows are now getting some sense into their heads. The government called them when it needed their help. Why should they not call the government when they themselves need its help?

Our government has poured millions into the coffers of the "poor" railway corporations. Our government has piled most burdensome taxes on the workers when it found it necessary to protect the capitalist expeditions of plunder in China, Mexico, Russia, and the Near East. Our government is piling up huge expenses in maintaining forces to hunt down the spokesmen of the workers and crush strikes and demonstrations of labor solidarity. Why not listen to the voice of the suffering ex-soldier masses?

We are not one bit concerned as to the methods of financing the bonus. Let the government tax the capitalists for whom the soldiers won the war. Let the government cut down on the expenses incurred in maintaining so huge a strike-breaking and labor-crushing agency. Let the government at once set aside several hundred million dollars to tow the workers over the period of depression.

We stand unreservedly with the soldiers in their fight for the bonus. We will not fall for any of the liberal or capitalist expert piffle. We don't give a care what happens to the bank accounts of the capitalists. All we are interested in, is to help the suffering ex-soldiers. The workers and soldiers must not be cowed by the courts. In New York State, the Bonus Law, after reciving an overwhelming majority on the referendum, was declared unconstitutional. This should not frighten us. We must not give way to the efforts of the judicial lackeys of our exploiters. When the government needed the help of the mass of ex-soldiers it did not stop at anything to force them into line. Now the mass of ex-soldiers needs the help of the government. The government knew what it wanted, knew how to get it, and got it. What will our workers and soldiers do? Will they sit back in idle hope for help being extended them voluntarily by their oppressors? Or will they go after what they want with the determination that the government went after what it wanted? A hint to the wise is sufficient. Here is to the wisdom of our ex-soldiers.

The doctrine of "He who does not work neither shall he eat" is enforced to-day only in the case of workers upon whom idleness is forced. The [illegible] wealthy keep right on eating.

[illegible] best answer to the whole [illegible] in a speech by a [illegible] Soviet Government. He said:

"I hear that the Genoa conference is going to talk about debts. Well, I was always a poor man, but had a son killed in the great war. Didn't I pay enough? What can I give more valuable than my own son? Don't the suffering and deaths of the Russian peasants and workers count for anything in the balance the nations of the world are going to make at Genoa?

"We can't pay money now, but we gave our blood then. Mayn't we be allowed to set that against the money claims upon us? If blood is reckoned in the same account as gold, I believe the balance will be in our favor."

No diplomat or financial expert could give a more truthful and more forceful answer. When the workers of every country learn to speak the language of the poor peasant of Soviet Russia, then debts and wars will be things of the past. The sooner we learn our lesson in America the better.

If the wind-power used at the disarmament and unemployment conferences called by Harding could only have been harnessed we could save our coal for the next generation.

Another Savior

The latest disciple of Allen of Kansas, the savior of the public, to offer himself on the altar in the interest of the victims of the labor unions is Senator Dutell of the upper house of the State of New York.

The Senator admits that in the draft of the anti-strike bill he has introduced he has accomplished the impossible. Modestly he says:

> It offers a square deal to labor, and to capital, and to the public. No one can, properly, ask for more, and no one should receive less than that.

Labor has been getting this kind of a square deal for some time, and we suppose that many of the politicians, ministers and welfare workers who deplore industrial strife are quite honest in believing that labor can get a square deal under the system. The utter impossibility of such a thing occurring becomes quite evident when we consider that with the control of the industrial and political machinery vested in a class whose interests are opposed to labor's, labor has nothing to say as to what constitutes a square deal. Labor's weapon, the only effective means by which it can enforce its idea of a square deal, is the strike. Deprived of that, it sinks to the level of the chattel-slave. Industrial peace brought about by laws made by capitalist politicians, so far as labor is concerned, is a pax Romana—a peace of death.

Labor cannot, dare not, abide by these laws. To do so means the surrender of the few privileges gained in years of struggle and sacrifice. Labor and labor unions in the United States may be backward, but labor is not so unaware of the danger it faces that it will allow its chains to be riveted tighter by such methods.

We dare to predict that those who favor this anti-strike legislation because it brings industrial peace will find that it brings not peace but a sword.

The introduction of an anti-lynching bill in Congress gives reason to hope that some day we may make it illegal to torture little children to death in factories.

Religion and Politics

When the press of the entire world devotes columns of space to the impending death of the head of a religious denomination and almost as much to the various details concerning the selection of his successor it is not too much to assume that the capitalist world has other than a sentimental interest in the subject. It has. World capitalism to-day is depending largely upon the Roman Catholic Church to stem the tide of world revolt against capitalist society. It is only the workers who are divided on questions of creed and ritual. The capitalist class depends largely upon this division to work for its own ends.

The Roman Catholic church holds fast to the feudal conception of society. As an organization it is just as much opposed to bourgeois democracy as it is to Socialism or Communism. It still strives for temporal as well as spiritual power and has at no time compromised with the modern idea that the people have a right to govern themselves. In a country like the United States it cannot say so, but it never ceases its endeavors to discourage all initiative on the part of the mass.

As Jim Connolly once said, "The Catholic church long ago learned the lesson that any organization with a will to power must learn: to never compromise on fundamentals." This the Catholic church has never done. Its Pope, according to Catholic doctrine, is the representative of God on earth and as such is the supreme ruler in all things. He is infallible, according to the Catholic conception, and the Papacy never admits a mistake. On the lives of millions the Catholic church exercises an influence incomprehensible to one not familiar with its methods of molding the mind. Opposed to all change except a step back to feudalism, it is to-day a bulwark of the very system that rose on the ruins of feudalism.

The dream of the hierarchy of the Catholic church is a new Catholic empire in Central Europe to replace shattered Austro-Hungary. It wishes to unite Bavaria and Poland into a Catholic state and to this end the political moves of its prelates are made. France is dealing with Rome for the first time since Rome lost its privileges in that nation. Rome made no statement on the Irish question but leaned strongly towards the now abandoned policy of the English government. Rome did not want an Irish Free State because it would have meant an Irish church owing no allegiance to Rome.

Is it any wonder that the capitalist press acclaims the election of Cardinal Ratti, who conducted the negotiations in Poland for Rome and who, if the truth were known, has probably had much to do with the hostile attitude of the Polish government toward Soviet Russia? All indications point to the conclusion that the Catholic church is now to be given a free hand, politically, in the countries where its influence is strongest, and that it will once more become a place from which orders will be issued that will be obeyed by priests and potentates alike in nations where capitalism feels itself weak and in need of a powerful and cunning ally.

When the unemployed demand work at union wages instead of charity, all the charity-mongers denounce them as enemies of society.

John Palmer's Death

The Russian paper "Isvestia" of Jan. 14 carries the news of the death from typhus in the famine region of John Palmer. He was secretary to Kameneff of the Russian Relief Commission and left for Russia last May to engage in the relief work. He had been editor of the Esthonian paper "The New World" since 1917 and was universally liked and respected by those who knew him.

His death adds another name to the list, headed by John Reed, of Americans who have lost their lives that the Russian revolution might live.

"You shall not build houses and another inhabit." The old Hebrew prophets showed a gleam of class-consciousness once in a while.

Mobilize Soldiers as 50,000 Mill Slaves in New England Join Revolt

HIBBEN CALLS HOOVER'S ATTACKS MURDEROUS

Toilers United Against Plots of Oppressors

While cavalry and other armed forces of the state wait in the armories, to be hurled against the workers whenever necessary, 50,000 slaves in the cotton mills of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island are out on strike against a 20 per cent reduction in wages.

The striking workers are also battling against a restoration of the 54-hour week. This is an increase of six hours over the present 48-hour week. The labor upheaval is practically general.

Among the first of the mills to [illegible] following the walkout of the workers, was the Amoskeag mill, at Manchester, N. H., with its 15,000 "hands," the largest mill in the world.

The unanimity with which the workers are back of the present struggle is shown by the fact that at Manchester 12,032 members of the union voted for the strike, while only 118 ballots were cast in favor of accepting the new, oppressive conditions of the bosses.

A statement issued for the workers by one of their officials at Manchester, N. H., declares that "The employes of the textile mills here are confronted with a 20 per cent reduction in wages and a lengthening of the work-week to 54 hours, neither of which we believe justifiable at this time."

Howat Wins His First Battle for Recognition

(Special to The Worker.)

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—By a rising vote of 977 to 864 Alex Howat, fighting leader of the Kansas miners, won his first victory in his fight for reinstatement after expulsion by the Lewis administration. The vote came after Howat had made a dramatic entrance after being denied the floor and after two hours of debate.

It is evident that the Lewis machine has had to go to desperate lengths to maintain what control it has and that the radical element backing Howat has gained considerable strength since the last convention.

Lewis, in his reply to Howat, used "the threatening letter" hokum, one of the oldest tricks known to the officialdom of the labor movement.

His claim that his life had been threatened seems to have had little effect on the vote, as previous estimates of the strength of the opposing factions were sustained by the ballot as recorded.

It is plain, however, that the Lewis machine is not yet working as smoothly as it can and in all probabilities Howat will lose his appeal on a roll-call vote because of the many "convention" locals whose delegates have been seated by the Lewis machine.

The rank and file of the miners are with Howat and the administration knows it no matter how the vote is juggled.

PENITENTIARY FOR AMERICAN POLITICAL PRISONERS

AMERICAN LEGION OFFICER: "That's where we keep the boys who didn't believe in our late misunderstanding."

The Northcliffe press is now busy in proving that the Indian tribesmen who revolt have "a long record of lawlessness."

President Harding has refused to call a conference on housing and we are a little disappointed because the matter appears to offer just as good a chance of doing nothing as the previous subjects discussed.

The administration is much disturbed over bogus telegrams sent from Philadelphia to obtain the appointment of J. C. Overton as Register of the Treasury. Its digestive apparatus must be upset since stomaching the Newberry deal.

There is no danger that the American Committee for Russian Famine Relief will use the name of the American Red Cross in soliciting funds as the latter organization fears. In the midst of the existing depression no further handicaps are wanted.

In the Capitalist War Against Labor at Home

Above you see a picture of the type of tanks used in the war against organized labor at home. This picture was taken last week in the great steel strike at Newport, Ky. Similar tanks are being held in readiness in the strike of the New England textile workers this week. Next week it will be somewhere else.

National Demonstrations of the Unemployed, Feb. 26

There will be a nation-wide demonstration of the unemployed on February 2, as arranged by the Workers' Unemployment Council of America.

Unemployment Councils have already been established or are in the process of formation in a score of cities in the country.

News comes from Salt Lake City that the situation there is menacing. Denver, Indianapolis, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Chicago, Syracuse, Buffalo, Boston, Paterson, St. Louis, Omaha, Portland, Ore., Seattle, are a few of the cities in which the workers are taking steps to organize the unemployed in order to make demands on the government.

PRESENT CRISIS THREATENS PEACE OF COUNTRY

If the unemployment situation does not improve within a month or two, there is not the slightest doubt that there will be serious trouble.

The very fact that Congress is considering the bonus is a sign of the condition of things. They know very well that there will be no bonus law, but they want to bluff the ex-soldier, in order to have him on their side in case of trouble.

The situation will be fraught with all kinds of disaster, if, in addition to having the general unemployed men opposed to them, the ex-soldiers line up against the bosses and the government.

ONLY ONE WAY OUT

The workers are beginning to realize that there will be but one way out of the situation permanently, and that is by becoming the bosses of their jobs. In the meantime, however, something must be done to alleviate their immediate position.

They are beginning to grumble and mutter. They see the bosses and their wives and paramours enjoying the best of things, while they, their wives and children starve. They see the warehouses full of food, and the stores full of clothing, while they go hungry and cold.

They see the factories are closed, and they must walk the streets looking for a job. They know something is wrong; RADICALLY wrong, when a few capitalists, bankers of Wall Street, hold the purse strings of the country and can decide whether men will be allowed to work or not.

UNEMPLOYED MUST BE ORGANIZED

The nation-wide demonstration will bring a good part of the 10,000,000 jobless men and women together. It will give direction to their demands. It will organize them into a fighting, militant body to fight alongside organized labor for the solution of the GREAT question of to-day—UNEMPLOYMENT AND THE JOB.

Unions are [illegible] to make the week of February 20 to 26, UNEMPLOYMENT WEEK. The time for action has come. MAKE A GIANT PROTEST AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT!

Accuses Hoover Again Attempting Soviet Ruin, Attacks Relief Work, Adds Millions to Death List; U. S. Aid Is Not Nearly Enough, Says Hibben

"UNCLE! UNCLE! GIVE ME A PIECE OF BREAD! JUST A VERY LITTLE PIECE OF BREAD, UNCLE!"

"With this cry ringing in my ears, a cry coming from millions of starving Russian children in the famine district, I came back to America resolved to do all in my power to give them the little piece of bread they asked for," said Captain Paxton Hibben, speaking to the guests at the Organized Labor "Hunger Banquet," held at Webster Hall, the evening of February eleventh, under the auspices of the Friends of Soviet Russia.

Captain Hibben was the last speaker on the program which included Timothy Healey, as chairman, Claire Sheridan, Lewis Gannet, of The Nation, Joseph Schlossberg, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Moissaye J. Olgin, Abraham Lefkovitz, of the Teachers' Federation, A. Brownstein, of the Furriers' Union, Alfred Boulton, of the Stereotypers' Union, William Dunne and others.

All speakers dwelt on the [illegible] for increasing [illegible] labor to aid the Russian [illegible] the limit of their ability. "The Russian workers are fighting the battle for the workers of all the world," one speaker put it and that this was the view of all present was evidenced by the applause greeting any reference to the debt owed the Russian workers by wage-earners of other lands.

Captain Hibben began by saying that he had prepared a statement he would read before treating with his experiences in the famine districts, as he wished to be sure what he said concerning a matter on which he felt deeply. The statement follows:

By PAXTON HIBBEN

Being His Remarks at the Hunger Banquet for Russian Famine Relief, Webster Hall, Feb. 11

Three weeks ago, at a meeting of the Foreign Policy Association at the Hotel Astor, I seem to have started something which has assumed amazing proportions. I asked a plain question:

"Is there an effort to concentrate or to limit in any way the relief which is being given by the American people to the starving in Russia, with the possibility always that those who do not receive relief will become dissatisfied with the present government of Russia, and overturn that government? And if there is that tendency or that purpose to limit the relief that we are extending to Russia, why is it being so limited and what is the idea behind it?"

Hits Times' Propaganda.

We have to-day a categorical answer to that question. The propaganda emanating from Washington, from the Department of Justice and the Department of State and the Department of Commerce, all official departments of our government, which is appearing in the New York Times and, I believe, in the Chicago Tribune, is a definite effort to limit the relief which is being given by the American people to the starving of Russia.

The effect of this propaganda is, and is intended to be, so to impress those whose generosity of heart might otherwise tempt them to give of their substance to help the starving millions of Russia with the possibility that some of the funds so contributed might be handled by the Soviet Government of Russia, that their giving is at least discouraged if not inhibited.

The idea back of this propaganda seems to be to brand every man or woman in the United States who dares to save a starving child in Russia otherwise than thru the

The Textile Strike

The strike of the textile workers in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Maine is the first strong sign that the campaign of wage-reductions without resistance has about run its course and that from now on the workers will put up a bitter fight to prevent the slashing of their already attenuated incomes.

In the present strike, brought on by a threatened cut of 20 per cent, following a 22 per cent some time ago, the organized textile operatives are represented by two unions: the United Textile Workers and the Amalgamated Textile Workers, the latter having fought the great Lawrence strike of 1912.

The daily press carries the usual stories of troops being held in readiness to assist the mill-owners, and it is quite evident that the authorities stand ready to re-enact the bloody drama with which the American workers have become familiar in every instance where the interests of the wage-earners and those of the corporations clash.

The industry is completely tied up at this writing, the workers of all except a few mills being to all intents and purposes a unit in resisting the proposed cut.

Now is the time for all class-conscious workers in the [illegible] industry to work and agitate for one textile union embracing [illegible] workers, to sink minor differences and build a powerful [illegible] organization that will deliver the textile workers from the [illegible] than slave conditions under which many of them are [illegible].

If out of this strike will come such an [illegible] mighty step forward will have been made by [illegible] of this nation.

RUSSIA

FROM ONE IN PRISON

Russia, what have you been to me!
What are you to me?

There was first the barbaric tale
Of your growling tribes,
And their sudden calamitous [illegible],
Simple as the seasons of their plains.

And then longing —
A quick freedom — Stopped by a hand that stunk of the blood of thousands.
And then the sky was gray:
And delicate clear words
Complained with weary bitterness
That the world was stale . . .
And Dostoieffsky's tortured voice,
Cried out, in the words of a child,
The driven agonies of your soul . . .

And then the sky was dark yellow,
Banded with red and black,
Presaging anger . . .

And then the stars were bloodied,
And the earth shouted;

And then came Revolution:
Moving like relentless music over the earth,
Streaming from the flowering heart of the people, —
Imperative, unknowing,
Speaking new words it hardly understood,
Built of the slow strength of years.
Revolution!

A new wind has passed over the plains,
A wind of many voices;
Crying the revenge of hunger
And the fullness of new hope.

Joy, oh, Russia!
The joy of release,
The colored pulse of creation
Beating in the veins of your people.

Free! Free!
O, Russia, free in your wounds,
In the beautiful blood of your striving.
O, Christ nation,
Saviour,
Crucified by the master thieves.
O, warrior deliverer,
Calling, calling,
Thru this thick slow night,
To the answering hope in my prisoned breast.

Russia,
Where the flame of our days has been liberated,
Mother of the passion which is my child and my master:
The passion of Revolution . . .
In famine and suffering,
You have been sustenance to our souls
And breath to our minds.

Scarlet fire of deliverance,
Alight forever in Russia's heart—
Oh, steadfast lacerated heart!—
Thru hunger and disease
And the vile wars of plunderers,
Burning ever, as a signal to us
Who wait
Amid the tears of children
And the agonies of the poor
Your strong coming.

Charles Ashleigh.

Fight the Famine!

The reports coming from the Volga provinces are heart-rending. Nothing can picture the misery and suffering that the people are enduring.

At a recent congress held in Moscow, a delegate from Samara made a report of conditions. He pointed out with what joy the peasants received the seeds for autumn sowing, and how the half-starved peasants have been ploughing up the land with their wasted and starving horses.

But the hope raised by the supply of seed is now giving place to renewed anxiety, as the relief they receive is most inadequate when compared with the magnitude of the calamity.

In the Samara Province alone, more than 2,000,000 people are starving. In many places, only 10 per cent of the starving population receive relief. It is hoped that it will be possible to feed about 50 per cent of the adult population.

All the remainder of the population will die by the slow process of starvation during the seven months before the next harvest will be available.

In Buguruslansky County, which used to be one of the most fertile areas, seventeen of the fifty volosts will be wiped out completely. In Stavropol County, not more than 10 per cent of its total population of 180,000 are expected to survive.

The delegate referred to Dr. Nansen's visit to the villages in the Samara Province. In the village of Kolivan, 424 persons had died of hunger. Out of 4,000 horses in the district, only 125 remain. When Dr. Nansen was there he spoke to the peasants. Women fell at his feet and showed him their exhausted, starving children, and implored his help.

Sickness and the death rate are increasing from month to month. About 140 children are dying daily in each district of the Samara Province. Many mothers lose their reason at the sight of the agony of their children. Some carry their children into the fields and leave them there to die; others kill them with their own hands to save them from the tortures of slow death from hunger.

The delegate concluded with the words: "The peasants of the famine area are appealing to you with the last effort of their exhausted strength. Comrades, hurry with your help!"

The Congress was also reminded of Colonel Wedgwood's statement in the House of Commons: "Had the British Government given for famine relief, even half of the sums they wasted on help for Denikin and Koltchak, there would not have been one case of hunger death in Russia."

He pointed out that all the various capitalist Governments and organizations had contributed $53,750,000 for famine relief, while the Allied Governments spent up to April, 1921, $900,000,000 in maintaining an army of occupation in Germany.

How much was spent by them on the armies of Denikin, Koltchak, Wrangel and the Archangel Government, it was impossible to say, but the sums must have been enormous —and that money was spent on bringing death an destruction to the Russian people.

The revolutionary workers of France have devised a unique method of procuring aid. During the month of January they collected food, clothing, etc. These goods were to be transported by train from Metz to Stettin, passing thru various German cities. Truck load after truck load was gathered in many cities, till finally a train of about 25 cars was on hand, bearing 200 tons of food and clothing. The Paris workers have despatched a fresh cargo of rice.

The British Workers' Relief Committee is collecting all kinds of jewelry. The Committee has also designed a little flag to be sold for relief purposes, more than 10,000 having already been disposed of. The collections of the radical British workers have risen to above $19,750.

The radical workers and prominent artists and scientists of Greece have organized a Central Relief Committee, which has branches in all parts of the country. Despite the petty intrigues and interference of the government, which has not hesitated even to arrest some members of the local committees, the organization has succeeded in raising 40,000 drachmas, half of which has already been forwarded to the International Workers' Relief Committee, Berlin.

The nineteenth vessel chartered by the International Workers' Relief Committee has left Stockholm for Reval. This ship, the "Egil", carried 67,898 kilos grain, 3663 kilos other food, 2570 kilos clothing, 450 soap.

The Argentine Workers' Famine Relief organization has already secured the affiliation of more than 100 trade unions comprising 300,000 members. The committee was organized by the Communists.

BENEFIT AT CLEVELAND

Sunday, February 26, The Working Women's Educational League will hold a grand concert and dance at 6 p. m., Talmud Tora Hall, East 55th St., Cleveland, Ohio. The proceeds go toward famine relief in Soviet Russia. Charles Baker will be the speaker and on the program are included The Russian Dramatic Club and the well known Art Group of Cleveland. Music for the dance furnished by Rosenthal's Orchestra.

Admission 50 cents a couple. Every person interested in helping his starving conmrades in Russia will help make this entertainment a success by being present.

Calls Hoover's Attacks Murderous

American Relief Administration as a "red" or an associate of "reds." The New York Globe has stated the logical consequence of this campaign against charity and broad humanitarianism:

"The natural consequence of the silly attack upon various bodies which are collecting funds and food for Russians in the famine areas will be to add to the millions of impotent and innocent victims."

Of course this will be the result, and those who have launched this campaign to starve the Russians know it full well. Back in 1919, Mr. Hoover sent a cablegram to President Wilson, referring to an American relief organization then operating abroad in which he criticised the methods of that organization and added that if the facts were to become known the resulting scandal would be a blow to organized charity for a generation—I quote from memory. He proposed, not that that organization be publicly arraigned in the press, but that men whom he would choose should be placed in control of that organization to reorganize it. And it was done.

It's Different Now.

Now, Mr. Hoover knew then—and I quote Mr. Hoover now merely as an authority on relief work; certainly there is none greater—[illegible] an attack upon one relief organization as inefficient or incompetent or dishonest would inevitably [illegible]ect upon all relief agencies seeking funds from the public; and as [illegible] Hoover was himself then seeking funds from the public for relief work, and did subsequently go before the public for funds [illegible] relief work, he very naturally [illegible] not want to do a thing which [illegible] inevitably discredit all relief.

[illegible] now it is different. The American Relief Administration has received its funds from the Congress [illegible] it has no need to make a public appeal.

But there are other organizations whose aim is as much the saving of the famine victims of Russia as the American Relief Administration—[illegible] who impose no conditions whatever upon their relief, save that those to whom food is sent be hungry.

They must go to the people of the United States and appeal for funds if they are to save anyone.

Needs Are Not Met?

And this attack on all relief organizations not controlled by the American Relief Administration or not actively hostile to the Russian Government, ties their hands and makes their task, already a difficult one, almost an impossible one

For let no man think for a moment that the American Relief Administration's allotment of food for the starving of Russia will meet the need. It will not.

Immediately above the article in the Times this morning attacking all other relief agencies not semi-official there is a London dispatch quoting the American Relief Administration itself as stating that "official request was made by the Soviet government for further additions to the child feeding program in certain Volga districts due to the increasingly terrible conditions in the Volga valley."

27 Million Starving.

The Times itself, on December 26, in an editorial, placed the number of starving in Russia at 15,000,000, and on January 7 quoted President Kalinin of Russia as putting the figure at 27,000,000.

By no possibility can the American Relief Administration feed 6,000,000 people even so little as 14 ounces of bread per day until the harvest is in.

Who is going to keep the other 9,000,000 Russian farmers from starving? There are about 9,000,000 children to feed. If every bit of the American Relief Administration's stock goes to feed children only, there will be something like 3,000,000 children to keep alive until the middle of next August. Who will do it? And if this campaign against the relief agencies which are trying to complete the job of saving the millions of starving in Russia has the effect of curtailing the gifts of the generous people of the United States to save those millions, who is responsible for their needless death?

Let "Murder" Stand.

In a letter to me of February 3, Mr. Hoover took exception to what he termed my fear that he would commit murder. I should, myself, have hesitated to put a name to what must be the effect of his propaganda from Washington in which Mr. Hoover himself is so largely quoted. But Mr. Hoover has put a name to it. Let it stand.

Understand me; I am throwing no stones at Mr. Hoover. He has got together $47,500,000 for the starving of Russia, and a man who can do that I take off my hat to.

For what I am interested in—and what we are all interested in, I take it—is those people over there who have fought the good fight—who have existed for four years in the face of an enemy world—and who now have their backs to the wall, driven into a corner by sheer hunger.

I don't want to see them lose that fight; but most of all I don't want to see them lose that fight for the lack of food of which you and I have plenty. And what they have got to understand down in Washington is that the war is over, and all the dark and shady methods of the war—the propaganda and the terrorizing of people into silence—are done with.

Hitting the Politicians.

And that if millions of workers all over this country want to take up the job of feeding the starving of Russia when the supplies of the American Relief Administration are exhausted—as workers, to help the workers of the only government of workers, by workers and for workers in the world—it is nobody's business to interfere. And those who try to interfere are the ones who are making politics out of relief, not those who are trying to feed the starving.

At the conclusion of his address the audience rose and tendered Capt. Hibben an ovation. Tim Healy, in his capacity as chairman, called for donations and pledges and approximately $10,000 was raised for the famine sufferers.

Officials of the Friends of Soviet Russia stated that Capt. Hibben had been routed under their auspices for a tour of eastern cities.

"The [illegible] Russia [illegible]," says A. A. [illegible], Commercial Director of the Russian Soviet Government Bureau in the United States. "Russia is passing thru a difficult period. There is famine in a part of the country, there is industrial dislocation. In spite of that, brave men and women are fighting on the economic front, taking hold of the situation, and establishing firmly the Workers' and Peasants' Republic."

Heller, who recently returned from a six months trip in Soviet Russia, will describe Russian conditions as he saw them at a meeting to be held Sunday, February 19th, 8 p. m., at Food Workers' Hall, 133 West 51st St., under the auspices of the West Side Branch, Workers' Party. Admission, 10 cents. His subject will be "The Regeneration of Russian Industries."

INTERNATIONAL LABOR NEWS NOTES

AUSTRALIA

The Australian Court of Arbitration and Conciliation has refused to concede a 44-hour week to the national unions in Australia, because of the economic conditions that are said to prevail. This does not prevent unions and employers from 44-hour agreements among themselves.

Holding that the Washington Conference can offer no hope to the workers, the Australian Council of Action has decided to call a Pan-Pacific Conference of Labor organizations to prevent war. Until the Trade Union Congress of next June the Council will proceed energetically in its activities for the One Big Union and the extension of the Labor Research and Information Bureau.

ENGLAND

In preparation for the coming national election the Labor Party is planning to put 400 candidates in the field. Tho the Co-operative Society as a whole has negatived the proposal to join the Labor Party politically it will support the Party in many localities.

In view of the present situation in the mining industry the Derbyshire Miners' Council has decided that it is not desirable that miners' officials enter Parliament. Two officials have withdrawn their candidatures in consequence.

HAWAII

The planters have been waging a vigorous "open shop" campaign which has seriously weakened the unions. Wage reductions have become general. In answer to this attack there has been formed a union known as the United Workers, an amalgamation of all the unions outside of the A. F. of L. and with jurisdiction only in the Hawaiian Islands. The Japanese and the Filipino Labor Unions with a memberchip of 35,000 have agreed to affiliate with the new organization which disregards race and color. The various small "white" unions are awaiting advice from their Internationals.

HUNGARY

The Social Democratic Party has surrendered to the Horthy regime for a fictitious amnesty to only a small number of political prisoners. Because of the split between the Horthy group (small farmers, middle class, ex-officers, officers, and small tradesmen) and the Royalists (big capitalists and big landowners) there is a good opportunity for the workers becoming a political force. But the Communist Party is in no position to utilize this situation immediately. Its Central Executive Committee is compelled to function outside the country and is in the midst of a serious factional dispute involving Bela Kun. The Comintern is investigating the whole matter in order to speed up action.

ITALY

The country is in the throes of a serious economic crisis. Labor leaders say that the official estimate of the Minister of Labor of 500,000 being unemployed is far below the actual number out of work. A long continued drought coupled with the international financial difficulties is largely responsible for the depression. The cost of living continues to soar and the governments unemployment relief fund of 1,300,000,000 lire s now exhausted. Except for the metal workers and printers, the treasuries of all the unions have been emptied by the call for relief.

SCOTLAND

GLASGOW.—The Clyde engineering employers are attempting to run a bogus union of foremen to prevent their being part of the trade union movement. Firms are advised to start in their works a branch of the "Foremen's Mutual Benefit Society"—the employers paying 2 shillings 6 pence into the funds for every 2 shillings 6 pence contributed by the men. A condition of membership is that all connection with trade unions or kindred bodies must be severed.

[illegible] Convention of the Young Workers

The Convention Call of the Young Workers' League of America has been [illegible] enthusiastically [illegible] by the Young Workers' League [illegible]. It has been [illegible] endorsed [illegible] of Chicago, H. Gomez; Young [illegible] Workers' League of Detroit, A. [illegible] Boston, H. Caster; and the Young Workers' League of New York City, O. Carlson, H. Seligson and G. Schu[illegible].

Here Is the Convention Call to Organize Young Workers League April 15

The Convention Call to organize the Young Workers' League of America is as follows:

To All Young Workers and Workers' Organizations in the U. S.:

Comrades:—The time has come when the working-class youth of this country must take the initiative in creating a solid front against their common enemy—the capitalist class which oppresses and enslaves them, which dwarfs their bodies and poisons their minds.

The young workers must be roused to action against the exploiters who force them into the hell-holes of industry to do the hardest and most disagreeable kind of work.

When war is necessary to expand the capitalists' field of exploitation, these young workers are sent to be the cannon fodder. Upon their return (those who do return) their oppression and exploitation becomes greater than ever before.

This applies to the working-class youth generally—agrarian and industrial. These are the facts of the case, and yet no organization exists which can rally these millions of young wage-slaves into a compact fighting organization.

The time is ripe for action. The need for a national organization of the youthful toilers embracing proletarian students as well as the workers in the industries and on the farms was never more imperative than now.

Therefore we, the undersigned organizations, thru the national organization committee of the Young Workers' League of America, call upon all young people's organizations to unite with us in a joint convention to be held in New York beginning April 15, 1922, upon the basis of the following points to launch the Young Workers' League of America as the fighting vanguard of the working class youth.

1 Unity of all existing militant young workers' organizations in this country. Unity, not in words alone, but the unity which comes from an understanding of our common interest in the struggle for working-class emancipation.

2) Our aim to be the abolition of capitalism by means of the Workers' Republic—a government functioning thru the power of the proletariat to the exclusion of all other classes—as the first step towards the establishment of an international classless society, free from all political and economic slavery.

3) A mass organization. Our attitude must be to educate and to organize as large a section of the Young Workers as can possibly be reached. In order to accomplish this we must strive to reach them at whatever points they congregate or work (shops, factories, stores, mines, schools, farms, trade unions, etc.). Our tactics must be such as to win the broad masses of working youth to our point of view.

4) A militant organization. The first step towards making the Young Workers' League a mass organization can be accomplished if we make it an active, aggressive body that fights for the interests of the working class in general and the young workers in particular. It must show its sincerity and purpose, not only thru words but thru deeds.

5) Education thru activity; that is to say, education thru active participation in the everyday struggles of the working class as the essential feature in training the young workers. Study classes, lectures, debates, etc., must likewise be carried on in every league to furnish the theoretical Marxian back-ground for the youth.

6) Condemnation of the young people's Internationals and organizations affiliated or sympathising with the Second or Second-and-a-half Internationals and recognition of the Young Communist and Communist Internationals as the real leaders of the revolutionary workers of the world.

7) Organisations subscribing to the Convention Call, and sending delegate to the convention must agree to merge into the Young Workers' League of America.

All organisations agreeing to this will immediately communicate with the National Organisation Committee of the Young Workers' League, O. Carlson, Secretary, 80 East 11th Street, Room 402, New York City.

The worker dared to use his head,
And for the crime was called a "Red."

The Daily Worker is coming

These organizations, representing many hundreds of active and militant young workers in four of the largest cities of this country, call upon the young workers everywhere to join in the formation of a solid front by the working-class youth by answering the convention call.

All organizations answering the call should send in the following information: Name of organization, number of members in good standing, names and addresses of secretary and organizer, copies of present constitution and program, and all other information that would be of aid to committee.

Acceptances Received Daily.

Acceptances are being received daily, New York being the first to go on record as favoring the convention on the basis of the call. Chicago, Boston, Detroit followed and we have assurances that other cities will accept immediately.

Los Angeles reports that an active group of comrades are building up the movement on the Pacific Coast.

It might be possible to have a delegate representing the entire organization on the Pacific Coast; but the expense is tremendous and only by the financial aid of the comrades everywhere can this be accomplished.

It is gratifying to note that the Workers' Party is lending active assistance to the League in aiding it to organize. In Syracuse, Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles, Boston, Philadelphia and elsewhere the older comrades have indicated their willingness to assist in the organization of branches of the Young Workers' League.

Plans for Raising Funds.

The leagues thruout the country have plans well under way for a series of affairs to defray convention expenses. New York is to conduct a dance and concert for the benefit of the national organization; Chicago is running a ball in conjunction with the City Central Committee of the Workers' Party; Detroit is arranging a Commune Ball which they are putting over strong. Chelsea, Mass., has promised active assistance.

A special feature of interest among the leagues was the appearance of the official organ of the Young Workers' League of America—Youth. Comment pours in, as well as contributions, all seeking to make this magazine a strong revolutionary organ. The distribution is progressing rapidly. Ann Arbor reports that the ten copies sent them were disposed of upon receipt; Chicago has 400 which they claim will go; Detroit 250, and New York 1000.

Special Issue of "Youth."

Those responsible for the publication of Youth urge all comrades to turn in receipts immediately as the next issue is being made up and the printer must be paid.

A special Convention Edition will appear shortly containing the provisional Manifesto, Program and Constitution for discussion and comment.

Also, special articles of vital interest will appear. The next issue will be much larger than the proposed size. There will be a slight advance in price for this issue. Price will be 15 cents.

PLOTKIN TO SPEAK

S. Plotkin will speak on "The Political Situation in the East, and its International Importance." at the meeting of the Young Workers' League, Sunday night, February 19, at 1258 Boston Road.

[illegible]
I saw a man in [illegible]
Who could speak German
And Polish and Russian;
He asked me if the baggage
Heaped beside me
Was my own possession.
But when I told him "No,"
That it belonged
To a Czecho-Slovak delegation
Going to Moscow,
He drew away regretfully,
Still watching it,
So I asked him why
He had questioned me,
And WHAT
Was his occupation,
And then—
He shuffled away quickly,
And they told me he was A SPECULATOR
Buying up Russian roubles
To sell in Poland,
Or any kind of stuff
To sell in Russia.

I saw in the station at Orsha
A well-fed woman
Seated on a bag of grain
With other bags heaped round her
Waiting for her train
To Moscow;
And they said she also
Was a Speculator,
And that the price of grain
In the "free market"
Was twice as much in Moscow
As in Orsha,
And she was taking up
These few bags
To sell for many Hundred thousand roubles.
And I told them to ask her
About her business,
But they said: "What use?
She would deny it."

Then I said: "WHY
Will they not tell?
Is it not now ALLOWED
To buy and sell grain
At a PROFIT?
Have you not new regulations
Permitting this private trading?"
"Certainly," they answered,
"It is LAWFUL,
But they are ASHAMED
It is not considered in Russia
An HONORABLE occupation!
They are making MONEY
Instead of helping the famine!"

FIGHTING LUMBER WORKERS

A new militant spirit has been aroused among the men in the logging camps since the decision of the recent Canadian Lumber Workers Convention to seek affiliation with the Red Labor Union International, a report from the Union declares. The lumber workers suffered more heavily from wage cuts than any other class of labor during the past year. The first cut met with no organized resistance, and so another soon came along. Still no real fight was put up, and the same thing was repeated. Before the middle of the summer, wages had been reduced to less than half the amount they had been in 1920.

Now, however, according to the report, "the scene is changed, for this year the loggers are going to make a concerted effort to get back to 'normalcy.' They have decided that no longer are they going to endure what they endured last year. They intend next winter when they come to town they will come with a 'stake.'—The classconscious loggers are lining up to do battle for themselves and their class. The fighting pioneer spirit of the loggers has not been broken yet; and the boss loggers are soon going to find that the Lumber Workers' Union is not dead as they thought it was. They have spent more money to kill this union than it should take to kill a dozen unions.

Do not forget the fact that the boss loggers are about tired of running a training school. They want men who are able to produce the goods. Now is the time to go after the boss loggers, and get him on the run."

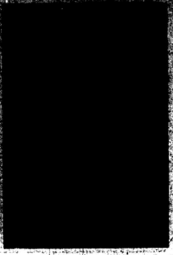
AS A CONVICT



AS HE APPEARS TO-DAY

Harden the Line!

By BRUCE ROGERS

The workers suffer from no more abundant folly than their boob notions of brotherhood. We live in no elysium of mutual love but upon a field of struggle, the fruits of whose victories are carried not to the good and the noble, but to the cunning and the wolfish.

Let us understand once and for all that whether at our hands or those of the exploiters the governing power is the capacity and the will to take life, with its corollaries; to limit, to restrain or to withhold the enjoyment of life. Our age is of iron. Our movement is one of intolerant ruthless conquest of the earth.

There is no way to artificialize unity. There is no harmony. Orchestral notes are the stress and struggle of air particles through cruel slits in reeds and pipes under force and the whining of billions of atoms of resin crushed between horsehair and taut cat-gut.

There is no comradeship of the mind. That is an unbound realm of infinite diversities into whose blue even the mad may ply the wing of fancy. The only brotherhood is in the community of action under common resolve in pursuance of mutual objectives.

Democracy in the modern sense is a bourgeois philosophy having its origin in the exigencies and needs of the commercial classes, and has had its development contemporaneous with the overthrow of feudalism and the rise and accession to power of capitalist imperialism.

Patrick Henry made his impassioned cry, ever famous in the gorgeous hokum of Fourth of July oratory, not because he wanted to establish a universally free society, but because he chafed under the restraints of the British Crown and wanted to be free to set up a capitalist dictatorship. Liberty is not desired as a beatitude but as an opportunity to seize and hold our own. It is not the new day but the way to a new day. It is the bridge to new rule.

We are prisoners of revered phrases. Under these beguiling follies we endure a vicious eternality of betrayal and treachery at the hands of our own leaders who become in turn the overseers of the employers.

They explain their defections by saying: "The workers are not ready. We can advance no faster than the intelligence of the mass will warrant."

This is a bald lie. More often they have risen to influence upon promises appealing to the workers' will to revolt. Then to become the lieutenants of the enemy and possess themselves of the easy bribes and rewards of treason. Our ranks are thus softened to the hard impact of tyranny.

We must harden the line. The workers of America, not less than in other White Governments, are held by virtue of a compact between their own false leaders and the imperialists.

The stupidest coolies would find a way to readjust the mortality rates of their betrayers. We must hound them out of leadership.

Like London's wolf-dog stalking the moose we must never let them rest or refresh themselves. Exposure, denunciation, contumely, insult and abuse must be their never-failing portion.

There is no more serious barrier than the wire entanglements of our own treasons protecting the enemy from us. We must cut them through. Harden the line!

The High Cost of Scabbing

Because a notorious scabbing agency, R. J. Coach & Co., of Cleveland, failed to collect the full amount due for services rendered, they have sued the Associated Building Employers of Detroit, and certain intimate details of the campaign against the workers, usually discreetly concealed, have come to light.

The testimony reveals that the Association of Building Employers spent over $36,000 in 40 days for thugs and strike-breakers in the strike of Steamfitters and Plumbers that took place in the summer of 1920.

It may be of interest to note that one of the leading members of the Association is also a member of the Mayor's Committee on Unemployment with which the Detroit Federation of Labor recently refused to cooperate.

In the course of his testimony the chief scab describes his efforts on behalf of humanity in the following edifying terms:

"In their silent, secret effective way, the industrial operatives uproot relentlessly the weeds of dishonesty, disloyalty and discontent. Thru their efforts unity of purpose is established between employer and employee. Our operatives soon end the reign of labor agitators in shop or factory. We do not care to say more on this subject."

One of the "effective" methods employed in this particular strike consisted in waylaying and blackjacking two business agents of the union and several others of the strikers. Coach alleges in his case that:

"Plaintiff agreed and contracted to and with the said defendants to alleviate, break up and put down certain labor agitation, disorders and strikes then existing and being waged against said defendants and its members, in said city of Detroit and County of Wayne, and in which said labor disputes, disorders and strikes defendants and its members were greatly and deeply concerned and interested."

Coach proves the existence of the above agreement by submitting as Exhibit A the following communication:

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 27, 1920.

R. J. Coach & Co.:

You are authorized to detail for us operatives as will be verbally ordered and from whom reports will be submitted at rates as follows: One superintendent at $50 per day, operatives at $20 per day, plus necessary expenses. It is understood that we can terminate this arrangement on 48 hours notice.

Associated Building Employers.

The largest bill presented is that for services rendered on September 11, when probably an unusually large amount of slugging was considered necessary. The itemized account is as follows:

C. R. at $50 per day	$50.00
26 Operatives at $20 per day	520.00
Expenses	254.50
MC, NO, FX, PL, FS at $50 per day	250.00
49 Operatives at $25 per day	1,225.00
Expenses	540.00
Total	$2,839.50

The bills submitted clearly establish the fact that a conspiracy existed between the plaintiff and the defendant to break up the union; and members of the union intend to institute proceedings against both parties on the basis of this fact.

By [illegible]

An old-time [illegible] in the ranks of labor has [illegible] his activities after an [illegible] absence of more than two years.

Joseph M. Coldwell, of Providence, R. I., is a veteran of the revolutionary working class movement and participant in many of labor's struggles.

He has often been a victim of the venom and hatred of the master class but his courage still remains undaunted.

Born of the working class his early boyhood days were spent in the factories and mills instead of in schools and playgrounds. His education has been acquired as he aptly puts it, "in the University of Hard Knocks."

In 1913 he was the leader in a strike of the Draper Co. employees in Hopedale, Mass. For his part in this battle of the workers, and for protesting against the murder of one of the strikers by policemen, he was sentenced to serve one year and three months in the county jail in Worcester, Mass.

His Eyes Are Opened.

This sentence was an eye-opener to Coldwell as he had previously been a firm believer in the so-called morality that he had been taught in the public schools.

He had always believed that the purpose of law was to protect the individual and to bring about justice between man and man.

He learned that law is nothing more than the expression of the will of the ruling class. And as long as the capitalist class is the ruling class their will is law.

Coming out of jail he resumed his activities with the workers and continued until this country was thrown into a state of hysteria thru its participation in the world war.

He was one of the many victims who was chosen by the tools of the master class to be sent away.

Charged with violation of the Espionage act he was found guilty and sentenced to serve three years in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Georgia.

He served his sentence in Atlanta, and while there was intimately associated with Eugene V. Debs. They passed many hours together talking over their experiences in the labor movement and the many different phases and developments in the workers' struggle for their emancipation.

Released on Xmas Day.

To his surprise he found his name included among the twenty-four who had been granted executive clemency and were to be released on Christmas Day.

He had refused to make application for executive clemency several times, having refused to accept parole on two different occasions.

He had been called before the Parole Board without any solicitation on his part and was asked if he desired to make application for parole.

His reply was, "I will not accept parole and leave Gene Debs behind me in prison."

The day before their release Gene Debs and Joe Coldwell had their last conversation together in prison. They discussed their future activities and both agreed that the thing to do at the present time was to work unceasingly for the release of all Class War prisoners.

They shook hands on this proposition and parted. Owing to the prison discipline they did not see each other again. Coldwell was released at 9.30 Sunday morning and brought to the depot and put on a train and sent on his way to Providence, R. I., his home.

Gene Debs was released later and these two veterans of the class war have not seen each other since that morning when they shook hands and agreed to work for their more unfortunate comrades who were still held by the enemy as prisoners of war.

Coldwell on the Job

Joseph M. Coldwell is on the job He is working under the direction of the Workers' Defense Union speaking at meetings and meeting with his old-time comrades urging upon them the necessity of continuing the work that succeeded in releasing Gene Debs, himself and others.

His meetings are a great success. He has just finished a very successful tour of New England.

He is now holding a series of meetings in New York and vicinity, after which he will go on a trip thru the middle west.

Meetings are now being arranged and organizations desiring dates should communicate at once with the Workers Defense Union, Room 405, 7 East 15th Street, New York City.

Long Known Sacco.

Comrade Coldwell is intimately acquainted with Nicola Sacco, now awaiting sentence of death, with Barthelmeo Vanzetti, in Massachusetts.

The case of these two men affects him deeply as Sacco was with him in the Hopedale strike, and he cannot conceive how this comrade could at any time commit such a dastardly deed as the robbery and murder of two men for personal gain.

He believes they are the victims of racial hatred and capitalist class persecution, and will do all in his power to secure their release.

[illegible]

NOTE:—The principles and program of the Trade Union Educational League are becoming of increasing importance and interest. This is especially true in view of the fact that "The Labor Herald," the official monthly of "The League," is about to make its bow to the American working-class. "The Worker," with this issue, therefore, begins the publication of "The League's" program and invites its readers to comment on it thru letters to the editor. The first installment takes up the situation confronting the American working-class to-day. The new installment will review the "political infancy" of the American working-class movement. The opening article is as follows:

THE SITUATION

In every country but one an advanced state of capitalism has produced a highly developed trade union movement. The single exception is the United States.

Here we have a very elaborate industrial system and the world's most militant and powerful capitalist class, but, paradoxically enough, a trade union movement which, for general weakness and backwardness, has few if any equals in the predominantly industrial countries.

No matter what vital phase of our trade union movement we consider we must admit, if we are honest, that the workers in other lands are ahead of us.

In the important matter of numerical strength, for instance, we make a wretched showing. At present, considering the ravages made in our ranks by the employers, it is doubtful if we have as many as 4,000,000 trade unionists in this country, or about one unionist to each 27 of the general population.

Showing of Other Countries

England, by contrast, has approximately 7,500,000 trade unionists, or about one in each six of her 44,000,000 people.

Germany shows even better, with over 12,000,000 trade unionists, or about one in each 4½ of her 55,000,000 population.

In other words, the English trade union movement is proportionately about four times as strong numerically as ours, and that of Germany six times as strong.

For the American unions to be as large as those of Germany, considering the difference in the size of the two nations, they would have to have no less than 24,000,000 members.

Compare this giant figure with the paltry 4,000,000 members that our unions now possess and one gets an idea of how far behind we are in this respect.

In England and Germany (not to mention many other countries) the mass of the working-class has been organized. In the United States hardly a start has yet been made.

Obsolete Craft Unionism

Structurally our trade unions are equally backward in development. The American labor movement is the only important one in the world which still remains based upon the principle of craft unionism.

In all other countries the main labor movements, accepting the logic of capitalistic consolidation, have endorsed the principle of having one union in each industry and have made great progress towards its realization.

Thruout the rest of the world we find many single unions covering whole industries—such as building, metal, railroad, general transport, clothing, printing, etc.—that have been built up recently by amalgamating the original craft organizations. Others are constantly being created.

In England the giant new Transport and General Workers' Union amalgamation is taking place; the Amalgamated Engineering Union is likewise making substantial headway towards its goal of one union in the metal industry; and in many other trades the process of consolidation is going on apace.

Big Unions in Germany

In Germany the metal workers, during the past few years, have completed their record-breaking industrial union, which now counts up 1,800,000 members; the railroad, postal, telegraph, and telephone workers, already closely organized, are combining their forces into a great organization of 1,500,000 members to control all forms of transportation and communication; and the workers in the other German industries are likewise closing up their ranks rapidly.

In Belgium the original welter of craft unions has been hammered together into about a dozen industrial unions, and plans are now being worked out to combine the whole movement into one real union.

The Australian workers have also just gone on record for a similar project.

The same rapid drift towards industrial unionism is in evidence everywhere except in the United States.

Here we are still sticking in the mud of craft unionism and progressing at only a snail's pace.

Standpatism has become an ingrained gospel with our trade union officials. There is hardly a breath of progress among them. They disregard the obvious fact that as the capitalists close up their ranks the workers must do likewise.

Common Sense Called Dream

With rare exceptions they are content to plod along with anywhere up to 20 or 30 autonomous unions in the various industries and to consider such a primitive condition, with all its resultant craft scabbery and weakness, as the highest practical stage of trade union organization.

The man who proposes common sense amalgamation along industrial lines they consider a dreamer, if not a disruptive fanatic.

From the standpoint of structure the American labor movement is at about the point of development that the European unions were 15 years ago.

The Housewife in the Class Struggle

By CATHERINE GITLOW

In 1908, when prices began to soar upon the necessaries of life, it was the housewife who first felt the pinch. The East Side housewives were the worst affected because the meat prices went up high.

Meat with the Jewish proletarian family is one of the most important items in his food, not because he eats a great deal of it but because it is the cheapest.

A Jewish housewife would buy a pound of meat and when it was cheap would get a piece of lung and fat for nothing with it.

She knows how to make a meal of it to feed a family of four or five, but when prices began to soar on meat and when money was charged also on lung and fat the East Side proletarian housewives felt the pinch very hard, and we see them spontaneously unorganized start a strike against the retail kosher butchers.

Their leaders came from the housewives themselves, but it would be better to say that they had no leaders. They did some picketing and had some clashes with the police. The police, on the other hand, were not stingy with their sticks, and the women had a regular beating and head splitting just the same as in any other strike, and many of them were arrested.

The strike went like wildfire, it spread thruout the East Side to all the other boroughs of Greater New York. The women did their bit, attacked the drivers, spilt kerosene on the meat, whereupon mounted police were sent out on the trucks with scab meat.

The women carried on their strike in their own way. They delivered speeches in their own everyday language. The women came out of their kitchens, and it looked as if they had let themselves loose, trying to revenge for all the struggles that they had endured during the past years.

The Socialist Party was in existence at that time but nobody thought it worth while to bother with these women. They went out unorganized, became tired and went back into their holes unorganized.

In the meantime prices went up higher. Other women than those in the East Side began to feel the pinch Mrs. Heath, a woman of the bourgeois class, organized a Consumers' League, but along such lines that it seemed that it was organized for the purpose of detracting the attention of the housewives away from the real issue so that they should not spread the germ of discontent in other quarters of the working population.

The disease of high cost of necessities of life affected the whole working class alike. Mrs. Heath of the so-called Consumers' League approached the city politicians and asked them to help her along.

The capitalist papers made a lot of noise about the good work that Mrs. Heath was doing. And the Mayor of the City of New York at that time granted the space under the 59th St. bridge for a market. The women, however, discovered very quickly that the so-called market charged higher prices than elsewhere.

Would there have been at that time a Women's Committee of the Socialist Party for the purpose of organizing the women, with the ability to grasp the opportune time, I believe that there could have been organized at that time an organization of proletarian housewives in addition to the Jewish housewives' proletarian organization which was organized at that time.

In the next article I shall write how the housewives were organized and how they functioned.

The [illegible] to make THE WORKER a fighting organ of the working class is winning, and support is coming to us from every hand.

But we are not satisfied. We want all of our readers to become boosters. We want YOU to help.

You can get subscribers. You can dispose of a bundle of THE WORKER each week in your shop, at meetings in your city, among your neighbors.

Get busy! Others have been heard from as follows:

The "only working men's paper," goes to a list of three that comes from Wisconsin.

"I like THE WORKER very much," accompanies a renewal from Richmond, Cal.

A bundle of hundred copies goes to a new hustler for "The Worker" at Red Granite, Wisc.

Put a bundle of "The Worker" to work in your town and watch the workers' power grow.

Comrade Rese, Washington, D. C., sends in a bunch of five subs from the national capitol. He is a booster among the machinists.

Seven six months' subs come in from Philadelphia. That means seven more active workers for the cause.

"Send me every week 25 copies of The Worker," is the order that comes from Los Angeles, Cal., with this addition, "Send as quickly as possible."

* * *

A comrade at Cleveland, Ohio, sends in a "sub" for a friend and wishes The Worker every success. Have you a friend or acquaintance who ought to be reading the Worker? Then you know what to do.

* * *

"All success to our new paper," writes a comrade from Toledo, Ohio. "I will see what I can do shortly to get a few more subs. I am hoping for the time when it will blossom in a DAILY."

It is a little hard to get subscriptions hereabouts, but only on account of Harding's "normalcy," which has hit this farming community pretty hard, and then only fair crops.—Napoleon, Ohio.

Several workers, one from far away Fort Stanton, New Mexico, have written us for information about THE WORKER as the result of an article, that appeared in our Russian paper, Iskra, also published in New York City.

That's a good slogan of the Literature Department of the Workers Party which goes as follows: "Workers! Read To-day! Rule To-morrow!" Is there anyone who can think of something better? Elmer T. Allison, head of the Literature Department, says he is open to suggestions.

"Please do not stop my paper," writes a subscriber at Montana Mines, West Va. "Let The Worker come. I have not had any work here since July 15th, last year. I have six in my family, so you may know that money is pretty scarce. But I will send you the first $2 I get, hoping that I will not miss any copies of The Worker."

* * *

Comrades at Bridgeport, Conn., have pledged themselves to do all they can to boost the circulation of "The Worker." The Bridgeport bosses are hard at work trying to introduce "The American Plan," which means, for instance, a cut of $10 per week for the bakers, the 55-hour week for the machinists, with no recognition for overtime or Sunday work. Workers in other sections of the country are urged to "stay away" from Bridgeport.

"Greetings!" writes our Comrade H. M. Bartholomew, of Winnipeg, Can., district organizer of the Workers Party of Canada. "Received copy of The Worker in its new garb. Congratulations!—Everything is going fine here. The party is growing in numbers, and in a few weeks we shall have a movement second to none on this continent. I hope that the greatest co-operation will prevail between the two parties and that we shall go forward to the revolution with speed."

[illegible] Vanzetti

By [illegible] LYONS
(Special to The Worker)

Boston.—Rabbi Dr. Judah L. Magnes, [illegible] of the Jewish Community in New York was accorded an enthusiastic ovation here by a large audience when he declared that Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti did not have a fair trial and called upon lovers of justice everywhere to get behind the fight for the men's lives.

With characteristic eloquence he depicted the state of mind in Norfolk County and the stage-setting in and around the court room, declaring that the labor organizers "were condemned before the trial began, and each day as the trial progressed the atmosphere of racial and social prejudice that had been created against them grew darker and more sinister."

Reads Vanzetti's Declaration

At one point in his address he read a portion of Vanzetti's declaration of faith in the autobiography written by the prisoner while awaiting the death penalty. It was received with prolonged applause.

"We contend," Dr. Magnes said, "that the accused did not have a fair trial. We contend that they were convicted not upon the testimony offered, but upon their record as alien radicals. Innocent or guilty, they could not have a fair trial. Whenever a doubt arose, the defendants were not given the benefit of it, could not be given this benefit. As the judge pointed out, the chief issue was that of identification of the prisoners. Numerous witnesses testified for them, some against.

"Some of those who testified against the defendants were completely discredited, leaving only four doubtful witnesses to make the identification. The lives of these defendants hinged upon resolving this doubt as to their identity. The jury could be expected to give but one answer under the enveloping circumstances as created by the authorities of Dedham and the public press of Boston: Decide against them.

War Hysteria Still Alive

"In the minds of the authorities of Dedham, the Great War is still being fought. The black passions of it, the ignorance, the hatred, the malice, the suspicions, the fear, the hysteria of the Great Catastrophe still claim as their victims the Dedham authorities. The war propaganda of Government and press and church and platform has poisoned the social organism of Dedham all too violently.

"We conceive this to be a struggle for the right. We are convinced that these men were convicted not so much for what was said at the trial, but rather upon what was unspoken. Those dark prejudices and passions which are present in each one of us spoke their condemnation. But we hold it must be the high function of a court of justice to dissipate, rather than encourage, such prejudices and passions. We plead for two fellow-human beings in the shadow of death. We plead for justice [illegible] and unequivocal."

[illegible] Sent to Jail by Truck-load

(BY ONE OF THE JAIL-BIRDS)

Decorate the flag-poles with black crepe, you fair City of Denver! Put sackcloth and ashes upon your heads, you citizens of the "Queen City of the Plains!" Proclaim a week of mourning for all the people of the beautiful State of Colorado, for liberty has been desecrated and the United States Constitution has been trampled upon and defied!

Let this sad news be carried from the mine-shafts in southern Colorado to the cattle-pens of the north!

Let this calamity be known to the people of the Western Slope and over the Great Divide in the Rocky Mountains to the farmers of the plains!

Bury your faces in shame, you law-makers of Colorado! Quit your pretention as Governor and admit your guilt. Bethink yourself, ex-service-men of Colorado, for your comrades were also mistreated!

The Shirkers' Dictatorship

Let the press carry the news to all the workers of this glorious country that besides beautiful mountains and valleys in Colorado, we have a dictatorship. Not the workers' kind, but shirkers' brand.

Martial law has been reigning for some time in Southern Colorado, packinghouse workers were thrown in jail continuously, printers were locked out.

All this has been going on and we the workers took it for granted, but the climax was reached recently when the workers assembled in the City Auditorium to protest this abuse and remind the powers that be that we are American citizens.

At a peaceful gathering conducted by The Toiler Club and known as Labor's Open Forum, detectives filled the hall. Everybody felt their presence and sure enough after the peaceful Forum was over, nine men were picked out from the fading audience and together with six "Dicks" were herded into the police-patrol bus and whisked away to the City Bastille.

Cursed and Searched.

All were lined up and cursed as Balam of the Bible would. All were searched like criminals. Everybody was cursed with all the curses of the English language. Pockets and clothes were turned inside out.

After the usual procedure of taking names and other information was gone thru by the cursing "Dicks", the Chief of Police came in with curses on his lips, reviewed the evidence before him, freed four of the nine who were "cockroach business-men" with threats of taking away their licenses and running them out of town and after calling them all the lewd dirty names that no pimp would think of, were let off just for "This time".

Ex-Soldiers Among Victims

Of the five sentenced to jail "For investigation" two were sick and disabled world war veterans. One was gassed and wounded in France, has an army record of ten years honorable service and a citation for bravery from General Le June of the Second Division.

The other is suffering from tuberculosis of the lungs and spine, lost the vision of one eye in France fighting with the Canadian Army at Ypres.

The Canadian soldier was continuously running up a fever of 103 degrees, and had to use pills to keep his fever down. The pills and his sputum-box were taken away from him. The other three workers were a farmer, a striking printer and a bookkeeper.

Into "Bull Pen" Inferno.

The sentenced five were thrown in the "Bull Pen". It reminds the writer of Dantes Inferno. The tile-floored room was filled with drunks, dope fiends and boot-leggers. The stench is indescribable.

In one corner stood the lavatory-bowl, with water running all the time. It was not even partitioned off. A hole in one of the lower pipes allowed the water to run out over the floor and drain into a stinking sewer.

In the center, lying in a stupor was a "Creature that once was a man". He was full of wood-alcohol and was hemorrhaging blood and guts.

Around the dirty walls were a few hard benches that were crowded three stories high with vagrant Mexicans and Negroes. There was no place to stand, sit or lie.

Our feverish gassed soldier for Democracy was forced to lie down on top of a human thrash pile, for he could not stand up any longer.

It was a terrible night. Morning found us walowing on the wet floor in a pool of dirty water and vomit.

Then They Had Breakfast.

Breakfast consisted of a baked spud, a piece of bread and a piece of meat that any good dog would refuse to eat. One by one we were led into the hall and put thru the usual morning Third Degree. Each one was placed on a box.

Detectives with black masks on their mugs gave us the once over; cursed us with all the filth and smut they could think of.

Denounced us as God-damn Jews, Wobblies and Bums. It is remarkable to note however, that out of the five arrested only two were Jews.

A ray of happiness came over us when the jail doors were opened and two more workers were thrown in. We were not happy that they were arrested, but a comradely spirit gripped us all.

Thru them we found out that the police did not stop with last night's raid, but that they raided the Wobblie Book store and arrested them while they were there. All literature was carried away. A committee of two who went down to find out the charge were also pulled in.

A meeting called by the Industrial Workers of the World to take steps to get those arrested out, was raided and it netted the police 19 more victims. All of us were then herded into a separate compartment.

All Labelled "Bolsheviks".

Twenty-eight victims comprised of World War Veterans, Toiler Club members and Wobblies. To the police, we were all "God-damn I. W. W.'s Bolsheviks".

No one was allowed to visit us, we received some food from the outside and a committee of good-hearted liberals tried their hardest to get us out.

After two days in jail, no charges were yet preferred. On the third day we were all charged with vagrancy.

Those who proved up to be long time residents of Denver and "respectable" citizens in the eyes of the police were released.

Fourteen Wobblies were ordered out of town and to see that they did so, they were carried out on trucks to the outskirts of Denver and put on a freight train. Five appealed their cases and were let go and a few are under bond.

All were released with the exception of one ex-service man and the striking printer. They were investigating the ex-service man's record and accused the striking printer for wearing the U. S. uniform illegally. The poor fellow had no other clothes.

Mugged and Finger-printed.

At this writing all are released. Everyone was "mugged" and finger-printed just like criminals. One was allowed to go because he had a good job, but upon coming out of jail found he had no job.

Detectives are still surrounding the doors of the World War Veterans Hall when they meet. A resolution was passed that the "dicks" would not be allowed to be inside while a meeting is on. So they stand at the door intimidating all the members that come in.

The Carpenters' Union that owns the hall where the Open Forum and the World War Veterans meet, notified the Toiler Club that they had better look for another hall.

The Chief rattled down and upon releasing the Wobblies returned all their literature. Business is being resumed as ever under the eyes of the "City Martial Law".

If free speech is to live in Denver, the labor unions will have to fight for it or disband unions and organize Legion Posts.

Let this be a lesson to you workers, that the capitalists are conscious while you are splitting up into dust. They know when to act. When will you learn?

"For it is not the shame and it is not the blame
That stings like a white hot brand,
It's coming to know that they never knew why
And do not understand."

When any exploited group becomes too loud in its protest the ruling class promptly gives its leaders a government job.

Dublin Unemployed Seize Building, Hoist Red Flag

That the "Irish Free State" recently accepted by the Irish Middle Class as a settlement of the Irish question does not feed the hungry mouths of unemployed Irish workers is evidenced from the action of the men who, tired of asking for assistance, seized a public building, hung the Red Flag from one of its windows, and then talked business with the city officials.

Needless to say after this example of their power to act the unemployed workers were given attention.

The following story is taken from the Freeman's Journal:

"The 200 unemployed who occupied" the Concert Hall in the Rotunda, remain in possession of the building outside which a Red Flag still floats.

"On visiting the place yesterday a Freeman's Journal representative found the men being marshalled by section leaders and appointed to different charges.

"The strictest discipline is being maintained and it was stated an officer was courtmartialled and reduced to the ranks for disobeying orders.

"Three of the rank and file who resisted arrest by the unemployed police force established to keep order were expelled from the premises.

"The garrison of 125 men spent most of Wednesday night going through military evolutions and occupied the remaining hours with impromptu Concerts. They were provided with meals several times during the night and no shortage of food has been experienced. Forage parties were sent out yesterday.

"Siam O'Flaherty, Chairman of the Dublin Council of Unemployed and styled by his followers Commander-in-chief told our representative that the only persons authorized to receive money for the Unemployed Maintenance Fund are Mr. Shoun McIntee and Mr. J. Carroll.

"Members of the garrison must have a pass before they are permitted to leave the building. A good deal of public interest is being displayed in the proceedings. A meeting of the Unemployed was held last evening in the Rotunda Concert Room. Siam O'Flaherty said they had fought the first fight and won. It was the first time, he said, in the history of Dublin that the Red Ensign had been hoisted over a seized building.

"Mr. Kay, lessee of the premises, had informed him that he had approached the Lord Mayor, but could not get into communication with him. Moreover, Mr. Kay was in touch with the Dail Minister of Labor.

"Dealing with the collection of funds he said any member of the unemployed caught soliciting such without authority would be severely dealt with. Up to a late hour this morning the unemployed remained in possession."

[illegible] hold its Second [illegible] The First Congress met [illegible] withdrawal of the Communists [illegible] recognize the great difference between the [illegible] the circumstances under which each [illegible] place it is a moment when the labor move- [illegible] disintegration and degeneration had set in for the Socialist Party, which had given ample proof of its emptiness of content, [illegible] its work, its complete lack of a definite program [illegible] to take advantage of the situation. After [illegible] reached the height of their power, and a membership of 250,000 [illegible] ranks began to thin out and to break up. A good proof of this is the fact that at the Livorno Congress only 170,000 workers were represented.

After the admirable but vain attempt to seize the factories the Italian proletariat had to look on at the speedy growth of the Fascisti movement and stand the attack launched against them by the capitalists without the political and trade-union headquarters having as much as offered a slogan with which to lead the action or given advice or offered assistance.

Opposition Proves Detestable

Moreover, the detestable opposition to the Third International and to the Russian revolution on the part of the leading bureaucratic lights brought confusion into the masses and worked havoc in the ranks of the workers who only a short while ago still saw the present critics and slanderers at the head of the worshippers and adorers of the Revolution.

The First Congress of the Italian Communist Party must also have had a premonition of the consequences of the milieu in which it took place.

Being more of a war council than a Congress it must have felt the violent shock received by the revolutionary masses, which thirsted for clearness, knowledge and responsibility.

Once and for all the Congress did away with every ambiguity and laid down the foundation of a strict discipline.

Then the Congress adjourned and the delegates were instructed to go back to their provinces and to stir the general hopelessness and desolation into a belief in the certainty of the events which were to follow.

Conditions Have Changed

The Second Congress will start its sessions under quite different circumstances. There is as yet in Italy only a young and small party; but it is constantly growing and promises to develop into a well-organized power.

It is a party forming a network of 1403 groups and embracing the entire country; it is a party whose strongly centralized organization enables it to give a unified direction to all its actions and whose press consists of three dailies, twenty provincial weeklies, a young people's weekly, a trade-union paper, a newspaper correspondence and a publishing-house.

The instructions of the party are observed by about one-third of the members of the Confederation of Labor and by a smaller militant vanguard within the Italian Syndicalist Union.

Party Position Clear

The Italian proletariat can no longer be in doubt or uncertainty as to the program and tactics of the Communist Party, because the latter clearly defined its position in all questions of a general nature which had arisen on the world-stage in 1921.

Moreover, it may safely be said that all of those who submitted themselves to the discipline and program of the Party did so in full consciousness of what they were doing.

The actions of the Party at the Congress of Livorno were in strict accord with the fundamentals laid down in the program so that the Congress which is soon to take place need not spend much time in approving or passing judgement upon past events. It will suffice to check up and see whether any errors have been committed.

The unanimity with which the party received and followed out the instructions of the Executive Committee serves as a good proof of its faithfulness, and it is therefore very unlikely that it will be severely reproached or criticized.

No Personal Quarrels

That is why the report of the Executive Committee does not stir any nervous expectations. Neither is there any personal quarrel or disagreement which can in any way disturb the coming Congress in its work, a thing not altogether unknown in many parties and at many congresses.

It is the particular intention of the Executive Committee to bring up several questions of an immediate and practical nature. It is clear that the tactical questions as well as the questions of principle as they are laid down in the party program cannot and should not be altered.

And since the conquest of the trade unions and the [illegible] concentrated, they are assigned two special sections of the agenda.

When examined, these questions exhibit deviations, not of a primary but of a secondary nature. Nevertheless, the party tactics must incorporate the results of the investigations, in order to avoid confusion and the division of the general action of the party into hundreds of confusing partial actions.

Discuss "Tactical Principles"

Since the fundamental principles on the trade-union and agrarian questions were already defined by the Third Congress of the Communist International, the corresponding tactics to be proposed by certain delegates of the Communist Party are not to contradict the basic principles laid down in Moscow, but they will rather seek to adapt them to the conditions and circumstances which are peculiar to the Italian milieu. Under these, the questions of "labor-organizations" and "land ownership and cultivation" assume an unusually characteristic form.

This part of the Congress' work will be preceded by a discussion of the "tactical principles," which starting with an enlargement upon the party program will determine the way of building up and developing the Communist Party, define the relations between the Communist Party and the proletariat as well as those between the Communist Party and the other proletarian political movements, lay down the tactical rules for direct and indirect action and finally define the position to be assumed by the Italian Communist Party in the present situation.

Congress Opens New Chapter

Thru its serious attitude and the palpable results of its work the Second Congress of the Italian Communist Party will introduce a new chapter into the history of the Italian proletarian movement.

The Italian Socialist Party has a not too enviable congressional tradition. All its congresses, particularly those of recent years, were nothing more than pleasant trips or hikes for the comrades who came together from various parts of the country, not for the purpose of serious discussions or to help shape the destinies of the proletariat, but only for the sake of amusement and curiosity.

Hence the three to four thousand delegates filling the theatre auditorium with noise, and the evergrowing unanimity in the acceptance of the majority reports by professional and intellectual men who could afford to travel and to hold lengthy sessions.

Political Resolution Uppermost

These congresses which were called to deal with yard-long resolutions, always confined their work to the struggle over their pet question, namely, over the political resolution which was discussed and passed from a one-sided parliamentary viewpoint, and which conformed to the existing form of government and to existing laws.

As exceptions to the rule came the congresses of Reggio Emilia in 1912 and that of Ancona in 1914, at which questions of inner organization were discussed and settled (the expulsion of the reformists and Bissolatti in 1912, and of the freemasons in 1914).

In its instructions for the calling of the Second Congress the Communist Party of Italy fixes the number of delegates at 150, all of whom are to meet in advisory and executive meetings and hold district sessions.

It is certain that all questions on the order of the day will be treated exhaustively, since the congress will do its work by means of committees.

Will Resist the Fascisti

Thus, the net result of the Congress' work will consist of a series of definite and palpable fundamentals. And thru its activity the party will give shape to its program for the coming year.

This program can be summarized as follows: Intensification of the armed resistance against the Fascisti attacks; the progressive conquest of the trade-unions; penetrating the masses of agricultural workers and forcing our way into the districts of Southern Italy which are exclusively agricultural.

's Latest, "Back to thuselah," Coming to Garrick Theater, Feb. 27

Feb. 27, the Theatre Guild of York, having just launched a ssful production of "He Who Slapped," will begin the produc of George Bernard Shaw's latest "Back to Methuselah."

We say begin the production, be the play is so long that it takes evenings to act it. The first di of the drama will be shown at ick Theatre on Feb. 27, and ery night for one week. the following Monday, the division will be shown, also week. The third Monday will the production of the third and division. On the fourth Monday, play will begin over again.

Thus, in order to witness the entire play, it will be necessary to go to the theatre one evening a week for three cessive weeks.

The strain on the actors of shifting the different roles the different di of the play call for was found so great that the play cannot presented on successive evenings. would be a considerable strain on audience, also, to go to the theatre three nights running. But with space of a week between divi even Shaw should be assimi At any rate, the Guild could other way out of the difficulty an astonishingly long play nts.

w calls this drama a gospel in religion of Creative Evolution. opening scene is in the Garden den, with Adam and Eve and the pent as characters. The costumes this act will not be elaborate. The progresses to the present, where is a long satirical act in which George and Asquith are quite ently characters, and then it eps farther and farther into the ure, until at the end the time of action is supposed to be the year 920 A. D.

far as the theme of such a tre dous drama can be condensed sentence or two, it may be said "Back to Methuselah" makes the umption that Man doesn't live enough now to grow up; that he could live to be three hundred, would really put aside childish ssions and foolishness and govern mself by the laws of reason; there r, if the world is really to grow bet r, we must live longer, and the way live longer is to understand these cts and want to live longer, in hort, to take a hand in the process of volution, to make it creative evolu on and not merely blind chance and aphazard selection.

The latter acts of the play show aw's idea of how the thing might ork out. Being Shaw's idea, it is turally piquant and shot thru with onic comedy as well as high se ousness.

The difficulties of staging the play great, but the various sets give producers a fine chance for imag ive pictures, and Lee Simonson, Guild's scenic director, is said to ve labored hard over them, after a mmer spent in Europe, studying methods of production there.

The magnitude and length of the ay, the fame of Shaw, the reputa of the Theatre Guild for fine ork, and the novel and untried thod of acting a drama in three visions, a week at a time, have mbined to create more interest in is production than in almost any ing else all winter.

[illegible] Make Progress During Industrial Boom

BY LEON TROTZKY

Clear signs of a change in the economic situation are noticeable everywhere. The world crisis really and truly came to a standstill in May last. The branches of industry manufacturing necessities of life first of all showed signs of a boom. Then came large industry.

The system may be confronted with other obstacles—the destruction of the economic balance between America and Europe, the impoverishment of Central and Eastern Europe, the lasting and thorough ruin of the financial apparatus.

The next industrial boom, no matter how great, will not be able to put industry on its pre-war level; it is even possible that this boom once the first obstacles are overcome will come to grief in an economic blind alley.

Nevertheless, a boom remains a boom; it means an increase in the demand for goods and consequently an increase in production, the reduction of unemployment, an increase in prices and a consequent possibility of increasing wages.

Under these given historic conditions a boom will not weaken Labor but strengthen it. That follows from past events. In all countries the labor movement reached its highest point after the war.

Crisis Hurts Party Activity

At this point Labor, as we have seen, was more or less defeated and compelled to retreat, which resulted in many splits occuring within it.

Tho a lasting crisis would under conditions such as these increase the bitterness of the workers (especially the unemployed and part-time workers) it would at the same time seriously weaken the activity of Labor which is bound up with the knowledge that without it the wheels of production would not revolve. Lasting unemployment after a period of revolutionary political attacks and defeats is under no circumstances favorable for the Communist Parties. On the contrary! The longer a crisis lasts the more conducive it is both for anarchist and reformist tendencies.

This fact finds expression in the splitting away of the syndicalist groups from the Third International, in Amsterdam joining hands with the 2½ International, in a temporary consolidation of the Serrati group, in the splitting off of the Levi group, etc.

An industrial revival is apt to strengthen Labor's self-reliance, weakened by many defeats and dissolutions within its ranks; it is furthermore apt to weld the workers in mill and mine together and strengthen their attempts at united action.

Labor Strives for Unity

We are already noticing the first signs of this process. Labor, beginning to feel solid ground under its feet, strives for unity; it feels that splits are obstacles on the way to action.

The workers endeavor not only to present a united front to the capitalist attempting to take advantage of the crisis conditions, they even prepare for a counterattack and rely in this on the conditions created by the boom.

The crisis represented for Labor a period of disappointments, bitterness and partly despair at its own weakness. The boom will give these feelings occasion to vent themselves in action.

This is said in the resolution of the Third Congress:

"If the development should slow down, and if the present crisis is, in some countries succeeded by a period of boom, this would not mean the ushering in of the 'organic' epoch. Oscillations are inevitable as long as Capitalism continues to exist; they will be with it in its time of agony just as they accompanied it during its youth and maturity.

"If in the course of this crisis the proletariat is overrun by Capitalism, it will surely assume the offensive once a period of boom has set in. An economic attack such as that which must be carried out under the slogan of revenge for the deceptions of the war period and for all humiliations suffered during the crisis, would thus show just as much tendency to become a civil war as the present defensive . . ."

No Cause for Capitalist Joy

The capitalist press sheds tears of joy over the economic improvement and the possibility of a new epoch of capitalist stability.

There is as little cause for that joy as for the supplementing fears of the "Left," who held the opinion that the Revolution would be the outcome of an uninterrupted series of ever-intensifying crisis.

Politically speaking, it would in practice be only favorable for us, if the next trade and industrial boom means increased riches for the big capitalists.

The tendencies for unity within Labor are but an expression of the increased determination for action. If Labor, in the name of the struggle against the bourgeoisie, demands to-day that the Communists join hands with the Independents and the Social Democrats, it will in the course of development quickly convince itself that only the Communist Parties are able to lead the revolutionary struggle.

The first wave of the attack will engulf all workers' organizations and compel them to unite. Both the Social Democrats and the Independents will meet with the same fate; one after the other they will be drowned in the revolutionary tide.

Does this mean, contrary to the opinion of the adherents of the "Offensive Theory," that not a crisis but the industrial revival will lead to the victory of the proletariat?

Such a categorical statement has no foundation. We have shown that the connection between a boom and the character of the class-struggle is not mechanical, but complicated and dialectic.

In order to understand the tasks of the immediate future, it is sufficient to know that we are better prepared for a boom period than we were for the crisis.

There exist strong Communist Parties in the more important countries on the Continent. These parties are undoubtedly presented by the boom with the opportunity of both an economic and a political offensive.

Opportunity for New Offensive

It would be useless to try and guess to-day how far this offensive can go. It has only commenced, or rather, the very first signs of it have put in their appearance.

Some dialectic theoreticians will maintain that if the next industrial revival does not immediately help us to attain victory, a new period of industrial stability will probably set in which will be another step on the road toward the re-establishment of capitalist equilibrium.

Does that not involve the danger of a fresh epoch of capitalist reconstruction? To this we can reply as follows: If the Communist Parties would not continue to grow and if the proletariat would not gain more and more experience and join with the bourgeoisie in always more serious and bitter battles, if it would not endeavor to assume the offensive on the first occasion presenting itself—if all this would not be the case, capitalist development would, assisted by the manoeuvres of the bourgeois governments, surely attain its goal.

Whole countries would then once more be forced back into a state of economic barbarism; millions would perish thru hunger and despair, and upon their bones would be built some new equilibrium of the capitalist world.

A perspective such as that is a mere abstraction, however. Many obstacles lie on that road: chaos in the world's market, collapse of currency, militarism, dangers of wars, insecurity of even the immediate future.

The elementary forces of capitalism groping for a way out of these entanglements affect Labor and spur it to attack.

Development of the labor movement goes on even if Labor be compelled to retreat, because even defeats provide experience and strengthen its party.

Labor moves on. The working-class itself is its most important moving factor, the incarnation of its future.

Tempo Depends on Tactics

It is true that the movement is impeded by the oscillations of Capitalism, which in a period immediately following a war assume abrupt forms.

But no matter in what stage of development the union of objective and subjective conditions will take place—resulting in Revolution—we are satisfied with the knowledge that the tempo of the development depends to great extent upon us, our parties, and our tactics.

It is of utmost importance to gain a comprehensive view of the new economic boom which will, perhaps, prove to be a fresh stage in the consolidation of our ranks for a victorious attack.

A clear and profound knowledge of the prevailing situation means for a revolutionary party a shortening of the long road of suffering, an approach toward its aim.

On January [illegible] appeal was heard [illegible] of six months [illegible] Albert Inkpin, Secretary [illegible] Party of Great Britain, on five counts for publishing [illegible], especially for publishing the Theses and Statutes of the Second Congress of the Communist International.

The appeal was unanimously rejected by the three judges of the Court of Appeal and Inkpin is therefore serving this sentence.

As indicative of the methods of British justice it should be mentioned that Inkpin was sentenced under the Defence of the Realm Act, which had been repealed at the time the sentence was passed, and under the Emergency Powers Act, which was not in force at the time the printing of these publications took place.

This conviction was the result of a raid on May 7th last year, during the Miners Strike in Britain, when over three tons of literature was removed from the offices of the Communist Party of Great Britain.

Moreover Inkpin was merely a paid servant of the Party and had not even a vote on the Executive Board which was responsible for printing these documents. It was pointed out with justice in Court that the Theses and Statutes of the Second Congress of the Third International would be very necessary documents for every professor and student of Modern History classes at every university in the future.

The sentence of six months hard labor in an English prison is an exceptionally severe one and is often judged as a harder sentence than three years in a penal establishment.

LEAD POISONING OR "T. B."

Editor, The Worker:—I had to have a job. I landed one with the National Carbon Company of San Francisco. They gave me a choice of grid department or charging department. They should have asked:

DO YOU PREFER LEAD POISONING OR T. B.?

I chose the storage battery grid department—lead poisoning.

I saw a door leading to the battery charging department. On it was a sign:

"Keep this door shut.
"Acid fumes corrode machinery!"

Not one word about corroding lungs and throat! At first I was glad there was that door. Then I thought of the fellows on the other side of the door and stopped being glad.

I spoke of it to the white worker next to me (I am Filipino).

"That's nothing," he whispered. "All us fellows in this department get lead poisoning."

At the end of a week I got my pay (30c. an hour) and a free dose of Epsom salts. The nurse makes us all take it weekly to delay the lead poisoning.

She lectured us on not putting our fingers to our nose, rubbing our eyes, or sucking the lead off. She said we got lead poisoning because we were "dirty" and didn't listen to her.

"It's a lie," the worker next to me, whispered when she was gone.

"We all get it. Two years is the most any man can last. I've had it once. Next time it will do for me."

"See that—see how blue that guy's lips are. He'll drop any day now. His gums are black. He's poisoned.

"See that dust—that's lead shavings floating in the air—from the trimming machine. That's what gets you."

I knew he was right. But I'm still here. They could cover the machine with a hood. But it costs money. I must work and I suppose I will—till it gets me. Meanwhile I get free Epsom salts and 30c. an hour.—
Philip Eno.

PROTECTING WOMANHOOD

In Georgia, the abode of chivalry, and the citadel of the Ku Klux Klan, defenders of the sanctity of womanhood and the home, half the white women workers, according to the report just published by the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, are receiving less than $12.20 a week and $748 a year, and the colored women less than $6.20 a week and $413 a year.

Moreover, the chivalrous employers of Georgia believe in safeguarding the working women by withholding from them the leisure to indulge in frivolities which might dim the splendor of their womanhood; and so we find that 73.9 per cent are worked 55 hours a week or longer.

A like investigation was also made in Kansas, where it was found that 20 per cent of the women receive less than $9 a week, and 50 per cent less than $12. In Iowa, one of the five states not limiting daily or weekly working hours for women, it was found that women were working in factories up to eighty-four hours a week.

William Z. Foster's Book Exposes Inadequate Leadership of Workers in Big World Crisis

When defeat comes to the stronger side it is a double tragedy, and its history must be written in terms of strategic blunders or treason or both.

One may take a broadview of things and ascribe the set-back which the revolutionary movement in Europe has sustained within the past year to larger causes, but to belittle the part that leadership played in the revolutionary upheavals of the past three years one must be either ignorant of the actual facts or plainly dishonest.

The defeat of the revolutionary proletariat in Germany, the collapse of the Triple Alliance in England, the fiasco of the Italian near-revolution and the inglorious end of the general strike in France, were not the result of the mysterious play of "natural causes."

Bungling, halting, chicken-hearted, in a word inadequate leadership more than any other single cause transformed certain victory into unexpected defeat.

If the reader will get that much out of Wm. Z. Foster's booklet, "The Revolutionary Crisis of 1918-1921 in Germany, England, Italy and France," by Wm. Z. Foster, (The Trade Union Educational League, Chicago, 25 cents), it will not have been written in vain. But the booklet is much more than an opinionated view of recent revolutionary events. It is a history of those events written with the earnestness of a scholar and the honest working-class bias of a wide awake worker.

Rich in New Material

What it lacks in studied aloofness and "impartiality" of polite history it more than makes up in the vigorous manner of presentation and in the deep concern the writer displays for the matters he treats of. As an informative piece of writing the "Revolutionary Crisis" is rich in material that has not yet been brought to light either in the capitalist or in the working-class press of the United States.

The documentary and factual material is not piled up mechanically, appendix-fashion, but is woven into the texture of the story both by way of supporting the author's contentions and illuminating the situation in question.

Yet the pamphlet is informative in a much broader sense. It imparts to the reader a clear, unobstructed view of the revolutionary battlefield in the four principal storm centers of Europe and shows the various factors involved in their true light and their proper relations to one another. The issues are clarified, the alignment of forces is made vivid and the tragedy of inadequate leadership made poignantly obvious. It is a retrospect of the battle after the smoke has cleared away. Freed from the accidental and irrelevant events and episodes, the titanic struggles in the four countries mentioned stand out in clear perspective, so that one can take them in at a glance.

Both Warning and Lesson

For the American workers "Revolutionary Crisis" is more than an honest bit of recent history. It is also a warning and a lesson. Even though we are not yet on the treshold of concerted working-class action, the matter of general strikes and the way not to conduct them is of more than academic interest to us. "Right wing leadership of a left wing movement," is in a large measure also the tragedy of the American labor movement. The reformist leaders of European labor have succeeded in knifing the revolution, as Foster puts it. In our movement, too, there is a good deal of "knifing" being done by leaders without proletarian conscience or revolutionary vision. If we are compelled to witness the painful spectacle of a defeat working-class in Europe, we at least can learn something from that defeat and guard against repeating the tragic blunders when the hour strikes. In this sense Foster's booklet is of tomorrow as much as it is of yesterday.

—Nathaniel Fuchwald.

GOSSIP AND CHATTER ABOUT RUSSIA

Before their release thru the good offices of Secretary Hoover, the American prisoners in Russia protested their innocence and denounced the Russian authorities for their illegal detention.

They were quite impatient with their home government for not actively interfering in their behalf.

Now that they have left the terrible Tcheka safely behind them, how many of them will have the courage and manliness to admit that their imprisonment was deserved and that their treatment was not as bad as they had pictured it in their native press?

There will, probably, be some who like the knighted British spy, Paul Dukes, will capitalize their counter-revolutionary exploits in Russia by boasting of their dark deeds against the Workers' Republic in well paid articles or lectures.

Marguerite Harrison, the Baltimore newspaperwoman, who spent ten out of her eighteen months' stay in Russia, in prison, is sport enough to admit her "indiscretions" and is quite satisfied that any other government would have acted the same under similar circumstances.

From her book (Marooned in Moscow, Doran, $1.00) we learn that she entered Russia illegally and that during her sojourn there has committed acts unbecoming a guest of a foreign government.

Altho officially denied entrance, the writer secured permission from a Polish general to go thru the lines and cross the Russian border at an unguarded place.

The fact that she was able to obtain permission to travel thru the Polish front at the time when two armies were arrayed against each other was not in her favor when she reached Moscow under guard.

She was, however, given permission to remain in Russia and was even able to send out some press dispatches.

Illegal speculations in rates of exchange and in goods, hobnobbing with royalists and acting as agent for imprisoned counter-revolutionists, are some of the other "indiscretions" about which we learn only in a general way from her account of her experiences in Russia.

Mrs. Harrison bears no ill feeling toward the Soviet government for her imprisonment. She must have a great deal more on her conscience than what she tells in her book. She may have forgotten some things since, as we are told the book was written entirely from memory.

The book is of little or no value as a contribution to the literature on the Russian Revolution. It is filled with gossip about matters of little interest to the eager student of events in Russia.

Altho she was privileged to be present at important gatherings and has met many influential persons in the government and in the political parties, she has little to relate about their views or activities.

The material in the book would furnish splendid copy for Sunday Supplements of certain papers with large circulations. It is not of the sort that would lead the reader to recognize in the author a serious student and observer of social phenomena.

The reader will rather wonder about the author's purpose in embarking on so dangerous a journey. Unless it be pure adventure, tho some of her activities could not be taken as those committed by a person on a lark, her uncomfortable experiences in Russia are not recompensed by the publication of the book.

An addendum to the book, entirely out of place and as if to atone for her chatter about trivialities in and out of prison, gives the author's position on the Russian question, [illegible] the Bolsheviks than by [illegible] who, she believes, would [illegible] them in a successful counter-revolution.

The only justification for the book is the author's admission of her guilt and the rather unusual situation of having an imprisoned American plead for a square deal toward Russia. Verily, the ways of writers are at times unfathomable.

Trade Union Educational League Issues Its Rules

Emphasizing that it is purely an educational body, not a trade union, the Trade Union Educational League has issued a statement of its rules covering the various fields of its activities.

The League, nationally, is divided into the following industrial sections: amusement trades, building trades, clothing trades, food trades, general transport trades, lumber trades, metal trades, mining trades, miscellaneous trades, printing trades, public service trades, railroad trades, textile trades, and local general groups.

It is planned to hold annual national conferences. The official organ of the league will be "The Labor Herald."

Altho there are thousands of unemployed ex-soldiers in the state of Washington, who are absolutely unprovided for, plans are under way to raise a fund of $250,000 for a memorial to the four legionnaires who were shot when they attempted to raid the Wobbly Hall at Centralia, on Armistice Day, 1919.

The national Legion is giving $10,000 for an arch, with the provision that the State Legionnaires raise the remainder by the middle of the year.

Heresy Hunters

Ignorance dies hard! According to the daily press there is to be started, by some organization of the Baptist church, a movement against what it calls "the teaching of Darwinism in the public schools."

The amusing thing about this crusade is that it is directed against a theory under a name by which most people have long since ceased to recognize it.

We assume that when the embattled Baptists assail Darwinism they mean the theory of evolution which is now so widely accepted by intelligent people that to confess disbelief in it is to relegate oneself to the mental status of a moron.

Scientists may disagree as to the age of the earth and differ as to the length of time that has elapsed since the creature called man appeared in his present form, but all unite in accepting the conclusion that both the earth and man have reached their present status by a process of evolution covering vast periods of time.

This is nothing in the life of a theologian, however. The theological mind insists that science prove its theories in minute detail but insists on the right for itself to put forward as dogmas conceptions of the universe absurdly and demonstrably at variance with human experience.

The assumption that orthodox religion is responsible for all the good in the world and that without it man would sink back to the level of the beast is one of these dogmas which, if examined impartially, is seen to be utterly without foundation. The clergyman aforementioned raises this question in his published attack on the teaching of evolution in the schools by saying:

> If a boy thinks that he is not a child of God but the descendant of a monkey, he is liable to conduct himself as a brute and lead a bestial life.

That Darwin does not state that we descended from monkeys is something we cannot expect the clergyman to know, but that is neither here nor there.

We are interested just now in ascertaining why it is that in the southern states, Kentucky for instance, where there is also a campaign against "Darwinism," and where almost everyone believes himself a son of God, there is more pure bestiality expressing itself in savage acts of sadistic violence than in other sections of the United States where orthodox religion has a weaker hold on the minds of the people.

Theology may be able to blink facts like the above but science cannot and does not. It is for this reason that the orthodox clergy have never given up the attempt to dominate the schools.

The ignorance of the mass makes for the blissful security of the theologian. The pastime of heresy-hunting has still a few followers.

A lot of trade-union officials are acquiring quite a reputation for radicalism these days by talking naughty to and about the one and only Warren Gamaliel. Lest some of our friends be misled by ~~appearances we hasten to remark the fact~~ that there are no juicy government jobs for trade-union officials as in the halcyon days of the war when they were needed to urge little things like more production upon a not too enthusiastic rank and file.

The New Freedom

America has been rapidly reeling towards a "new freedom" since the victorious war ended. This "freedom" is a new capitalist freedom—it is oppression of the workers with a vengeance.

Everywhere the bosses are slashing wages and lengthening hours of labor. Wherever there is the slightest chance of successful resistance to this anti-labor campaign, the Government steps in as the arbiter. And being out to render justice—and render it blindly—the Government invariably fails to see the interests of the workingmen. In every case of arbitration the capitalists get the longer end of the deal.

Now it is 12,000 signalmen who are blessed with a square deal—in the interests of their bosses. The Rail Labor Board has issued an order forcing on these workers a ten-hour day. To complete its loyalty to the "public" the Board has ordered that overtime charges be eliminated and that time-and-a-half pay for Sunday be dropped. That this is the result of an investigation by "experts," is made evident by the fact that the railroad capitalists will save $300,000 on their annual labor bill.

The poor railroads! The Government has thrown millions into their coffers. The Government, by the threat of armed force has slashed the workers' wages and thru legislative manoeuvres has kept up the freight and passenger rates. We wonder why this overflow of generosity? How is it that only the bosses are getting such kind treatment? How is it that the workers always get it in the neck from the Government?

We need not ponder long over the answer. This is a government of the bosses, by the bosses, and for the bosses. The Rail Labor Board is only an agency set up to facilitate the safeguarding of capitalist interests. It is a hangover of the war to make the world safe for capitalist democracy. The workers must demand that the Rail Labor Board go. It has a black record of services to the bosses and injuries to the workers. The sooner we get rid of this Board the better will millions of railworkers be. Organized labor as one should join in the cry, "Down with the Rail Labor Board. We have had enough of wage cuts. We have had enough of ten-hour days."

"Doing something for the workers" is always a pleasant task much enjoyed by reformers until the workers try to do something for themselves. Horror then replaces happiness.

The Bonus Fight

A wave of protest is sweeping the country against granting the ex-soldiers a bonus. Who's behind this noise? None other than the bankers, merchants, and big farmers. The Bonus would cost the Government $1,000,000,000. These gentlemen are afraid that they'll have to dig down and pay some of the bill. When some one reaches for their pocketbooks, you may leave it to them to raise hell. And indeed they are raising hell in Congress against the Bonus.

The Republicans are in an awful hole on the Bonus issue. They are pledged to a Bonus. Yet, there is no doubt that they wish they could get out of it gracefully. Because of pressure from Wall Street, Congress has repeatedly been thrown into a turmoil. As yet the Republicans have not gathered sufficient grace to repudiate their pledge. We would not be surprised to see them get [illegible] the President for immediate [illegible] are drawing near and there is no use [illegible] eve of an election.

But the bombardment comes from [illegible] Harding is getting it going and coming. [illegible] the devil and the deep blue. Secretary Mellon and [illegible] ing interests have told him that the country is in no position to stand the drain of so huge a financial bill. Hence the quandary. How shall the Bonus be paid for? All sorts of [illegible] tax schemes, a United States Bond issue, and a plan to [illegible] foreign securities have been put forward to solve the difficulty.

The capitalists have won the war. The [illegible]-soldiers have won it for them. The war has brought misery and degradation to the ex-soldiers. It's no more than fair to them to have the bosses, for whom they bled and died foot the bill of temporary relief.

All the piffle about patriotism and money not mixing must be dismissed by the workers with a grain of salt. These mix pretty well for the bosses, and it's high time the workers took a turn at this mixing. The Bonus has nothing to do with "patriotism." It's a case of pure-and-simple need, and those who are responsible for this need, for the widespread want should come across and across soon.

Jack Sellins, son of Fannie Sellins, brutally murdered by steel-trust thugs during the great steel strike of 1919, has appealed to Judge Kennedy of Pittsburgh to take the case out of the hands of the local prosecutor. This appears to us to be a sheer waste of time and money, and our advice to the son of this martyred woman is to have just as much respect for the law as did the fiends who murdered his mother.

France Again

France is again trying to delay the Genoa Conference. It appears from reports that Poincaré is bringing pressure on Lloyd George to postpone the Conference. The Italian Government seems to be very anxious to meet at Genoa as soon as possible.

France's efforts to postpone is merely the first step toward calling off the Conference. In this jockeying over dates lies hidden a welter of capitalist conflicts and contradictions. England is anxious for a rapprochement with Russia and a better understanding with Germany in order to put a halt to France's plan to become the military boss of the continent. Lloyd George is anxious to establish a firm foothold in Russia in order to get the trade before America comes in. France is unquestionably being prodded on by America. And Italy, playing only second fiddle, necessarily lines up with England on whom she is economically dependent to a large degree.

We are not burdened with any delusions as to the glorious outcome of Genoa. The imperialists are unable to solve the contradictions of capitalism, conference or no conference. Nor do we believe that Soviet Russia will get a square deal. But the Conference is at least a feeble attempt to grapple with the difficulties at hand. As such we favor its being held and favor America's participation in it.

If the ex-service men have to stop eating until they get their bonus there won't be anyone to pay it to. With all this unemployment perhaps this is the solution Harding has in mind.

Yesterday and To-Day

According to the daily press, one Dr. Patrick Donovan of the Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic, sixth district of New York, has cabled Mike Collins that "eighty-five per cent of the membership is behind you and Griffith."

Speaking for ourselves, we are of the opinion that the doctor could have made it a little stronger and said ninety-nine per cent without stretching the truth. We hold this opinion for the reason that the Association, etc., is largely composed of such sterling Irish patriots as William Doheny, multi-millionaire oil operator who not long ago wanted the Irish and everyone else except himself to rescue his Mexican properties from the Mexicans, and Mr. Con Kelley of Butte and New York, head of the Anaconda Mining Company, whose gunmen, a couple of years ago, shot down something like twenty Irishmen who were on strike.

We can imagine with what joy these two lovers of freedom and others of their ilk greet the spectacle of Mike Collins' Republican Army ejecting unemployed workers from office buildings and factories the workers have seized.

Fighting the English government Mike was quite a decent fellow. Making Ireland safe for the holders of Irish bonds he becomes merely another of Capitalism's lackeys.

Chasing Rainbows

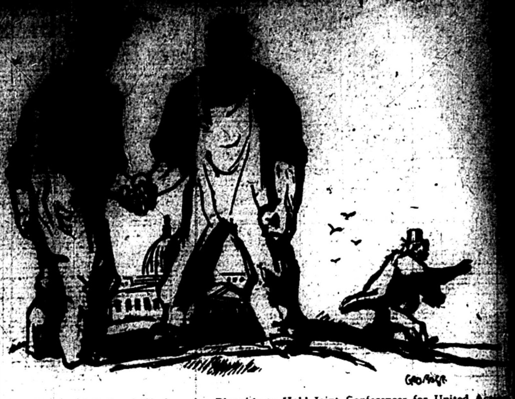
Many of our governmental departments have been working overtime spreading reports of prosperity waves overwhelming our people. We have never taken these reports seriously. They are aimed at bluffing the workers into sweet pipe dreams and out of discontent.

It is said that figures don't lie and lies don't figure. But with the capitalist "prosperity" experts these rules don't work. With this gentry figures do lie, and lies do figure. Once in a while one of the crew lets the cat out of the bag and gets a chance to raise enough of a howl to do some damage before he is squelched. We refer to the talk handed out by our friend Wm. F. Deegan, New York State Commander of the American Legion. If ever anybody has done plain talking on unemployment, he has done it and has done it well.

To Commander Deegan all the reports about the worst stage of unemployment being over are outright buncombe. Speaking of the plight of the ex-service men he said: "We have reached the point where we seem to be absolutely up against it. Unless we get help of some sort, I don't know where we are going to turn or what is going to happen. Every day brings an increasing number of ex-service men who rely on us for help. They are not merely hard up, but hundreds of them are absolutely destitute. They have no money to pay for food or lodging. As for clothing, they need it so badly that the Legion posts are appointing committees to solicit donations of shoes, underclothes, trousers, shirts, and coats for the men who did their duties overseas."

This state of affairs, we submit, is pictured by Commander Deegan better than we could ever hope to. The plight of the ex-service men does not differ in the least from the plight of the rest of the working masses. We are all brothers in need. We should all be brothers in deed. Let's not be given to chasing rainbows. Let's not be misled by the fake prosperity reports being spread by the hired misinformers of the capitalist class. The situation is a most sorry one. We are in the midst of deplorable conditions. It's high time that we be up and doing ourselves. The hope of the workers lies in the workers themselves. Let's all get together and get rid of unemployment, poverty, disease, and oppression, in sum total—capitalism.

If the textile workers can only keep someone from calling a conference on them they may win their strike.



The Miners and Railroad Workers Are Planning to Hold Joint Conferences for United Act

Our Next Step

By JAY LOVESTONE

The call for a conference of progressive labor bodies to be held in Chicago, February 20, should offer to the Workers' Party an opportunity of joining with large sections of the workers in the immediate struggle.

In this conference there will be represented the railway workers, the machinists, the Farmer-Laborites, the Non-Partisan Leaguers, the Forty-Eighters, the Socialist Party and various progressive Labor Unions.

The proposed object of this gathering is the working out of an agreement for joint action on various pressing issues now confronting the American workers.

How does this conference come to be called? What are the political and economic conditions? What of our labor movement? What is the outlook for the conference? Shall the Workers' Party seek representation? And if so, what should be its policy?

Thruout the world the capitalists are carrying the fight to the limit in their efforts to reduce wages, impose degrading working conditions, smash the unions and deprive the workers of even their most elementary political rights in shops, rob them of all their hard-won gains of years of struggle. The economic crisis is becoming more acute.

Despite our active prosperity-drummers, there is no prosperity in sight. Our unemployment is becoming worse. Our foreign trade is shrinking to new low levels.

Everywhere the employers are taking advantage of the conditions to increase their power of exploitation and oppression. Here we have wage-cuts and lockouts; there we have anti-strike laws and injunctions.

In the ranks of organized labor there is a strong undercurrent of dissatisfaction with the reactionary leadership. The discontent is as yet vague and inarticulated.

Because of the increasing pressure of the capitalist offensive, there is growing amongst the workers a strong demand for unity of action.

In the European countries the revolutionists have taken the lead in this move for unity. But in America, the situation is different. On account of the weakness of our revolutionary movement various leaders are dissatisfied with the existing A. F. of L. administration and some progressive labor men are assuming the lead in this move.

The Chicago conference is only an indication of the strong pressure the masses are bringing to bear upon their leaders for a united front against the common enemy.

The conference was called by labor leaders primarily hostile to the Gompers machine. In their hatred of the Grand-Old-Man these leaders are ready to take all steps which can help them win. This is natural.

We all fight this way when we fight and fight to win. These progressives and pseudo-progressives are ready to utilize any and every opportunity.

We should not, therefor, be surprised to see them taking steps far out of line with their past activities. Undoubtedly, their militancy, if it takes on concrete form, will, in large measure be due to reasons best known to themselves and not at all to a change of heart or aim. Hence these fellows are now getting on the job to capitalize the strong tread toward unity of action in the ranks of the laboring masses.

This need not dismay us. At no time should revolutionists judge mass movements by the desires or motives animating the individuals who for a multitude of reasons happen to be the mouthpieces of the movement at a particular moment. We need concern ourselves only with the underlying basic social and economic forces giving rise to the movements.

Our economic and political conditions are giving rise to a strong movement for unity in the ranks of the workers. The first concrete expression of our tread toward unity of action is the increasing unification of the left elements in the trade unions and political organizations. The Workers' Party itself is the first Workers political organization in America that has grown out of a union of forces and not out of a split. Besides, the old poison of dualism and "pure," "ideal" unionism is on the rapid decline amongst the militants. We see, then, that regardless of the fact that many of the leaders at the Chicago conference are men who have not done much for working-class unity, still the conference itself is a serious, live manifestation of organic forces stirring American labor toward decisive and aggressive action.

Viewing the conference from the above point of view what shall the Workers Party do? The writer is of the opinion that the Workers Party should make every effort possible to be represented at the conference. There are numerous advantages to participation in the conference by the Workers Party. But before dealing with the advantages let us consider some of the objections.

First of all, we have not been invited. Well, this does not matter a straw. There are reasons aplenty for our not being invited. The prime movers of the conference do not have much use for the aims of the Workers Party. Whatever plans they have which cannot stand open examination are much more secure when the Workers Party is excluded. The very fact that we have not been invited indicates the need for our presence. We should not stand on ceremony and refuse to participate in any conference where representatives of the workers are found.

Should our request for representation be turned down we would then be in a position to expose the tactics of the pseudo-progressive labor leaders who cry unity if our delegates are seated then we will be in a position to help mould the conference and at least put forward our program.

Others may argue that this conference is a gathering of liberals and labor-fakirs and that it cannot possibly bear advantages for the labor movement. This argument does not hold water. Merely charging some one with being a scoundrel does not make him a scoundrel. And the mere fact that one is an accuser does not make him holy. First of all don't let us condemn any movement in advance. Besides, condemnation based on actual conditions is far more powerful. Then again, let us put our case before the workers of America on the basis of positive movements. It is only under such conditions that we will be able to speak to the workers in concrete terms, in language of act and not of fancy or desire.

The revolutionists must give conscious and deliberate direction to the class-struggle. To give conscious and deliberate direction to the class-struggle means to participate actively in the class-struggle. And to participate actively in the class-struggle means to take all steps which will draw the largest masses possible into the struggle. But merely to recognize this need in the abstract will not get us anywhere. We must take steps which will remove the hindrances to the class-struggle. We must take steps which will outline the proper course of action. The Workers Party should

Riot Guns Roar In Big Textile Strike; Rhode Island Police Shoot Workers

Unite, Divide, Alternatives Open to Labor

Demand for a united front of labor, politically and industrially was made by the Workers Party upon the gathering of labor, farmer, liberal and radical forces held in Chicago this week.

In order to bring about this united front the Workers Party, in an open letter issued by its chairman, James P. Cannon, urged the calling of a general labor congress, the delegates to be elected by the rank and file.

This congress would consider the great problems now confronting the American working class. The alternatives confronting the conference of so-called "progressives" meeting in Chicago is set forth as follows:

"Defend the unemployed from hunger; defend the workers' organizations from destruction; defend [illegible] slavery—do it at the [illegible] of the wealthy class in-[illegible]

"Or, confuse, divide and betray the workers, to protect the system of labor exploitation."

Chicago Conference Analyzed.

The document of the Workers Party takes the position that the Chicago conference cannot bring about a united front. It declares:

"This conference cannot form a united front for the working class. Only the great mass of labor itself can do that. Not a few leaders slipping into a room privately to fix things up, but only a general labor congress of delegates elected for the specific purpose by the workers, can create a front that will endure and fight."

The open letter in full is published in another column. It was drawn up and unanimously agreed upon at a special meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party.

The letter was sent to the press and a copy to every delegate to the Chicago conference.

In spite of the efforts of a small minority, no move was made to organize a coalition of labor's forces in the political field. Such hopes were shattered by the move to call another conference, Dec. 11, after the congressional elections.

The conference practically decided to endorse the Gompres' policy of "reward your friends and punish your enemies."

Our editorial on the conference will be found on Page Three.

Mrs. Edward P. Costigan, president of the League of Women Voters, has notified President Johnston of the Machinists Union that she will not serve as a member of the "Committee of Fifteen" appointed by the Chicago Conference.

Mrs. Costigan was one of the fifteen, but now says the organization is "too radical."

Verily, it is a strange land we live in.

The courts guarantee landlords an 8 per cent profit. How about a guarantee of work at union wages for the unemployed? No, that would not do under our present system. Capital must be kept at work at a good profit. Labor must be kept idle to help hammer down wages. This is because we live under the capitalist system. Help inaugurate the Workers' Republic.

Workers Party Calls on All Labor for Big United Front

The open letter issued by the Workers Party of America, thru its Central Executive Committee, to the Conference called by the authorized committee of the sixteen standard railroad labor organizations and just held in Chicago, is as follows:

* * * *

THE men and women of this country whose power to labor is their only dependence for a livelihood, and who at the same time are conscious of the social significance of their position, must hear with keen interest a call issued by representatives of twenty-five hundred thousand organized workers.

More especially must this be true at a time when six millions of us have been thrust into the desperate position of being deprived of the right to labor by which alone we can live, and when the call declares its purpose to be the solution of this terrible problem among others.

The signers of the call are all, as heads of great Labor Unions, sworn to defend the interests of the workers. This fact must be considered in connection with all that we say in this letter.

We remind you that the human liberties that the courts have construed out of existence are not the rights of the men of business, holders of capital.

Bankers, stock traders and railroad owners have suffered no loss of liberties in recent times. The kind of rights that the courts have sacrificed have been without exception the rights of the propertyless masses—those who live by labor.

There has been a deadly progression by which the elementary and life-enabling rights of the working masses have disappeared.

He would be blind who could not see that an organized offensive participated in as a whole by the class that lives by exploiting labor, is now and has been for many months advanced in an unwavering drive to exterminate the last of those rights of workers which are the flickering lights in this so-called civilization based upon exploitation of Labor.

Out of the nightmare of crime in which the capitalist rulers of the world have killed and mutilated thirty millions of men in seeking gain to their narrow class, there has emerged but one constructive act, the only one bearing a promise for the future of the race, and that was an act of Labor—the establishment of a Workers' Republic in Russia.

Elsewhere it has been Labor, and Labor alone, that has stood guard and fought for what human rights remain. Wherever the Labor front has been broken, disaster to the human race has resulted.

The tragic history of the years from 1914 constitutes a cry for the consolidation of the toiling masses as such—as distinguished sharply from the class which has ruled and ruined.

Urge Complete Mobilization.

In America, where all Capital is in concerted action, while the forces of Labor are chaotically divided and consequently suffer a bewildering

Sacco-Vanzetti Framed; Witness Admits He Lied

By EUGENE LYONS.

BOSTON, Mass., Feb 21.—One of the chief prosecution witnesses on whose testimony the lives of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were sworn away in Dedham, Mass., last summer has voluntarily made a complete and unequivocal denial of statements in court, in the presence of the Federated Press correspondent, counsel for defense and other persons.

In a long affidavit he repudiates categorically all his answers to essential questions put to him on the witness stand and admits the truth of the counter-testimony bearing upon the same point introduced by the defense.

Both the defense group and the lawyers are frankly enthusiastic over recent developments. They assert that the confession of this witness is the first breach in the prosecution case and that other serious cracks are already showing.

"We have strong reason to believe," a member of the Sacco-Vanzetti Defense Committee said, "that the whole flimsy structure will crumble to dust. The unexpected somersault by an outstanding state witness, apparently under the urge of his conscience, confirms our charges against the prosecution. Never since the Mooney frame-up has evidence been so unscrupulously wrung from the lips of witnesses by state officials."

Jobless Plan Big Protest at City Hall

BULLETIN.

The Unemployed Council of Greater New York at press time received word from the police authorities that the unemployed demonstration cannot be held at the Franklin Statue, City Hall Square.

The demonstration will take place at the same hour but at the corner of West and Barclay streets.

The Unemployment Council of New York, [illegible] the Organization of [illegible], will hold a big [illegible] Saturday, February 25, 2 P. M., at the Franklin [illegible], City Hall.

The [illegible] Council is calling upon organized labor to assist it in the demonstration and protest and to show its solidarity with the great mass of workers who have been thrown out of work.

There is no longer any doubt as to the [illegible] situation. [illegible]

[illegible]

The present condition of things in New York is due to nothing more than the utter indifference of the authorities and of the employers to the position of the unemployed.

The introduction of the anti-strike bill shows the regard that the employers have for organized labor.

The strikes that have taken place merely on the question of wages show that the employers are successful in their campaign to reduce wages, having at their disposal an army of 400,000 to choose from.

Duty of Workers to Protest

There must not be any distinction in the classes of labor. There must be a united front especially on the matter of unemployment. It is one of the foremost and most pressing tasks of organized labor to unite with the unemployed in a gigantic protest against the failure to do anything to relieve the unemployment situation.

During this week and next the following meetings will be held: Saturday, Feb. 25, 7.30 P. M. Hungarian Workers' Home, 350 East 81st St.; Sunday, Feb. 26, 2 P. M. Finnish Workers' Home, 764 40th St., Brooklyn; Tuesday, Feb. 28, 7.30 P. M. Workers Hall, 1347 Boston Road, Bronx; Friday, March 3, 2 P. M. Labor Temple, 243 East 84th St.

Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the "Bloody Pontius Pilate" of capitalist tyranny during the war, has resigned. He will now devote all of his attention to organized baseball at $50,000 per year. We're waiting for Landis' decision on the first scrap between the baseball team owners and the baseball players.

Japan has decided to bar Mrs. Margaret Sanger from lecturing to the Japanese workers on the subject of birth control. Those Japanese politicians are certainly quick at adopting American methods, especially those of the New York police, who insisted on breaking up Mrs. Sanger's meeting here.

Many of the members of the army of unemployed are marching into the nation's prisons as a last resort. Penal institutions in New York report a 25 per cent increase in their population due to the industrial depression. Such is capitalism. Workers! Do you like it?

Bosses Refuse to Arbitrate Wage Question; Use Terroristic Tactics to Break the Strike; Pawtucket Silk Operatives Join Other Toilers

With all available state troops doing guard duty at their plants, the Rhode Island textile mill owners have refused to arbitrate the wage question with the representatives of their 15,000 striking employees.

The owners have also refused to make a public statement of their operating costs, altho the reduction of 20 per cent in wages against which the general strike in the industry is a protest was made ostensibly to enable New England mills to compete with the operators in the Southern states.

The representatives of the strikers have agreed to arbitration of the wage question but insist that their demand for the restoration of the 48-hour week is not within the scope of an arbitration board.

The reign of terror inaugurated in an attempt to cow the Rhode Island strikers by imported gunmen, co-operating with police and state troops, has resulted in the death of one striker, Jose Assuncao, and the serious wounding of several more at the Jenckes mill in Pawtucket, Rhode Island.

Witnesses of the shooting declare that into a crowd where there were women and children in large numbers, the police and gunmen emptied their riot-guns with the evident intention of killing and crippling as many strikers as possible.

The cold-blooded ferocity of the mill-owners' thugs is said by observers to exceed even the brutality displayed during the hard-fought Lawrence strike of 1912.

President McMahon of the United [illegible]

The killing of one and the serious shooting of several other strikers at Pawtucket was the most wanton act of brutality that has ever taken place in this state. The mayor, backed by a police sergeant and some hired gunmen, started the shooting at the Jenckes mill which ended in death. It was a cowardly attack such as might have been expected from the Cossacks of Russia when the czar was supreme. The men and women who were shot down in cold blood were picketing the Jenckes mill in a peaceable manner and were quiet and orderly until attacked by the police and gunmen.

In Pawtucket alone there are six companies of coast artillery, a machine gun company and an ambulance corps.

The Unions fighting the strike have started a campaign to raise a relief fund of $100,000. Continued unemployment has depleted their treasuries, but the membership seem determined to fight to the last ditch knowing that any sign of weakness will simply mean a new onslaught on their starvation incomes. "We might as well strike and starve as work and starve" said one girl striker and this seems to be the general sentiment. Organization work has been carried on for months by both the Amalgamated Textile Workers and the United Textile Workers in the industry and there is a surprisingly solid front among the workers.

The attempt to still further reduce the already low wages, and to force up the work-week to 54 hours constitute only the "exciting" cause of the strike. The shameful conditions which for years have existed in the industry—and which perhaps have been at their worst in this state—are such that these latest assaults of the mill owners seem only to bring them to a climax.

For many years Rhode Island industry has been dominated by the mill operators. Not even in the coal districts of West Virginia, where the coal barons wield a power over the lives of the workers as despotic as that of ancient feudalism, is the industrial autocracy so complete. The mill owners own the community. They virtually own the police, the courts and the military. They literally own the mills, and in scores of cases the homes of the workers, the stores at which the workers must buy their food and clothing. They have extended and developed their domination until it pervades every part of the lives of the workers, even to their worship. Thousands of the mill operatives have to trade at company stores, be attended in sickness by company doctors, even, in some instances, go to company churches. And, finally, they live in fear of the most detestable and indefensible thing called the "blacklist."

Their wages have always been small, and they have been out on an average of about 42 per cent in the last sixteen months. A notable feature of the present situation is that in all the daily newspapers of New England and New York, which have given many columns to the strike, not once have the actual wages been mentioned. In Rhode Island they averaged, before the present reduction, about $21 a week!

The warfare against organized labor in Rhode Island is and has been as bitter and unscrupulous as anywhere in America. Industrial terrorism still holds sway here. The mill owners and their financial connections run the politics of the state, which still maintains a borough system by which the smallest hamlet has equal representation in the state legislature with the largest city. There is even a property qualification and restriction upon the right to vote!

And that is not the worst. The sovereign state of Rhode Island permits the employment of 14-year-old children in the textile mills. Read what "Fibre and Fabric," a trade journal of the industry published in Boston, said editorially of child labor in its issue of August 31, 1918:

"If the child labor reformers would definitely state what they propose to do with the children of laboring people, who, now, more than ever need every dollar possible to obtain in a legitimate way, we could look upon this question from a different viewpoint. But prohibiting them from work is about as far as they go and it seems immaterial if the boys become loafers and the girls prostitutes. (The boldface is ours.)

GIGANTIC DEMONSTRATION! Unemployed and Organized Labor! Show Your Solidarity and Power

Saturday, February 25, 2 P. M. Corner West and Barclay Streets

[illegible] March 1

The workers of New York City will follow the example of the Workers of Europe and hold a demonstration March 1st to demand a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti, the two Italian labor leaders now awaiting sentence of death in Massachusetts on a framed-up charge of highway robbery and murder.

The conference in charge of the demonstration which is to be held Wednesday evening, March first, at Beethoven Hall, 210 E. 5th St., has announced that many of New York's most prominent speakers will address the meeting.

Joseph M. Coldwell, recently released political prisoner, who has been touring New England on behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti, William Dunn, editor of The Worker, Fred Biedenkapp, P. O. Cosgrove, Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, organizer of the Workers' Defense Union, who has just finished a speaking tour of the mining camps of Illinois and Indiana, Carlo Tresca, editor of Il Martello, Pedro Estave, Norman Thomas, associate editor of the Nation, and J. B. Salutzky, educational director of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America.

A rousing call has been issued to the workers of New York City, as follows:

"Sacco and Vanzetti are awaiting death in Massachusetts for championing the rights of the workers. The protest of the workers against their execution has resounded around the world. We must exert every effort to keep alive the interest of the working class of this country in the case of Sacco and Vanzetti or we will find one of these days that the drama has ended by the electric chair.

"They are alive today because of the vigilance of the workers of Europe! Are they to die because of the indifference of the workers of America? By stopping the execution of these men we have struck a death blow at the frame-up system that put Mooney and Billings, Ford and Suhr, Rangel and Kline in prison for life.

"The frame-up system must go!"

The Tag Day

TO ALL SOCIALIST PARTY BRANCHES AND MEMBERS

Comrades: We feel that you stand with us shoulder to shoulder on the question of relief for the famine-stricken people of Soviet Russia. The piteous appeal of the 15,000,000 sufferers, doomed to almost certain death unless aid is sent speedily and effectively, this appeal has touched your hearts, as it has ours. We feel that you, as well as we, want to do more than merely drop a few coins or shed a sympathetic tear. We, therefore, call upon you to join with us in the Tag Day for Russian Relief on March 4 and 5. We want you to help make this a success.

We seek no glory or credit for ourselves. We want to obtain as much as we can for relief and we know that your comrades are earnest and willing to help. We are willing and anxious to give the Socialist Party, its individual branches and membership, full credit for any funds they may collect. If you have a heart, therefore, act! Act at once!

Notify us at once of your intentions. All that is needed is, your headquarters as a station, your comrades for collection and an understanding with the section committee as to allotment of territory. Materials, boxes, tags, etc., will be furnished by the Local Office, 208 East 12th Street.

Yours for Russian Relief,

[illegible] Explains Lack of Real Fighting Spirit

NOTE—The "Political Infancy" of the American labor movement is reviewed in this second installment of the principles and program of the Trade Union Educational League, published in full in the March issue, the first issue of the Labor Herald, its official organ. Next week we shall publish another installment of the "principles and program" explaining the sources of the troubles of the American labor movement. This week's installment is as follows:

Politically our trade unions are also in an infantile condition. They have not yet advanced to the point of even rudimentary political class consciousness.

Blissfully unaware that the class struggle rages in the political as well as in the industrial field, they are still trailing along in the train of the capitalist parties and shamefully begging favors from them.

Their cause is a football for every political crook in the country—to the sad demoralization of the whole labor movement. The workers in other countries were once in a similar boat, but they have all long since got away from it.

Some, the anti-political tendency, have adopted the Syndicalist program of direct action on the political field thru the trade unions, and others, retaining their belief in political action, have built up extensive Labor, Socialist, and Communist parties.

But all of them, Syndicalists, Laborites, Socialists, and Communists, agree upon class action in the political field.

They would laugh out of court any leader among them who dared advocate the antediluvian no-class political policy of the American trade union movement.

For them the adoption of such a program would mean turning the clock backward a generation.

Lacks Idealism and Social Vision

Another striking feature of our labor movement's primitiveness is its unequaled lack of idealism and social vision. It has no soul. It has not yet raised the inspiring banner of working class emancipation.

So far as its vague conscious expressions go, it is still timidly and blindly trying to patch up wage slavery and make it endurable. It has still to learn that the only solution of the labor struggle is by the abolition of capitalism.

In this sad position it stands alone, for the workers of all other important countries have long since definitely broken with capitalism. They look upon it as an obsolete social system which must be eliminated.

They are looking forward to the establishment of a new proletarian society in which parasitic capitalists will be no more. They differ widely as to how this great goal can be achieved, whether capitalism shall be abolished piece by piece, as the Socialists propose, or all at one blow, as the Communists and Syndicalists urge.

But they are unanimous that capitalism must go. The American trade unions are the only general body of organized workers in the world that have not yet mastered this fundamental labor conclusion.

And the result is a tremendous weakening in their programs and fighting strength.

Our Pitiful Conservatism

A striking illustration of this unparalleled intellectual timidity and conservatism comes to light in our trade unions' relations with the labor organizations of other countries.

There are two world trade union federations, one with headquarters in Amsterdam, and the other in Moscow.

The Amsterdam International is reformist, and the Moscow International revolutionary.

All the important labor movements of the world are affiliated with one or the other of these two Internationals—that is, all except ours.

We stand aloof altogether on the ground that both are too revolutionary. Even the Amsterdam International, whose leaders undoubtedly saved capitalism in its greatest crisis by defeating the recent revolutionary uprisings in Germany, Italy, France, etc., is much too radical for us.

Because its "revolutionary" doctrines might contaminate our pure bourgeois ideas, and for fear that our association with such a "terrible" organization would discredit us in the eyes of American exploiters, the American Federation of Labor, not long since, severed relations with the Amsterdam International.

THE SHAME OF CALIFORNIA.

The Reproach of America that Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings Should Rot in Prison—the Frame-Up Victims of Perjured Testimony.

This made us the laughing stock of the international labor world, revolutionary and reformist alike.

When it comes to militancy of program we stand in a place by ourselves—at the very foot of the profession.

And so it is with many other phases of our movement, which need not be cited here.

Fighting Power Weakened

The general effect of the extreme political and industrial undevelopment of our trade union movement has been to greatly weaken the fighting power of the working class.

More than ever this is evidenced by the present world crisis in industry. Whereas the trade unions of other countries are pretty much holding their own, or in some cases even forging ahead, ours are in disordered retreat before the victorious employers.

The latter, strongly organized and controlling the press, the courts, and practically every section of the local, state, and national governments, are smashing the unions right and left and making ducks and drakes of the workers' political and industrial rights.

The crisis is serious and so generally recognized that there is no need for us to waste words over it here.

Suffice to say that if Organized Labor does not soon reorganize its primitive craft unions into modern industrial unions and infuse them with real fighting spirit it will inevitably suffer crushing defeat, if not actual annihilation.

AUSTRALIAN MINERS MILITANT

SYDNEY, N. S. W.—Trouble in the coal and shale industry is threatened during the early part of 1922.

Recently the Miners' Federation suggested that in order to equalize work over all the mines, a nine-day fortnight should be worked. The mine owners replied that they would not agree to any such equalizing of work, claiming that it was an attempt on the part of the miners to dictate in the management of the industry.

Since then a great number of the miners' lodges have carried motions to put the nine-day fortnight into operation during January. The mine owners say this is a challenge to lay the mines idle. On the other hand, the miners charge the owners with trying to foment a strike as a pretext to reducing wages.

[illegible] to [illegible] at Mass Meeting

Paxton Hibben, who will speak at the Lexington Theatre on Sunday evening, February [illegible], at 8 P. M., is a member of the American Society of Colonial Wars. His family has been in America since [illegible]. He graduated from Princeton in [illegible]. He was admitted to the bar of Indiana in [illegible] and to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1910. He served as a secretary of the American Embassy at Petrograd in 1905 and 1906, thus giving him an excellent chance to gain an insight into the Russian character and economic conditions.

In 1914, Hibben was a candidate for Congress on the Progressive Party ticket from the 7th District of Indiana. He was staff correspondent of the Associated Press in Holland, France and Greece during the war and special correspondent of the Chicago Tribune and of Leslie's Weekly.

Joins Near East Relief

He was commissioned 1st lieutenant in the Field Artillery after service in the 2nd Officers' Training Camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, Nov. 27, 1917. He served overseas with the 322nd Field Artillery and was promoted to captaincy on May 31, 1919. Still searching for adventure he joined the American Military Mission to Transcaucasian Russia on Aug. 21, 1919. Later he acted for the Near East Relief in Transcaucasian Russia and was correspondent of Leslie's Weekly until August 2nd 1921. He visited Moscow and the Volga region, 5,750 miles thru the famine area.

As secretary of the Russian Commission of the Near East Relief, Paxton Hibben has compiled what is considered one of the most authentic reports on the Russian Famine. He is therefore fully qualified to speak with authority on conditions in Russia.

Hits Attacks by The Times

Captain Hibben has been most emphatic in his denunciation of Herbert Hoover and the N. Y. Times for their slanderous attacks on Russian Relief organizations. He declared recently that "the natural result of the attack would be to add to the millions of innocent victims of the famine and those who have lodged this campaign to starve the Russians, know it full well."

This is the first chance that Captain Hibben has had to reply to Hoover at length. To add to the interest, which this courageous critic has aroused, his talk will be preceded by Motion Pictures of conditions in the famine area. Moissaye J. Olgin, noted journalist and writer, who returned from Russia recently, will be chairman.

The State

The capitalist state, represented by the existing government, whether controlled by one party or another, is an organization of force for the suppression of the demands of the exploited workers.

Its courts, its police, its military power are all ruthlessly used against the workers.

The workers cannot hope to wage a successful struggle against capitalist oppression and exploitation while the state power remains in the control of the capitalists.

The Workers Party therefore declares that the class struggle must take the form of a political struggle, a struggle for control of the state power.

CARLSON LECTURE IN WILLIAMSBURG.

Oliver Carlson, National Secretary of the Young Workers League will speak on "The Task of the Revolutionary Youth" at the newly organized CIRCLE (8) in WILLIAMSBURG, 226 ROEBLING STREET, FRIDAY, MARCH 3, at 8 o'clock.

ALL YOUNG PEOPLE and those who consider themselves young, despite their age, are requested to attend. THE YOUNG WORKERS LEAGUE MUST GROW. EVERY YOUNG WORKER BELONGS IN OUR RANKS. IF YOU ARE A YOUNG WORKER THIS MEANS YOU.

"The future belongs to the Young." But it depends upon the young to mold a future worth-while; a future free from War, Unemployment and conditions created by a system devoted to the cause of making profits.

We want to follow the lead of other circles in the city in BUILDING A LIVE WIRE CIRCLE, to organize classes, arrange lectures, to prepare ourselves for the task before us, and last, but not least, supply our own entertainment. REMEMBER THE DATE AND PLACE OF THE NEXT MEETING AND ENLIST IN THE RANKS OF THE FIGHTING YOUNG WORKERS.

Senator Smoot, of Utah, announces that congress has gone crazy. That is what we have contended all along, but we didn't think that a senator was insane enough to admit it.

—Boardman Robinson

Hail, the Workers' Party!

The above is a reproduction of a cartoon by Boardman Robinson in the current issue of The Liberator.

It visualizes the hope that the organization of the Workers' Party of America has inspired among the masses. They hail the Workers' Party as their emancipator, as their great hope.

Yet they are the very ones who must make the Workers' Party the power it must be before it can achieve their emancipation.

In another article in this issue, Edgar T. Whitehead, our British comrade, estimates that one in every 300 of America's population must be a member of the party before it can develop really effective action.

It will be instructive to look for a moment at the density which certain parties and organizations have achieved in other countries.

In the Petrograd revolution of 1917 the Bolsheviki probably commanded the services of not less than ten thousand trained and disciplined party members in a population of one million. That was a density of one in a hundred. A high density, and as it proved, a sufficient density for the task. To this trained nucleus of the best brains of the workers, large masses of untrained workers were attracted whose degree of class consciousness and whose conceptions of the objects of the revolutionary struggle were more or less clouded and vague.

In Czecho-Slovakia at the present time the revolutionary Party of the Workers numbers no fewer than two hundred and fifty thousand members in a population of fourteen millions, a density of one in fifty-six. This density is so high that the international situation and the conditions in surrounding countries being auspicious, the seizure of power by the organized working class would be a comparatively easy revolutionary task.

That such a revolution does not immediately occur is due mainly to the fact that neighboring capitalist countries, particularly Hungary, Poland, and Austria, would immediately drown in blood any Czecho-Slovakian Workers' Republic that reared its head.

In Germany the Workers' Revolutionary Party numbers 250,000 in a population of 75,000,000, a density of one in three hundred.

Norway with a party membership of 20,000 in 3,000,000 inhabitants, reaches a density of one in 150.

France with a membership of 120,000 in 36,000,000 reaches a density of one in three hundred.

It is therefore evident to every reader of THE WORKER that the Workers' Party has a great task before it—the enlisting and training within its ranks of 350,000 workers, the best brains of the American working class.

You must help! Become a member of the party yourself! Get others to join and to train themselves for the struggle. For information write the National Office, Workers Party, 799 Broadway, New York City.

A Lie Nailed

The Socialist World, official organ of the Socialist Party, sometime ago published a slanderous article, made up of a tissue of lies, concerning the character and activities of Alfred Wagenknecht. It accused him of purchasing a home with organization funds which he had embezzled and stated that he retired from the movement on his ill-gotten gains.

The article was so vicious in character and the statements it made so unfounded that the Miami Valley Socialist, the party organ in Ohio, in its issue of February 10th not only denies them in toto but calls upon the Socialist World to publish a retraction. The Miami Valley Socialist says in part:

"In the "Socialist World" appeared a statement that "Alfred Wagenknecht, former leader in the Underground Communist organization, has been expelled for misappropriation of funds." The editor of the Miami Valley Socialist has no knowledge of the source of the tale. But we have not the slightest hesitation in declaring it false. As a member of the old State executive committee it was our duty to check up his work and his use of funds. We know how scrupulous he was in accounting for every penny. We know something of the struggle and sacrifice he and his family were making to remain in the party work. Wagenknecht is and was a clean and honest man. And for corroboration comes a report from the National Secretary of the Workers Party branding the report a libel.

After speaking of the bitter controversy between the groups who differed on the question of tactics, the editor of the Miami Valley Socialist says of the attack on Wagenknecht:

The poison gas attack upon us has been hard to endure. But that affords us no excuse to retaliate in kind, and the effort to destroy the good name of Alfred Wagenknecht by publishing a lying tale that he "has retired to a quiet home purchased with misappropriated funds" is utterly without justification. The "Socialist World" should either publish the grounds of its statement or retract.

Unfortunately, altho we thank the Miami Valley Socialist for its manly stand, a retraction cannot, at this late date undo any but a small part of the harm done Wagenknecht.

One thing however is certain and that is that the person responsible for the slander has exposed himself as one of those jackals infesting the working class movement of this country, ever eagerly searching for some bit of carrion whose odor their degenerate tastes enjoy and which they use to disgust and drive away from the movement those whose honesty and sincerity they hate because they have none themselves.

Our hustler at Rochester, Minn., increases his bundle from 10 to 100. He invites workers elsewhere to duplicate his effort. What do you say?

A six months' sub rolls in from Minneapolis, Minn., that wants to be started with the first issue of THE WORKER. It got here just in time. Our supply of back numbers is almost exhausted.

* * *

"The army of the jobless is growing here every week. This makes it very hard for me to dispose of my bundle of THE WORKER," writes a comrade from Racine, Wisc. But he keeps right at it.

A comrade writes from the coal fields of Franklin, Ill. He says: "The workers know absolutely nothing of the labor movement here and in other countries. We must get them to read." So he is going to start out with a bundle of THE WORKER. And he is going to try to organize a branch of the Workers Party. Good work!

FROM VANCOUVER, BRITISH COLUMBIA: "Can you ship me 50 copies of THE WORKER each week for sale at unemployed meetings here in Greater Vancouver." We'll say we can. Our hustler says: "The slaves here must be kept informed as to what is transpiring across the line in the U. S. A."

A collection was taken up for adon, bringing in $26.80.

Dinner a Real Hunger Banquet

This dinner is similar to the hun- banquets that are being given to funds for the starving millions Soviet Russia. But if conditions tinue as they are in America, we soon have to collect funds for starving in the United States.

FABLE OF CAPITALIST FOX AND LABOR-UNION ROOSTER

A fox once decided that it was time for him to eat a rooster. He picked him, he put him on the fire, and when he thought he had him done to a turn he sat down to enjoy his meal. Just as he was about to carve him, the rooster rose up to his full height, and shaking the hot gravy from his comb said, "Say, Fox, what's your hurry?"

Knudsen's Candidacy

The nomination of William R. Knudson for the presidency of the International Association of Machinists is an indication that the discouraging events of the last three years have not entirely killed off the desire of the workers for a fighting policy on the industrial field.

Knudsen campaigned on the issue of the class-struggle without compromise and yet in the largest industrial centers, altho unable to get the publicity received by the administration candidates, he has the support of 94 machinist locals.

He will not be elected this year but his campaign has proved that the machinists are ready for the new policy that the labor movement will be forced to adopt—the unity of all workers on one front for the abolition of the wage system.

Mooney and Billings

We hope that when Gene Debs takes the platform for the class-war prisoners, as it is announced he will, that the workers will show new and added interest in the cases of Tom Mooney and Warren K. Billings.

No more flagrant and brazen instance of the violation of the rights of the individual is at hand than the continued imprisonment of these workers whom the whole world knows are innocent of the crime of which they were convicted by perjured testimony and for which they are spending the best years of their lives in California jails.

The labor movement of this country cannot regain its self-respect until these workers and the rest of the class-war prisoners are free, nor will the ruling class have any despect for it as long as it is permitted to imprison at will the militants of the labor movement.

Sacco and Vanzetti

More than seventy-five thousand workers were represented at the first meeting of the Sacco-Vanzetti Conference of New York last Sunday. The conference was called by the United Labor Council, the Italian Defense Committee, the National Defense Committee and the Workers Defense Union as a means of giving the workers of New York City a chance to voice their protest against the frame-up of the two Italian labor leaders.

It is planned by the conference to have the workers of New York follow the example of the workers of Europe and hold a demonstration March first to demand a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti.

Many unions who have not as yet sent delegates have indorsed the activities of the conference. The United Hebrew Trades Council at its meeting Monday night unanimously indorsed the demonstration.

If these two workers are to be saved continuous activity in theier behalf is needed. Large centers like New York must take the lead and there must be no fatal lapse in the agitation that has already prevented their speedy murder.

Trade Union Educational League

The Trade Union Educational League, organized by William Z. Foster, is now making a drive for memberhip and every unionist who is disgusted with the policies of the individuals now controlling the labor movement of the United States has an opportunity of joining this organization which has a clean-cut policy for the revolutionizing of the American movement.

There is plenty of protest against the disgraceful spectacle presented by the unions of this nation, functioning as many of them do in the interests of the employing class during the most critical period in the history of the movement. Leaders without vision with whom office-holding in the Labor movement is a profitable profession, a stepping stone to a high position in capitalist government, an officialdom timid and servile, playing the masters' game for political preferment, preventing at all times any discussion of the real nature of the issue between capital and labor, an officialdom with the mental depth of a Tammany Hall politician, using the unions to satisfy unscrupulous ambitions and always at the beck and call of the taskmasters in war and peace, has caused thousands of workers to give up hope. Sporadic revolts against the abuse of authority and outright betrayals by officials of the Labor movement have been crushed because of lack of organization and with each reversal the ranks of the radicals in the unions were depleted; they went over to the "pure" unions—much to the delight of the bureaucrats.

The Trade Union Educational League proposes to unite in a national organization all trade unionists who are willing to work for industrial unionism and a program of working-class education within the trade unions. It intends, by uniting the radical forces in the American labor movement, to solidify the ranks of the class-conscious workers and give to each one the confidence that comes from knowing that one is not playing a lone hand. For the first time all members of the trade-union movement who see the danger to the workers in great capitalistic nation of a Labor movement that still adheres to the outworn forms of craft unionism have now an opportunity to unite for action.

If the workers who now express their dissatisfaction in words really want to make the Amercian labor movement a fighting force on the front of the class-struggle they have a chance to join forces with others of the same beliefs and work in the unions not as individuals but as solid unit.

The publication of the League—The Labor Herald—will serve to keep the membership informed of the organization's activities in the various industries and will give full expression to the desire for progress which cannot now be had in any but a few of the trade-union publications.

Nothing but apathy can prevent the League becoming a virile force for militant unionism.

Fight the Famine

The Russian workers are building up their industries, in order that there may be no repetition of the famine next year. They are seriously hampered in their work, however, owing to the lack of machinery and particularly the want of small part of machines. The FSR is writing to Europe to procure sample parts that are missing, so that they may be obtained in requisite quantities in America.

What is especially wanted in Soviet Russia at the moment are ploughs and tractors. Above we disclosed what has become of the horses, without which cultivation of the soil will be impossible. These implements must be despatched soon, if spring tilling is to take place.

In the famine district there are 3,998,949 farms, provided with only 715,000 ploughs, 90,700 sowers and 65,200 cutters and binders. A large quantity of these machines and several hundred tractors would cover the immediate needs of this locality.

Locomotives stand disabled in the roundhouse and railroad yards, for mere lack of small parts. These parts can be procured in America. American workers must supply them.

The relief work in America continues with the same enthusiasm. Los Angeles has held a big bazaar. The splendid success of the concert in January has spurred the comrades to great efforts.

Since the work of Com. Tallenture in the Rocky Mountains region, the activity has been 100 per cent greater. There is a merchant in Boulder, Colo., who has sent out 2300 letters to people whose names are in the telephone book. He has inserted ads in two weekly's and in a daily paper. And he has produced results. Three times he has remitted considerable amounts for the starving in Soviet Russia—all because he was particularly interested in the matter.

Minneapolis has collected and forwarded more than $5,000 worth of clothing--and this is but the beginning. The clothing has been cleaned and laundered and repaired by women and tailors. The shoes have been repaired by the shoemakers organized by the Technical Aid for Soviet Russia. The machinists in the vicinity of Minneapolis are collecting tools. A "hunger" banquet was held on February 12.

Bridgeport has sent in a $3,500 load of clothing, food, soap, medicines and miscellaneous articles. Active comrades made this collection possible in that small Connecticut town.

Children of Hartford, Conn., gave a concert and play. "It is a pleasure to see our children work with enthusiasm for the hungry children of Russia."

Erie, Pa., has contributed 25 boxes of groceries and 30 bundles of clothing.

"Enclosed please find check of $100 the profits of the dance run by the Jewish Mothers' Alliance in Oakland, for the war sufferers in Russia."

"I am sending you this little collection. It is all I can get this time. This is a little saw mill town and the mill has closed down for a year or two and some of the families are getting relief from the town. So it is hard to get help from the working class, and the other class is building a church."

"THE WORLD IS MY PEOPLE. THE FIELDS ARE MY CHURCH."

[illegible] played in the United Mine Workers organization expected Alex Howat would receive the indorsement of the convention.

With his own district expelled and its fighting membership replaced for voting purposes by the carefully hand-picked delegates pledged to Lewis, with the full resources of the national office used to pack the convention, the followers of Howat made a remarkable showing and proved to the satisfaction of everyone including the reactionaries that the Lewis administration remains in power solely by the use of methods with which bureaucracies are only too familiar.

The packing of conventions of labor unions has become a fine art in the American labor movement, and especially is this true in the United Mine Workers of America where the anointed ones are sure of backing from coal operators and the government in the eternal campaign against radicalism.

It is quite evident that the narrow margin by which the Lewis machine squeezed thru is not sufficient to enable it to recklessly ignore much longer the wish of the membership for a more militant leadership and as a consequence officialdom is proposing an alliance with the railway workers as a sop to the radical element. Unity is a desirable thing, but unity of the working class is not brought about by the unity of officials whose efforts so far have been largely directed toward dividing the workers on the industrial field.

Until the rank and file of the workers' organizations force a complete reorganization of the labor movement of America labor officialdom will continue to sidetrack into ineffective channels the unorganized protest against their suicidal policies.

Organization of the militant workers in the unions into a disciplined force is the only way by which the pure-and-simple trade unionism—now obsolete—can be replaced with a co-ordinated movement able to muster the whole power of labor at any point where an assault is made.

In the United Mine Workers the movement is gaining headway, but better organization and a more concrete policy is needed.

The Chicago Fiasco

We incline to the belief that the ardor of those who saw in the Chicago conference the first step towards unity of the producers on the political field has somewhat cooled.

We remained quite calm while the predictions were being made thick and fast and the air was filled with talk of an American counterpart of the British Labor Party. We know the labor-leaders who called the conference and the last thing they will ever do is to cut themselves off from all chance of crawling into a government position by fathering a program of independent political action. It is true that the picking are rather slim just at present but there is always the chance that by exercising the executive authority at the right time a strike can be called off or seriously hampered and that the preserver of industrial peace will be suitably rewarded by a grateful employer's government.

The great trouble with the average radical is that he regards the hierarchy of the American labor movement as reactionary but honest and thinks that it can be used for progress. It is not honest and it is just as much a part of the ruling class machinery in the United States as is the National Chamber of Commerce.

Even when honest it is so hopelessly stupid that anyone who knows anything at all of the structure of modern society groans with disgust when he attempts to converse with the pure and simple trade union official. Let it be known for all time to come that labor officialdom in the United States is a special privileged group; that when it thinks of the labor problem at all except in terms of dues-paying membership it looks upon this country and its institutions as perfection; there is jut one trouble, in the mind of the labor-leader, and it is that there are certain corporation heads who do not believe in the trade-unions and who are too dense to see that unions are just as good for the employer as they are for the employee. If it wasn't for the attitude of these individuals and their bad influence on other employers we could probably get along without unions at all because the government is all right providing we get good men and we would get good men if the workers would only get out and vote and if there were not so many foreigners who can't vote. The unions should not mix in politics except to elect some trade-union official; they should show just enough interest in politics so that labor officialdom can deal with the political boss and land some good fellow in a soft job.

This is a rather fair description of the political consciousness of the average trade-union official but many of them do not go quite so far and think that a union man and a voter are different entities.

To expect individuals of this caliber to form a Labor Party and throw down the gauntlet to their friends of the old line parties is to show a startling ignorance of what the American labor movement is and how it is officered and led.

There will be no unity of the labor movement either politically or industrially until the leaven of the class-struggle has permeated the ranks of the trade unions to a much larger extent than it has at present and not until the pressure of circumstances has greatly weakened the grip of the stupid, selfish and traitorous officialdom now in power. In other words unity comes not thru officialdom but in spite of all it can do to prevent it.

The blinded soldiers of St. Dunstan's have presented Princess Mary one the eve of her wedding, with a rug and basket they made themselves. Little incidents like the above convince us that good old capitalism will still be with us when we wake up to-morrow morning.

THE WORKER offers as a prize for the name of a prison in the United States where some wage-earner is not imprisoned for his activities on behalf of his class, that great treatise on human liberty, "The New Freedom," by the late Woodrow Wilson.

Local New York, of the Workers Party, Gets Big Work Under Way

At the second session of Local Greater New York, Workers Party of America, important steps were taken to get the Local into swing. The next meeting will be held at the Labor Temple, 243 East 84th Street, room 8, Saturday, March 4th.

First conference of branch organizers, literature agents, financial secretaries and Executive Committee representatives of Local Greater New York will be held on Sunday morning March 5th, 10 A. M. at 83 East 4th Street to discuss the organization and propaganda work of the Local.

Working Fund for the Local—the City Central Committee at its last meeting decided upon the necessity of establishing an immediate working fund. Each branch was pledged $3 per delegate. This pledge must be redeemed at once and the money sent into the Local Office, 208 East 12th St. The pledges are to be redeemed at the very latest at the next meeting of the Central Committee. All branches must at once raise this sum.

EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE

All members of Workers Party branches participating in educational work, representatives of the Young Workers League and the Industrial Department of the Workers Party will attend the Educational Conference called by the Executive Committee of Local Greater New York, Workers Party, Friday night, March 3, 243 East 84th St.

It is expected that at this Conference, the first steps will be taken to organization of educational work in all the branches as well as a center for the training of vigorous and intelligent communist propagandists.

Local Greater New York, Workers Party, is calling a Conference of Branch Organizers, Literature Agents, Financial Secretaries and representatives of Executive Branch Committees to discuss ways and means for building a strong local of the Workers Party in Greater New York.

While Boss' Word is Law

If 1,000,000 trade unionists would stand together and say, "Ben Gitlow is not guilty," he would stand acquitted by the only court which workers should allow him to be tried by.

But because 1,000,000 trade unionists are satisfied to acquit him as individuals instead of united as a Workers' Court, Ben Gitlow and his comrades—Harry Winitsky, Ruthenberg, Ferguson, Manko and others are kept in prison by Capitalist Courts.

Until workers will form their own court to try leaders of their own class their traitor leaders will be acquitted by Capitalist Courts as J. H. Thomas was, and their loyal revolutionary leaders will be found guilty and imprisoned like Gitlow and his Comrades were.

Until workers create their own courts, you who understand the class struggle should stand by our imprisoned comrades and obtain the best defense possible for them in the courts in which they are tried.

The National Defense Committee defends revolutionary workers victimized by Capitalist Courts. It has arranged a GRAND INTERNATIONAL BAZAAR for March 22 thru 25 at the Lyceum 86th St. and 3rd Ave. to raise funds for defense and relief. Have you contributed an article or money to purchase one for the Bazaar? Have you gotten an "ad" for the Souvenir Journal? Have you contracts? Get busy immediately and send your contributions to our new headquarters—Room 405, 80 East 11th St.

The National Organization Committee for the Young Workers League of America is receiving response to its call for the organization of a militant young workers' organization from young workers throut this country as well as in Canada.

Preparation of Convention details (Convention to be held April 15) are being made, and the Provisional Manifesto and Program will be mailed out to the branches of the League this week. It will offer a good opportunity for discussion to the comrades everywhere.

Tentative Constitution Discussed

The tentative Constitution which was mailed out to branches of the League, as well as prospective organizations, is to form the basis of any group of young workers desirous of organizing a branch of the Young Workers' League of America. The constitution is by no means complete; but it will serve as a good starting point.

Organizations which cannot send a delegate to the national convention should not hesitate in answering the call. The call should be accepted by all bodies who agree with the principles laid down therein.

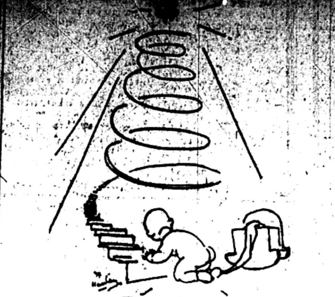
Active co-operation will be given young workers who wish to organize local branches of the league. Write to the secretary of the National Organization Committee for the Young Workers' League, Oliver Carlson, 799 Broadway, Room 405, New York City, and information will be furnished on any phase of the young workers' organization.

"Youth" Well Received

It is pleasing to note that the official organ of the Young Workers' League, YOUTH, is being greeted with favor wherever it makes entry. In Chicago one comrade sold 100 copies of the magazine, and New York reports quick sales. The need for a magazine of the type of YOUTH is emphasized by young workers throut the country. Contributions and criticism indicate that all subscribers are interested in making YOUTH a live, fighting organ of the young workers.

A special issue is being prepared to be known as the Pre-Convention Number. This issue will contain matter to be taken up at the convention as well as articles of pertinent interest to young workers.

Be prepared for the best issue of YOUTH. Orders should be sent to the National Organization Committee.



First Steps

Radical Papers Help Work

The most important radical papers in the country, as well as some of the capitalist periodicals, have published either the CONVENTION CALL of the YOUNG WORKERS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA, or items regarding it. Response is received daily. Los Angeles reports acceptance, and the organization of an active section of the Young Workers' League with Rose Rueben as organizer, and W. Schneiderman as city secretary.

"We hail with joy," write the New York City branches of the Young Workers' League, "the formation of a revolutionary young workers' organization . . . We pledge all the means at our disposal towards carrying this work to a successful conclusion." The spirit put into the work in New York City is indicative of the intention of the comrades in that city to do their share towards building a revolutionary Young Workers' League.

Philadelphia, Boston, and other cities are being heard from regularly, reporting steady progress.

Chicago organizer writes: "In a short time we hope to have a large organization. (Their organization now numbers 150.) Our present objective is 500, which most likely will jump to 1000 before we reach that number. We have the brightest prospects—the highest aims, and hopes—topped with loads of enthusiasm."

Schenectady has organized a branch of the League. They say regarding YOUTH: "We sure can be proud of the YOUTH magazine, and we are in for its success." Syracuse voices a similar sentiment.

NEW YORK Y.W.L. BRANCHES

Circle 1, 1258 Boston Road, Bronx. Lectures for this and the coming month are as follows: February 26, Com. Lindgren, "The Communist International." March 12, Charles Brower; March 19, S. B. O'Kelly, "Irish Transport Workers' Union and the Irish Labor Movement."

A West Side Branch of the Young Workers' League was organized in New York and it has started into action with a fairly large membership. The comrades in this new branch are eager to make the organization grow and have gotten to work to devise ways and means to make this branch the best in the city. They serve notice on all other branches in the city. Carl Cowl is the organizer of the West Side Branch. Inasmuch as the West Side Branch has no regular headquarters, information regarding meeting place, etc., can be obtained from the secretary, Nerma Berman, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

A Finnish branch was organized last week in Harlem. The organizer is Emil Toikko, 124 Brook Avenue. All young people interested in this branch should communicate with Comrade Toikko. Temporarily this organization meets at 143 East 103rd Street; but in the future will no doubt obtain permanent headquarters. This Finnish branch hopes to attain a large membership in a very short while and to reach a great number of Finnish young workers. The prospects for the growth of this organization are indeed bright.

There is also another Finnish Branch of the Young Workers' League in Brooklyn, 764—40th Street. S. Vainis, 3821—8th Ave., is secretary of this branch. On February 24 there will be a meeting of this branch and a member of the city organization will give a talk on the function of the Young Workers' League. This branch has a membership of 25.

A dance was given at 1258 Boston Road by the city organization of the Young Workers' League. It was well attended and the receipts were good. The purpose of the dance was to help defray convention expenses of the Young Workers' League to be held in New York City, April 15th.

Lewis had a better machine than the radicals at the miners' convention and so he won out against Howat. Let the rebel miners organize. They can only win thru organizing their forces for the education and direction of an awakened rank and file. Let them win thru their defeats.

NOTE—The Workers' Defense Union has received a cablegram from Charles Ashleigh, the young English poet, deported last week, saying that he arrived in England and was going to work at once to call attention of British labor to the fact that many British subjects are in the prisons of this country for violations of the wartime laws and are being confined long after English men convicted for similar offences at home have been released. An interview given to THE WORKER, shortly before he left this country is as follows:

"I have emerged into freedom at a time of great interest and tumult," said Ashleigh. "This is indeed a crucial stage in the history of the world. Abroad we have the spectacle of bankruptcy and industrial deterioration as a result of the great world war. We may see the workers of the various countries aligning themselves according to a new revolutionary orientation. The war has indeed been an excellent means for separating the sheep from the goats. On the one side we have the reactionary leaders of the working-class, the social patriots spouting their phrases of middle-class liberalism, and leading the workers ever deeper into the stagnant morasses of parliamentary bickering and bourgeois reformism. On the other hand we have those new virile elements, which have arisen in the world's proletariat, inspired by the great revolution of Russia which are striving to guide the proletariat towards the realization of the Workers' World Republic through the creation of organs of working-class power.

Must Build Improved Structure.

"Here in America we may witness the terrific onslaught of the open shop campaign of the master class upon the labor unions. In their present condition of craft division of middle-class timidity and reactionary leadership, the labor unions of America will find it hard indeed to combat these dark forces of capital. It is the task of the intelligent and militant American unionist to work incessantly within his organization for the perfection of an improved union structure, which will give the direction of union affairs to the militant rank and file, and for the unmasking and overthrow of the reactionary union leadership.

"On the political field the workers of America have been led by the nose by a clique of petty schemers, mouthing the phrases of the class-struggle, but acting politically along the lines of discredited bourgeois liberalism. Truly it may be said of these politicians of the Socialist Party, as was said by the aged and blind father in Israel: 'The hands are the hands of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob.' The hands are the hands of the vote-hungry wire-puller, even if their voices occasionally ring falsely with the rounded phrases of the revolution which they themselves impede.

Workers' Party Brings New Hope.

"There is indeed need in this country of a party which will understand clearly and announce frankly the impossibility of using the parliamentary machine of the capitalist state for the benefit of the workers. There is need of a party which will rally round its banners all the scattered working-class elements in America and will unite them for the heroic task of constructing the Workers' Republic. Such a party, it seems to me, has at last entered the political arena. I believe that the Workers' Party brings with it a new hope and a new inspiration to the jaded and depressed elements of the various branches of the American revolutionary movement.

"When seated at the dining table of the penitentiary, and when viewing with disgust the monotonous but plentiful fare set before us, the thought often entered my mind: 'In Russia they would be glad of this. In Russia they are eating cakes of clay and bread of grass.' However, although in Russia famine prevails, although many Russians could obtain no food at all, or, at best, food which was even inferior to that which we had in prison, yet they had a consolation which we did not: They were members of a workers' society, they were citizens of a Workers' Republic, they were participants in the most significant and heroic social experiment the world has ever seen. Shattered and starved as Russia is by the onslaughts on all frontiers of the subsidized armies of capitalism, inheritors as they were of a country whose industry and transportation had been shattered by the great war, by the mismanagement of its Czar's government and by the futile incapacity of the Kerensky regime, the Workers' Government of Russia has had a titanic task to bring order out of chaos. And this task has been still further hampered by the cruel and ruthless blockade of the Allies. Yet, after four years of striving, the proletarian power still rules that great country. It is the duty of American workers, who, despite the present unemployment and general lowering of wages, are still the most fortunately situated in the world, to give of their utmost to the relief of their famine-stricken comrades in Russia."

By ROBERT LYONS
(Special to the Worker)

BOSTON, Mass.—Professional jugglers and magicians know the value of "atmosphere" in obtaining their effects. By means of subdued lights, a languid incense and the hocus-pocus of hand movements the audience is put into a receptive, believing mood, and prestro! the rabbit jumps out of the hat.

This method had its analogy in the trial of Dedham, Mass., where Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, Italian labor organizers, were found guilty of a hideous murder on circumstantial and contradictory evidence.

Rarely in the history of American jurisprudence has a trial been conducted in a more hate-charged court. Guards, guards, and more guards!

Around the Court House, in the court room, watching the judge, the defendants, the jury . . . . . Spectators were searched for concealed weapons, the accused were held in a steel cage, they were led thru the streets under heavy armed escort.

The total effect was worthy of an expert stage manager. The jury could not help understanding the accusation implied by these hysterical precautions against "riots" and "rescues." His Honor emphasized the implication by repeated pleas to the jurors to show courage in their courage to return an acquital, then courage to return an acquital, then why stress the idea?

The grim comedy was repeated during the hearings for a new trial, when the court was surrounded by State Constabulary armed with riot guns. The press was again fed with fake stories of "threats" to various persons, none of them ever supported by proof, and in most instances denied by the supposed recipients. Altho the first motion fell thru other motions for a new trial are pending, and likewise the appeal to the higher courts.

In a statement issued immediately after the trial the defense group charged that the unexpected death verdict was brought about in large measure by this prejudicial atmosphere. The statement read in part:

"On May 31, 1920, when the case went to trial, the Dedham court house was surrounded by a large group of uniformed and plain clothes officers, sent there ostensibly to preserve peace, but actually constituting notice to the jury that the authorities considered the defendants and their friends extremely vicious and dangerous persons. We hold in our hands a copy of the Boston Globe of May 31st, showing the two defendants going from the jail to the court house in manacles and surrounded by eight officers. This farce was re-enacted for each of the thirty-six days of the trial, all under the very nose of the jury. Four officers at all times, and many times more, surrounded the cage in the court room. Ostensibly to control the defendants, but actually constituting notice to the jury that the authorities believed that a rescue might be attempted.

"For the thirty-six days of the trial the jury were allowed to pass thru the guarded doors to the court house, passing those who desired to enter and seeing those persons one by one being searched by the officers for concealed weapons. Is this an atmosphere that breeds respect for men charged with crime and a capacity to give just consideration to their testimony and the testimony of their witnesses?"

International Woman's Secretariat Ta the Question of Famine Relief for

The question of famine relief was the main topic of di at a recent meeting of the International Women's Secre the Third Communist International.

It was attended by Comrades Kollontai, Lilina and Kas The minutes of the meeting include the following:

"The question of the work of the International Secretariat in tion with relief work for the starving. Report by Comrade on the situation in Petrograd. 'American aid is expressed in fee children between the ages of three and thirteen years exclusively.'

"The supply of articles of primary importance to be exact, mea supplementary feeding, as in fact we still provide the basic food.

"The Americans will supply one meal a day, approximately the ing things will be given: Kasha, made of rice, or semolina, maize, caroni. It is prepared with meat or fish. They also give good milk loaves and cocoa with milk, the general nutrition is 850 calories. Sick babies as well as nursing mothers will be fed at home, how that will be carried out and in what form is not yet known. The Americans only provide the products, the equipment of the feeding centers—is our business.

"Articles of primary necessity, the following are given: Underlinen, dresses, coats, shoes, a piece of soap, and a towel. It is proposed to give altogether 75,000 pairs of boots and an equal number of coats. Our chief need is boots and coats, dress material we have. We refused the offer of hats in Petrograd, as almost anybody can make these at home.

Children for the Children

"Apart from that, we ourselves do the following work: We collect from all the children's homes all the underclothing that can no longer be used for those children, alter and adapt them in various ways.

"This work is carried out by the older children themselves, while the teachers talk to them about the famine and its relief. The children's aid is further expressed by means of organizing special concerts and plays, the proceeds of which are given exclusively to the relief of the starving children.

"The whole of this campaign is carried on under the slogan of 'Children for Children,' and besides the material benefit, there is the agitational significance.

"In Petrograd we also distribute starving children amongst individual families but this is done with great discernment and to the greatest extent in workers' families.

"Further, Comrade Lilina asked about the relation of the Secretariat to the general work of relief within Russia, and the Department of Women workers of the Central Committee.

"Comrade Kollontai informed the meeting of the formation under the auspices of the Comintern, of a special commission for the relief of the famine stricken, with Comrade Kasparova as representative, also of the proposal of Comrade Rosmar, to bring products, equipment and people from abroad for the formation of a feeding center in one of the affected areas.

Take Russia as an Example

"To propose to the countries abroad to take Russia as example, to distribute the famine stricken districts among the separate countries, and to point out that relief must express itself in various ways, i. e. in giving articles as well as money.

"For this purpose the list of the famine stricken gubernias should be taken from the All-Russian Central Executive Committee to be sent abroad.

"To ask them to make the motto 'From Children to Children' widely known. Ask for the care of children but also of mothers.

"To point the necessity of ing benefits, plays, concerts, the starving. To ask Comr lina to make a complete list most necessary things for and to make same known, to rades abroad. To ask Comra president of the Depart Women workers in the Committee of the Commi the All-Russian Central Committee, to inform the I. W. of the work accomplished generally as the link between two bodies on the question of starving.

Program of Agitation

"In the matter of agitation:

1. To associate itself and to peal to the West, by the partment of the Secretariat
2. To make a special appeal the women of the East, structing Comrade Kaspar to write it.
3. Instruct Comrade Lilina write a special appeal to dren.
4. To make an appeal to workers to sacrifice one pay on behalf of the starvi
5. An appeal to the Rus women.
6. To publish in Pravda and the agency of the Rosta supplements with articles, ing information on the of the Secretariat in con tion with the relief of famine stricken.

Plan to Extent Work

"To send letters to all count asking for reports on work acco plished—whether they propose publish the minutes of the co rences and make reports. The ters to be addressed to the department and the Central mittee of the Party. To a Berlin Secretariat whether they established connections with countries and also about literat

"To organize a committee on question of the economic and position of women and to inv the same, apart from the of the Secretariat, the follo Falker-Smidt, Gershtein, Serle Frumkin.

"To ask the book purcha agency of the Comintern to literature on women's move To unite on this question with Young Communist Or To ask all members of the Co tern receiving literature, dealing the women's movement to over to the I. W. C. S.

"On the same question, to the Petrograd Department Comintern. To write to the tical Economic Department Comintern to make special on the women's movement."

A [illegible] Out of Russia

[illegible] studiously avoided, during [illegible] direct contact with the Third International. [illegible] members to affiliate with [illegible] Socialist Party statesmen [illegible] "entangling alliances." Under the guidance of its [illegible] leadership, the party isolated [illegible] revolutionary movement, but also from most of its members.

It appears now that at least on one occasion the party attempted to establish connections with the Communist International and the Russian comrades. Instead of employing, however, the regularly accredited international delegate, it chose to be represented by a person who, at best, could [illegible] whose credential was his wife— [illegible] party. [illegible] his return to America, Alexander Schwartz, [illegible] published his report (Voice Out of Russia, Dutton, $2.00) as other Russian "investigators" have done before him and were promptly rewarded with lecture engagements for Chambers of Commerce and kindred organizations.

According to this account, the author and his wife secured credentials from the national secretary of the Socialist Party to act as the party's representatives while in Russia and, since their arrival there would coincide with the opening of the Second Congress of the International, they were asked to act as unofficial delegates at the Congress. The S. P. secretary denies the issuance of delegate credentials to the Schwartz couple, admitting, however, that letters of introduction to Socialist parties abroad were given them.

To lend color to his "disillusionment" in Soviet Russia, Schwartz states that during the split in the S. P. he favored the Communists, while his wife remained loyal to the party, until later when she decided to leave it "because the S. P. doesn't understand Bolshevism."

The papers which they had in their possession were apparently sufficiently assuring to enable them to be accepted as delegates to the Second Congress and be accorded all the privileges enjoyed by foreign delegates who were the guests of the Russian comrades.

We are not given the reasons for their arrest and imprisonment, altho the ignorance of the Socialist movement displayed by delegates to an International Socialist Congress would cast suspicion even on avowed friends of Soviet Russia.

Karl Radek is referred to as "President of the Third International of the World," while Zinoviev is given the title of "International President of the Communist Party." While visiting a Soviet school, the author discovered that the children were required "to learn the Communist Manifesto of 1864." To show the Soviet Government's connection with the Third International, we are told that credentials to the Congress were issued by Chicherin and that Zinoviev opened the Congress in the name of the "Central Executive Committee of the Government of Russia."

The author introduces himself as a prominent American Socialist and former organizer of the Street Railway Union. His "Socialist prominence" was acquired by marriage, and the reviewer has been informed by President Mahon that he was never employed as an organizer of the Street Car Workers.

Bolshevik killing is still a favorite platform sport in America. Fame and fortune come easily to him who damns the Soviets and brands their sympathizers as enemies of organized government.

Schwartz has probably heard of the successful careers of other "disillusioned" and "penitent" Socialists. He is trying to achieve similar glory. It will not be long in coming to him.

Some Namby-Pamby Aloofness

By SOLON DE LEON

One of the first duties of a Commissar of Public Printing after the revolution should be to pass a rule against stringing together a lot of scattered articles, newspaper letters, book reviews, and similar literary snips, written at various times and without any unifying point of view, and calling it a book. And though he will probably call me cruel and sadistic for it, I shall cheerfully name, for condemnation under such a rule, Harold Stearns' "America and the Young Intellectual," published in 168 pages by George H. Doran Co., New York, for $1.50.

Not that Stearns hasn't glimpses of humor and sense. He finds the ruling class in America devoid of real moral idealism, which he defines as intellectual integrity and honesty before the facts of life. He criticizes Americans' terror of public opinion, and their docility before the ukases of an irresponsible government. He recognizes that the constitution is antiquated, and that we fear any fundamental change. He arraigns our timidity, and agrees with Freud that "Life becomes impoverished and loses interest when life itself, the highest stake of living, must not be risked."

The smothering of individuality in crowds, in which the average person spends about nineteen-twentieths of his life, comes in for merited reproach. Anglo-Saxon diplomacy is accurately summed up as acting the role of a shocked savior of civilization whenever it is up to some exceptionally underhanded deal. The myth of the rampant German devil is exposed as a device of British imperialism for raising dust when unpleasant things are going on in India, Egypt, or Ireland. The routine of modern industry is attacked as something which must be broken up if man himself is not to perish. Stearns' range is large, and he knows a thing or two.

More's the pity then that he did not learn a few things more. The methods he proposes for overcoming the evils he points out are hopelessly inadequate. He wants a moral order won from the jungle of experience; but he wants it won by people who are "disinterested, nonsectarian, non-partisan," people "without any axe to grind,"—in other words, by non-entities who are not interested in getting themselves or the world anywhere in particular. The young intellectuals for whom he assumes to speak should "occupy the valid position of mediating between extremes." Class-consciousness and the class struggle are to him something unclean. Our lack of class-consciousness, the lack above all others which is holding back progress in America, he calls "unquestionably our greatest strength." The class struggle is to him "as atrocious and dehumanizing", and as empty, as the religious wars of the middle ages. The young person who wants to help the labor movement he sends to the local manager of the national open shop campaign. And then, as the crowning type of his un-class-conscious disinterested intellectual, he cites Barbusse, Rolland, Shaw, Angell, Cole!

Such namby-pamby aloofness, coupled with such muddleheadedness, has no place in 1922.

The Irish at the Defense Committee Bazaar

The Irish Branch of the Workers Party announces that the National Defense Committee bazaar to be held March 22-25 at the Lyceum is going to be a success even tho all other branches of the party fall down.

It is going to be a success because the Irish branch has arranged to equip a booth which alone will be worth the price of admission. Here will be displayed the richest collection of Irish lace, Irish pottery, Irish paintings and Irish cookery ever seen in New York.

An Irish bagpipe player has been especially imported from the Old Country and a crowd of Irish lads and colleens will entertain the spectators with a continuous performance of Irish dances. All attendants at the booth will be in costume.

As a special added attraction for the last night of the bazaar there will be a shillelah duel between Jack McCarthy, champion of County Down and Bernhard Brannigan, ex-champion of County Kerry.

Many of the treasures of Irish art displayed will be for sale, all proceeds going to the National Defense.

Bill Dunne has promised to recite "The Foggy Dew" if he is given police protection and Tom O'Flaherty will deliver on all four nights the speech made by his younger brother to the unemployed who seized the council chambers in Dublin recently. It is the only speech on record wherein the proletarian banner is referred to as "the red Ensign."

[illegible] an international struggle.

The workers of Russia have been obliged to fight against the whole capitalist world in order to maintain their Soviet Government and to win the opportunity of rebuilding their system of production upon a Communist basis.

In this struggle they have had the support of the enlightened workers of every country.

The future struggles against capitalism will take on the same character.

In order to win the final victory in the struggle against world capitalism the workingclass of the world must be united under one leadership.

The leadership in the international struggle which inspires hopes in the hearts of the workers of the world and arouses fear in the capitalists of every country is the leadership of the Communist (Third) International.

The Workers Party endorses the principles and rules of the Communist International as adopted at its Third Congress and enters the struggle against American capitalism, the most powerful of the national groups of capitalists, under the inspiration and guidance of the Communist International.

It rallies to the call, "WORKERS OF THE WORLD UNITE!"

The Daily Worker is coming

By THOMAS J. O'FLAHERTY

The Provisional Government of the Irish Free State is having a difficult time trying to carry out the policy of Lloyd George which was expected to reduce the Irish people to happy and contented subjects of his Britannic Majesty and willing slaves ready to produce surplus values without protest for the Anglo-Irish financiers who are trying to get a stranglehold on the labor power of Ireland.

The outlook for peace is gloomy. Years of guerilla warfare have produced a set of men and women who do not fear danger, and all signs point to a continuation of the struggle for political independence.

As this can only be accomplished thru the overthrow of the ruling class, an alignment between the militant Republicans and the left wing of the labor movement is a likely possibility in the near future.

Immediately after the so-called treaty was ratified by Dail Eireann, Arthur Griffith proceeded to line up the Southern Unionists—capitalists and landlords—behind the Free State.

Collins sought to reach an agreement with Sir James Craig on the boundary question.

Griffith made progress. The Bank of Ireland, controlled by Unionists, loaned a large sum of money to the Provisional Government.

But the Ulster outpost of British Toryism is not yet in the mood for conciliation.

While Collins was negotiating with Craig, several Irish Republicans were awaiting execution in an Ulster prison. In reprisal Irish Republicans raided the homes of prominent Unionists in several parts of Ireland and are holding them as hostages.

Republicans passing thru Ulster have been arrested by Craig's Black and Tans. Civil war on a small scale is on in Ireland. It is liable to break out with intense fury in a few weeks, as the issues involved are greater than a Free State versus Republic.

The real issue in Ireland now as always is between the usurpers who stole the land and the peasantry from whom the land was stolen.

Added to this is the growing militancy of the Irish workers. Even the officialdom of Irish Labor talks of a Workers' Republic, but the rank and file not only talk, they act. They have arms in their hands and they know how to use them.

A railway crisis was the first issue of importance to confront the Provisional Government. A strike was voted, but the leaders agreed on request of the Provisional Government to postpone it.

In the Cork area, however, the workers seized the railways, and proclaimed their intention of organizing a Soviet. They have temporarily relinquished their purpose, but the sentiment for a Soviet form of govern[illegible] [illegible] flag from a window.

The Free State has nothing for hungry workers, many of [illegible] fought in the rebellion of 1916 [illegible] were hunted since then by the [illegible] of the British crown.

The British government has ha[illegible] the evacuation of the troops. Lloyd George's great diplomatic victory [illegible] a fizzle.

He intended to go to the people [illegible] a general election confident that [illegible] prestige he won by an Irish settlement would again sweep himself [illegible] his supporters into office. That [illegible] is now shattered and the general election is postponed.

A temporary coalition between militant Republicanism and labor would put the Free State out of commission, but an Irish revolution that would overthrow the power of the Ulster reactionaries and their capitalistic allies in the South can only succeed when the British workers throw down the gauntlet of revolt to the governing power of Great Britain and in co-operation with their comrades across the Irish Sea establish the Workers' Republic on the ruins of the Pirate Empire. Until that day arrives peace will be a stranger in Ireland.

From the Depths of Brave, Frozen Russia Comes This Most Terrible of All Cries

WE STARVE!

WILL YOU ANSWER?

The next two months will be the most crucial. Each day 50,000 are dying of starvation. Reports coming from Russia paint pitiful pictures. Here—the dying are eating their dead, there—mothers are drowning their children to silence their heart-rending cries for bread. The Russian steppes are literally covered with skeletons, the wasted bodies the prey of wolves. How many more shall die before YOU act?

WILL YOU SIGN THE ROLL CALL?

Immense cargoes of food MUST be shipped AT ONCE to save the starving. If the powers of the world would grant Soviet Russia credit and re-establish trade with her, she could help herself in this awful crisis. Until credit is extended YOU MUST HELP. And if you have helped before then you must help again, and still again! Those who help now will have aided Soviet Russia in her DIREST NEED.

SIGN THE ROLL CALL! GIVE!

The food your money will buy will carry with it the ROLL CALL BOOK in which YOUR name MUST appear. Your signature in this book will mark a permanent record of your true friendship for Soviet Russia. Deposited in the archives of Soviet Russia, the Roll Call Book will constitute a document treasured by International Labor and its Sympathizers.

Collections

Collections made to date total $675,000.00. Money collections from workers and others in sympathy with Soviet Russia, $400,000.00. Collections in food, clothes, medicines, tools, estimated at $275,000.00.

"Kuzbas"—The Awaited Opportunity

WANTED!

American Engineers and Workers for Soviet Russia in the Kuznets Coal and Iron Basin by the Autonomous Industrial Colony—"Kuzbas."

Room 303, 110 West 40th Street, New York City, N. Y.

The above is the modest advertisement that a number of the labor and revolutionary organs are carrying in their columns today.

Behind the advertisement is the story of a plan that intrigues the imagination of every worker whose mind has not been altogether dulled by the machine process.

To the worker-dreamers of the whole world has been given an opportunity to prove their theories and to make their dreams come true, without any conditions attached except to be given the first chance to purchase the product the Soviet Government of Russia has placed at the disposal of the world's engineers, miners and mechanics the entire Kuznets Basin, a little empire so rich in coal, iron, other minerals and timber that only labor is needed to make it one of the great productive regions of the earth.

To the workers of all lands has been entrusted the task of developing this enormously rich district, of creating an industrial civilization minus an idle class. If there is left in the American workers any of the pioneer spirit that has felled the forests and harnessed the rivers of this country they will answer the call to participate in a great and glorious experiment where theories must stand or fall by the test of actuality.

To the workers in Kuznets Basin will go the full product of their toil; they will be the rulers, the captains of industry; no hereditary monarchs, financial or political, will take toll from their labor.

The hardships to be encountered are no greater than those met in America when the golden west was still golden—and young. They are no greater than the ordinary worker must face on the ordinary construction job. Of this great fertile basin the workers can make what they will with no exploiting corporation to say them nay. It thrills one to think of it—this thing we have talked for and fought for so long.

Here it is. What will the workers do with it? Here is the romance that industrial autocracy has deprived them of, a world to be shaped as the wish, a world for workers. Is it not possible that from this experiment alone the workers of the world can learn what is good and bad in their many plans for a new society?

[illegible] Here is the solution of the unemployment problem for some thousands of American workers and if they want the opportunity—"Kuzbas"—we have all faith that they will beg, borrow or steal the necessary food, clothing, and tools required for entrance to the colony.

Equality of Opportunity

Our Constitution guarantees equality of opportunity and the right to the pursuit of happiness. In effect this means equality for the workers to starve and be homeless and to keep on pursuing happiness in a never-ending chase. For the capitalists it means an opportunity to exploit and oppress the workers.

The defenders of our Constitution are working feverishly to foist this doctrine of "equality of opportunity" on other nations. George Harvey, our Ambassador to Great Britain, and representative of Harding on the Supreme Council, has been given instructions to watch carefully the coming conference on the Near East of the Allied Premiers at Paris. America is bent upon securing equality of opportunity for its capitalists in the exploitation of Mesopotamia, Persia, the Balkans, and the Turkish Empire.

International politics are to-day the politics of oil and steel. In the Near East there are rich oil fields, and our capitalists know how to smell oil fields. Our former brothers-in-arms, England and France, are now pursuing a policy of widespread discrimination against America—that is, our oil trust. Thru the American Chamber of Commerce for the Levant and our sundry "philanthropic," "missionary" and "educational" institutions in the Near East our oil barons are raising a terrific howl for "equality of opportunity."

Our former friends are determined to exclude America from participating in the development of these "backward" countries. The reason for this is obvious. The United States is best equipped for the exploitation of these territories. With any semblance of a "fair" deal the opportunities for the expansion of American interests are practically unlimited. The resources of the Turkish Empire and the Balkan States are practically untouched. Mines are to be developed and railroads are to be built. Millions of workers are to be exploited ruthlessly. This is a gold mine for profits and our capitalists won't let it slip away from them without a struggle. And we are ready to bet dollars against doughnuts that the United States Government will make it a struggle worth while by standing firmly for the extension of the glorious doctrine enunciated by the fathers of our Constitution and country.

The whole controversy is replete with serious dangers for the American workers. In the Near East dispute lie the germs of future deadly wars. America may line up with France against Britain. And Britain may ally itself with France against the United States. But whatever form the conflict may take one fact is evident. It is plain that the doctrine of equality of opportunity, in the hands of the capitalists, whether it be applied at home or abroad, can mean one thing and one thing only for the workers—equality of opportunity to get hell on earth in order to safeguard the interests of their capitalist exploiters.

The unity conference of the officials of the miner's and railwaymen's unions was quite a success for everyone except the miners and the railwaymen.

The conference fixed things so that no hasty strike action would embarrass the bosses. By the time a strike could be called under the rules the next war will be over and Ireland free.

earth" has borne its first fruit. Universal "peace" has begun its

The Washington Conference to force "peace and goodwill on march with huge strides in heavy boots. And the workers, of course, are the privileged to get the first kicks from the pace-setting capitalist peacemakers. As a result of the agreement to scrap some naval junk thousands of workers have been thrown out of their jobs in the navy yards. Many more thousands of workers await the same fate.

This is the peace the capitalists can bring to the world. Unemployment and starvation are the fruits of peace that the exploiters can bring to the workers. Much noise has been made about the glorious future in store for world as a result of the secretly arrived at treaties of Washington. The lesson of Washington is a painfully valuable one for the workers. It shows clearly that the capitalist class can never bring peace to the workers. It proves beyond a doubt that all their peace manoeuvres are only frantic efforts to save themselves from the chaos that now threatens to overwhelm them. We have here, in brutal form, the hollow mockery and fraud of their plans.

Capitalist peace means starvation and wars for the workers. Capitalist prosperity means long hours of degrading toil. And capitalist promises are only prospects for the increased misery of the workers.

According to the New York World the latest argument against the bonus is that "the demand for it comes from foreign born or foreign descended soldiers."

Let the four and some odd million "foreign born and foreign descended" soldiers take notice that for this country they can risk their bones but they get no bonus.

Workers Party Calls on All Labor for Big United Front

succession of defeats, a conference called by representatives of sixteen great Labor organizations cannot leave its meeting place with a claim to the rudiments of decency, unless it boldly does all in its power to unite Labor in a single front.

In the face of the painfully obvious union of all Chambers of Commerce, Employers' Associations, business men's committees for "enforcing wage awards"—all this veritable Ku Klux Klan of Capitalism—we hold that it would be nothing short of criminal betrayal of the working class to suggest that the condition can be met by an instrument less than a complete mobilization of all Labor industrially and politically.

HE WHO WOULD AT SUCH A TIME CAUSE A DIVISION OF THE RANKS OF LABOR IN THE FIGHT FOR THESE ELEMENTARY POINTS ABOUT WHICH NONE LOYAL TO LABOR CAN DIFFER, WOULD BE GUILTY OF TREASON TO THE WORKERS.

These reasons impel us to address a conference initiated in the name of Labor.

Party Is Revolutionary

The WORKERS' PARTY OF AMERICA is a revolutionary party of the working class.

We do not believe that the social and political maladjustments can be remedied by mere reforms in the manner of exploiting Labor, but only by the complete abolition of the system of Labor exploitation.

We believe that this can only be done with revolutionary struggle, thru the establishment of the Workers' Republic.

In regard to this goal and this method, we have no compromises to offer and no illusions of any willingness of those who initiated this Conference to compromise in our direction.

But there are necessary, to the continued life of millions of workers, certain simple steps about which there can be no sincere disagreement among partisans of the toiling masses.

Nor can any sincere member of the ranks of Labor willingly lessen the number of those fighting together for these needs.

Program for United Front.

We suggest by way of illustration:

Nation-wide action to break the Open Shop Drive.

A nationally organized counter-offensive to break the wage-cutting campaign.

To compel the protection of the unemployed on the basis of the right to labor, and the union standard of compensation out of the National military and naval budgets.

To prevent the enactment or enforcement of "industrial court laws" in any part of the country.

To defend and secure the right of Labor to organize, to strike and to picket.

Large national credit to working farmers, and absolute prevention of foreclosures upon their farms.

Release of political prisoners including all workers imprisoned as a result of any phase of the labor struggle.

To stop the deporting of workers because of their views of the Labor struggle or activity in it.

Forming the Labor Line.

Such points furnish a common ground upon which every Labor Union and every political party of the workers can fight together if not prevented from doing so by treacherous misleading.

Beyond such immediate measures each Union or party would assume no responsibility for the programs or policies of the others. Each would retain its individual program and the right to criticize the policies, principles and tactics of the others.

Upon what line must such a fighting front be formed? Upon the line which divides the toiling masses from those who exploit them.

Labor's political and industrial co-operation with employers, with chambers of commerce, with corporations, or with the petty professional hangers-on and dependents of these elements, will not conduce to the freeing of Labor.

There is nothing in common between such elements and the workers upon whose labor they thrive.

Who are the "progressives" that you speak of? Who can be relied upon to fight to PROGRESS out of this slave-pen of misery and decay? Only those who SUFFER by the misery and decay—the toilers themselves, of the city and farm.

No other class is directly interested in banishing the misery and decay. Those who would form a "front of Labor" together with sections of the privileged classes, are making sure that no privileges will be abolished.

Unite City and Farm Workers.

Only with the toilers of the farm—with the farm laborer and the rent-ridden, mortgage-ridden small farmer—can the working class strike hands.

The past few years prove beyond dispute of any man that the working masses of the farms and those of the cities depend upon each other.

More and more the small farmers—the "dirt farmers"—are being driven to ruin.

Today the plains and valleys of this country are dotted with a multitude of tragedies, of farm families, once sturdy and independent, now broken and desperate serfs, toiling as hopelessly as field animals for the enrichment of farm-mortgage holders and grain speculators.

Co-operation with wealthy landlords and the mortgage-holding capitalists, grain traders and the multitude of petty parasites that serve them in politics, will not free the poor farmer.

He can only find refuge in an alliance with the great mass of wage Labor. With him the line of struggle can be formed.

It Is The Class Struggle

No shapeless mixture of a few labor leaders with comfortable, propertied "liberals" can solve the problem of the comfortless millions. To grow dynamic power, the Labor mass must organize within its boundaries.

To build upon any other outline is to build a shapeless mass without organic qualities and incapable of action or of growth. A social power can be mobilized only by a great common economic need.

The course of History itself has marked sharp and clear the line which must delineate the larger instrument that will free the toiling masses. That line is drawn between the toiling masses and their exploiters. It is the line of the class struggle.

It is the natural line of organic structure. Divisions within the workers' ranks can be wiped out by boldly clearing the outlines of a class made organic by common need.

He who obscures this line of structure, confuses, paralyzes and defeats the workers. It is to accomplish this defeat that every chamber of commerce and their harlot newspapers scream "No!" whenever anyone speaks of the workers as a "class".

Labor leaders such as you have a heavy guilt in this matter. They have led the workers to hope for benefit thru political instruments made up of themselves with their enemies. The result is the chaos of disaster which we all see, and of which the labor leaders who called this conference complain.

What will you do?

Now, as spokesmen of Labor, you have called a conference avowing the purpose of finding a way out of the disaster. Will you again obscure the line of fundamental division between Labor and its exploiters? Will you again deny the class struggle? Will you issue another puny call for Labor to "punish its enemies and reward its friends (among the agents of privilege)?"

Or will you advocate that Labor form a united political and industrial front and support none but its own representatives, responsible to Labor alone?

The labor unions most prominently represented here, have need enough of an economic front. We remember incidents aplenty, in the past two years, of railroad strikes deliberately broken by leaders; union officials calling thru the capitalist press for strike-breakers and colluding openly with police and grand-juries to punish striking members of their own unions with those same "oppressive laws" of which you complain.

Betrayed to Slave Law.

If politeness to some of the participants of this conference will permit it, we recall that Alexander Howat was deserted in jail and the mine workers of Kansas betrayed to the Kansas "industrial court law"—the most loathesome of all the "oppressive laws" which you say you come to remedy. This partly accounts for the low degree of expectation that we have, of results from this conference.

This Conference cannot form a united front for the working class. Only the organized mass of labor itself can do that.

Not a "few" leaders slipping into a room privately "to fix things up," but only a general Labor Congress of delegates elected for the specific purpose by the workers, can create a front that will endure and fight.

But if this Conference has a character in keeping with the fact that it was called in the name of two and a half million railroad workers, then it could bring about such a Labor Conference by advocating it.

The "fundamental economic principle" that can solve the problems of the misery of the masses, can easily be found by eyes that have the courage to see in the glaring light of the present crisis.

In fact, they are too easy to see. Labor leaders and "liberals" who see them usually turn to flee in terror.

What Courage Have They?

Your choice is narrow. If you have the courage you call upon the workers as a class to close their ranks and fight for themselves.

If you have not the courage, then turn [illegible] back to the cowardly device of [illegible] and betraying the workers—recommending that they trust themselves to be saved by those that are destroying them.

Tell them again to trust themselves to the Landises, the Wilsons, the Palmers, the Hardings and William J. Burnses, whose collective name is Elbert H. Gary. The capitalist press will praise you for it.

The capitalist rulers of all countries, equally guilty in the world orgy of killing, have destroyed or disjointed the instruments of production to the extent that six million workers in this country are thrown out of industry, workless, hopeless and ignored. What can you do for them in this "conference of progressives?"

"God knows?" . . .

Nothing can be done for the unemployed by this conference, because this conference could not dare to do the necessary things. The necessary measures for the unemployed poor, would be dangerous to the unemployed rich. We do not believe that you would advocate them. During 1919, billions of dollars were poured out of the United States Treasury without hesitation, supporting many millions enrolled in the army or engaged in producing materials for war.

Would you dare to demand that such amount as were spent (with your consent) for killing men in 1918 be spent in preserving the lives and welfare of workless Americans in 1922? Or are there more taxpayers than starving workers in your conference?

Demand Aid for Jobless.

Would you dare demand that aid be given the unemployed workers in the full measure of Union-standard wages? Would you call for that aid from the Army and Navy appropriations, to be administered thru the Unions themselves?

Or, if fearful of what the workers would do with such power, do you prefer putting such power into the hands of the political agencies that are now reducing Labor to the lowest degree possible?

Will you demand that public works be begun at union wages, under the management of the Unions, at the expense of the national treasury, with the day of labor shortened to make room for all unemployed? Or do you tremble at such a "destructive" manner of helping hungry workers?

Nothing is clearer than that such practices would be destructive to the interests of the wealthy classes. None is readier than we to admit that the interests of the comfortable are irreconcilable with the interests of the working class.

A "fundamental economic principle" which your conference cannot escape is, that you cannot help the workers without injuring the comfortable classes. The "social and political maladjustments" which you express a desire to remedy, have a purpose. They cannot seriously be touched without undermining the system of wage labor exploitation in such a dangerous manner as may lead to its overthrow.

The Lesson of West Virginia.

Of the ultimate method of the abolition of the system of labor exploitation, we say nothing here. We say nothing here as to what the ultimate form of this struggle is, but no man experienced in strikes, even if he casts no glance at West Virginia, can fail to know to what lengths it inevitably goes. To the lengths short of which the struggle cannot be con gentlemen and lady pr cannot progress. They sh be asked to start.

Is it not clear that in struggle no element of the classes can be relied up especially no political pa are instruments of the bu or in any way acceptable portion of that class?

Labor Offensive Halts Anti-Strike Bill

Royalty Stops Traffic, Jobless Moved on

Newport, Kentucky! How Long?

In Newport, Kentucky, exists a situation that causes one to wonder how long the workers of this nation will remain passive victims of oppressive acts on the part of elected officials, corporation heads and corporation gunmen, military forces and hired murderers, so brutal, bloody and horrible that the mere recital of the facts sounds like a composite story of the inquisition and the worst tyrannies of the czar's regime.

From the war-swept sections of Eastern Europe come no more terrifying tales of unchecked murder and rapine than from this little steel town in the heart of America where for weeks the gunmen of the steel trust and the state troops have participated in an orgy of robbery, rape, bloodshed and torture.

Tanks with mounted machine-guns, cavalry and infantry brought in at the behest of the steel trust have taken possession of the streets; men and women are run into their homes at the point of the bayonet; women carrying unborn children have been assaulted; soldiers have demanded admittance to homes where there were young women and insisted on spending the night; schools have been closed by the commander of the military forces; the owners of shops and stores have been beaten and ejected from their places of business; their property has been taken and used by the troops and gunmen without compensation; the houses of the residents have been riddled by rifle and machine-gun fire and men, women and children forced to spend the night in cellars to escape the deadly volleys.

Dozens of affidavits certify to the horrible treatment of wounded men; to their incarnation without medical attention in filthy holes and corners of the company's mill where they had to sleep in their own blood and excrement.

One old man of 65 years was shot and beaten; one trooper took him by the hair and another by the feet; they swung him like a sack of flour and threw him onto a sheet iron floor. Then they kicked him for good measure.

A man, his wife and children, fleeing from their bullet-riddled home, had a searchlight played upon them and a rain of bullets directed at them as they ran.

Denhart, the officer in command, has beaten up numbers of arrested and wounded men with his blackjack and according to affidavits is a degenerate brute of the Semenoff type. His word is the only law in Newport.

The above acts have all been committed with the knowledge and consent of the Governor of Kentucky.

Passive resistance seems only to increase the fury of the brutes whom capitalism relies on these days. The very helplessness of their victims seems to increase their enjoyment of their foul task.

Ours may be the only voice in America suggesting a remedy but if it was our last word we would say that the wage-workers of America and their wives and children will never be safe from animal ferocity of capitalism's thugs until they make it known in no uncertain way that the old maxim of a life for a life has not been forgotten. Waste no time upon the mere tools of the capitalist class. The life of the wife of a worker is just as sacred as the life of the wife of Elbert H. Gary and more valuable; a worker who believes that the head of the steel trust should sleep peacably in his luxurious bed while the wives and children of wage-earners are chased into the night by the bullets of his gunmen is a spineless traitor who deserves what he gets.

The workers must organize for power and keep a careful record of each and every oppressive act of capitalism in America. We need no longer go abroad for examples to illustrate what tyranny means. The list of murdered, beaten tortured and ravished workers is long. Let's try and see that it grows no longer.

An Incident in the Struggle

Editors of labor papers are often accused of magnifying facts and exaggerating the brutality and cold-blooded nature of the tactics employed to whip striking workers into submission.

These accusations generally come from individuals who seem to have an abiding faith in the tender nature of capitalism's executives and who apparently judge them by the demeanor they assume in their clubs and churches.

The class-struggle is war, and the capitalist class as a whole recognizes the fact and acts accordingly. It is only the individuals without the courage to draw the conclusions from the evidence at hand who insist that brutality in strikes is the result of the acts of individuals alone. It is the act of a class and the class must be held responsible.

In this connection we think it might be interesting to our readers to have some of the inside history of the recent terroristic orgy of the steel trust during the strike of the steel workers in Newport, Kentucky.

The story is contained in a letter from one of the active participants in the struggle to The Worker and is here given as nearly as possible in his own words.

Labor Forces Block Bill at Capital City

Aroused to action by the threat of legislation, notably the Duell-Miller industrial court and anti-strike bill, New York labor presented a solid front at Albany on Wednesday, March 1. Almost every labor body in the state was represented, and the statement by President Gompers, who headed the delegation, that "if the bill became law, organized labor in New York state would not obey it," was productive of wild cheering.

"Do you think for one minute, that the threat of a jail sentence, as this bill contains, would prevent the workers of this state from trying to improve their working conditions? There have been other men and other women who have dared to speak and act when this kind of legislation has been enacted, and there are men and women in this state who would do the same thing.

"The people of this state would have just about as much contempt [illegible] for a law now upon the [illegible] statue books. I say to you, that legislation of this kind would confine the working people of this state in a legislative straitjacket," said President Gompers.

The sponsors of the measure now are convinced that in its present form it canot be passed and now propose to amend it to cover only employees of public utilities under the supervision of the Public Service Commission. Owing to the determined attitude of Labor, however, it is generally believed that even in its amended form it will fail of passage.

Labor representatives state that the Duell-Miller bill and other similar measures will be closely watched and that the labor forces will be immediately mobilized for another march on Albany at the first sign of an attempt to stampede the legislature for the anti-labor interests.

More than 750 labor men were present at the hearing.

EVICTED FOR STRIKING

The terrible weapon against the workers which the system of company-owned homes in mining camps puts in the hands of the coal operators is shown once again by the latest news from the Pennsylvania district.

A new wage scale running from $3.90 to $5 a day was posted in the mines, and the miners were told that unless they immediately went to work at that scale they would be evicted from their homes.

Last week, at Lincoln Hill mine, District 5, 16 families were thrown out of their houses in one day. There is no other place to which the miners can take their families, and the suffering caused by the ruthless action of the coal-operators is heightened by the poverty prevailing in the district.

The miners and their families are in rags, and the children are going barefoot. The mad topsy-turviness of the whole present system of production is strikingly illustrated by one grimly ridiculous feature of the situation in Pennsylvania: The Operators refuse to sell the striking miners coal, so that they and their families are freezing in the midst of the coal which they themselves have mined.

"Heads I win, tails you lose" describes the "arbitration" award of Judge Manton insofar as the publishers are concerned. The pressmen are once more convinced of the eternal sanctity of contracts.

Must Feed 7 Millions More in Red Russia

EDITOR'S NOTE:—Two notable events in the fight the famine campaign took place in this city Saturday and Sunday nights. On Saturday night there was the big costume ball and bazaar at the 71st Regiment Armory. Sunday night, Capt. Paxton Hibben and others spoke at the great demonstration at the Lexington Opera House. The speech of Capt. Hibben, in full, was as follows:

By CAPT. PAXTON HIBBEN

Speaking at the Mass Meeting, at the Lexington Opera House, Sunday night, March 26, 1922.

"I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your thunderous welcome of me to the ranks of the great army of the unemployed!

"I want to make it clear to this meeting that I am no longer in any way connected with the Near East Relief, for which organization I have been handling publicity for the past two years.

"I say this for the sake of the Near East Relief, to which organization it has been the source of considerable embarrassment that I should have spoken as frankly as I have, recently, about Mr. Herbert Hoover.

"For the Near East Relief ha applied to Mr. Hoover for a portion of the $20,000,000 appropriated by Congress for relief in Russia, since the Near East Relief operates in a territory which was formerly a part of the old Rusian Empire, namely the Socialist Soviet Republics of Georgia and Armenia.

Many Starve in Armenia

"And I think that the Near East Relief is in fact entitled to have a share in that appropriation, for it is undeniable that many thousands of children are starving today in Armenia quite as much as millions of children are starving in the Volga valley.

"And I, for one, have never been able to see any distinction between one hungry child and another hungry child—which is why, in my own time, I have been speaking ever since my return from Russia for the Friends of Soviet Russia and other organizations which are trying to

UNION OF UNEMPLOYED

Thirty Years' Gains Lost by the Pressmen

Another union, Local 25 of the Newspaper Web Pressmen, has discovered to its sorrow that arbitration is only good for the boss.

By the decision of Judge Manton, sole arbiter, to which they were pledged in advance by their International President, George D. Barry, late of the Army Intelligence Department, the pressmen of New York City have been deprived of working conditions they have had so long that, according to David Simons, president of Local 25, no one remembers when they were obtained, and of wages amounting to $6,500,000 per year. Under the Manton award this sum remains in the pockets of the publishers.

The foremen no longer need to be members of the union, the overtime rate is reduced, the union has nothing to say as to the number of men to man the presses, and the night men have had their hours increased from six to eight.

The pressmen of New York City have lost the gains of thirty years. The handing down of the decision brought on a strike of a few hours' duration which was ended by the orders of President Barry. The publishers are jubilant over the results of arbitration and much gratitude towards President Barry is expressed.

It is said that a movement is on foot among the publishers to tender President Barry a substantial testimonial in recognition of his services in their behalf.

With Princess Mary safely married and the Taylor murder mystery about to be solved the unemployed may now be able to devote a little attention to themselves.

Allow Wales, Not Jobless, at City Hall

"The police of New York are very much worried about the traffic of the city, especially when the workers are concerned. We intended to hold a demonstration of the unemployed at City Hall, in order that the men in power in the City Hall might realize that there IS an unemployment situation in New York.

"But City Hall Square is not for the use of the workers. It is reserved for such snobs as the Prince of Wales and for very important personages. When they come to town and pay their respects to the mayor, the traffic is not obstructed for a few hours, but sometimes for half a day.

Workers Used to Such Treatment

"There is nothing new in such treatment. The workers realize that the reason for the existence of the police is to crush the power of the workers. So it was to be expected that the jobless would not be allowed to meet at City Hall.

"Well, here we are, and we are going on with the meeting."

This was the beginning of a meeting, on Saturday, February 25, curtailed in numbers owing to the behavior of the police, yet full of attention to the four speakers who denounced the bosses and the authorities for refusing to do anything for the unemployed.

"The government's interest in the jobless is a fraud and a lie. If they were really interested, if the bosses really cared, they would not hesitate to open up trade relations with that country which is the only one that presents a market for American industry—Soviet Russia.

Open Trade with Russia

"There is a tremendous market over there, but the bosses won't take advantage of it, because they know that it will only strengthen the Soviet Government and they are determined to destroy the Government of the Workers that has been established by the workers of Russia. They tried for four years, but did not succeed in undermining it. They sent all kinds of ammunition, guns and troops against the Soviet Government, but they couldn't overthrow it.

"To carry on such practices in America is called treason. But to do it against a government of the workers is patriotic.

"American workers need work. The Russian workers need machinery of all kinds. They want mining, industrial and farming machinery. That American workers may obtain work and that the Russian workers may procure what they need, let the American workers demand that the Government of the United States open up trade relations with Soviet Russia. Let them organize to enforce that demand and it will be enforced."

Applause greeted these remarks.

Police Attend Brooklyn Meeting

On Sunday, February 26, the Unemployment Council held a meeting at the Finnish Workers' Hall, which the police tried to overawe by their numbers. In the hall there were four policemen, outside in front of the hall were stationed six officers, while at either corner of the street there were seven men.

"The purpose of bringing so many police to our meetings is clear," said

Look for Time and Place in Next Issue!

[illegible] Offers Marine Industry Plan

EDITOR'S NOTE. — THE WORKER herewith gives space to a plan of action for the marine industry as proposed by a rank-and-file member of the Marine Workers Unity Committee:

The marine industry differs so radically from the average industry that the tactics necessary to bring about industrial organization require particular consideration.

In the first place, the life of the industry itself is uncertain. There is no other industry where the employers can with such ease and prospect of added profit, bodily transfer the industry out of the country. An increasing percentage of freight to and from American ports is being carried in foreign ships, and the threat of transferring the American ships to foreign flags is held continually over the heads of the American marine workers.

From the end of the war till about the middle of 1920, there were about 1100 Shipping Board ships and about 700—800 privately owned under the American flag: there was a cargo for anything that would float; young men who had never seen salt water were urged to go to sea and see the world, licenses to officers and engineers were being granted galore, and unions were in fashion.

Conditions are different now. The Shipping Board has recently announced that it will not attempt to maintain in commission more than 350 of its fleet of 1400. The new private Companies have mostly disappeared, and the probability is that the "temporary" depression will settle into a permanent condition, with the Shipping Board nucleus, and the old-established prewar companies (such as the International Mercantile Marine, Luckenbach, Grace, United American, and Agur Lines, the new fleet of the U. S. Steel); the coastwise freight and passenger ships; and the very large fleet of oil tankers of the Standard Oil and its subsidiaries, comprising the American Merchant Marine. This leaves about two-thirds of the crews of 1919 without employment.

Of course, one immediate effect of the depression is to clear from the field the majority of the men who were not really seafarers and who had no intention of sticking to the industry through any extended period of adverse conditions. Of these, some will return to their places in the bourgeois classes, and others will take part in the fight in the industries were they more naturally belong.

For the next few years then, the following distribution of the workers in the marine industry seems likely:

I. Unemployed: About ⅔.

Of these, a small number of unlicensed men may obtain employment on foreign ships (though most nations now have a preferential law for citizens) and thus lose connection with the Labor Movement in America.

II. Employed Afloat: About ⅓.

Dividing these again according to conditions of work.

a) On Oceangoing Passenger and Freight Vessels. Abt. 15%; b) On Coastwise Vessels. Abt. 15%; c) On Oil Tankers (mostly coastwise) Abt. 70%.

Of these only the men on the coastwise vessels have much chance of engaging in union activity as they make short trips and have a few days stay in port each time, while the oceangoing men, though they may have a stay of a week or two, are away for long periods; and the tankers seldom stay in port more than 24 hours and generally dock in out-of-the-way places—miles away from the city, thus practically binding the men to the ship and making them totally ineffective for any work in the unions.

III. Employed Ashore:

About three thousand sailors are employed by the Shipping Board for the maintenance of the laid-up ships. The great majority of these men are licensed mates who are only too glad to get something to tide them over the "temporary depression." How long these jobs will last is, of course uncertain, depending upon the future disposition of the laid-up ships.

Of course the actual individuals change from one category to another as occasion offers, their possibility of effectiveness in union activity changing accordingly. But the proportions will remain fairly constant.

The Labor Unions

at present in the field (till the recent lockout about 90% organized) are

For the Officers:—

- The Neptune Ass'n. (Masters and Mates).
- The Masters', Mates', and Pilots' Ass'n.
- The Marine Engineers' Beneficial Ass'n.
- The United Radio Telegraphers' Ass'n.

For the Men:—

The International Seamen's Union comprising —

- The International Sailors Union
- Marine Oilers', Watertenders' and Firemen's Union
- Marine Cook's and Stewards' Union

With the exception of the Neptune Association and the U. R. T. A., all these are affiliated with the A. F. of L. All are national in scope.

The Neptune Association comprising the majority of the Masters and Mates refuses to think of itself as a labor union and prefers to style itself "an association of professional men." It has never had a real combat. Its hallmark is a childish sense of aristocracy, and extreme unwillingness to compromise the interests of the employers. The A. F. of L. is too radical for the Neptune.

The majority of the membership of the Masters', Mates' and Pilots' Association are tugboat and harbor men, and by generally assigning premier importance to harbor rather then to seagoing affairs, have driven most of their seagoing membership into the Neptune Ass'n. The feud between these two organizations is of long standing.

The Marine Engineers' Beneficial Association is, on the whole, the backbone of Seafaring Labor. Composed of skilled mechanics who could earn their living ashore as well as at sea, it has always been the strongest and most courageous of the organization. Its defects are those common to the majority of A. F. of L. unions to-day.

The United Radio Telegraphers' Association is a young organization of relatively minor importance, as few ships carry more than one radio-operator. A majority of the membership are kids, under no compulsion to earn their living, mainly interested in "seeing the world" and having no intention of remaining in the profession. Despite an almost incredible childishness, the organization generally works together with the M. E. B. A. and has a very fair strike record.

The Sailors', Firemen's and Cook's Unions compose a single organization and act as one body when facing the employers, and on all other matters of common policy. The wages and working conditions of the Sailors and Firemen constitute the barometer for the industry. There is a fair amount of undirected radical feeling, and the members have shown great courage and loyalty to their class. A self-perpetuating leadership sings the songs of past decades.

The I. W. W. has a foothold among the men, the exact strength of which it is hard to determine. They are strongest among the Firemen, particularly the Spanish and Italians, most of them are "two-card" men anyway.

Inasmuch as all these unions are co-extensive with the industry, no members of the unions being employed anywhere save in the industry and no branch of the industry being entirely unorganized, it would seem that Industrial Organization might be achieved most easily by a simple amalgamation into a Seafarers' Organization. This step would seem to be dictated by the logic of the present crisis.

As a result of the lockout last Spring, wages were cut all round 15 per cent (the officers getting gentlemen's agreements"* till January), and the 12-hour day re-instituted for the men. In October the men's wages were again cut about 22 per cent by nearly all the private owners.

Since the first of the year another drastic cut has been made and seamen work for wages in many instances lower than those paid farm hands and sheep-herders whose work is devoid of the danger and uncertainty of the sea-faring trades. Ordinary seamen on many ships now get as low as $35.00 per month.

There is at present a great deal of jealousy between the Neptune Association and the M. E. B. A. due to the small differential between the wages of the Master and the Chief Engineer, the Neptune claiming that it should be greatly increased, that the Master should still have the almost unlimited power, opportunities for graft and preponderant wages that went out with the sailing ship days; the M. E. B. A. with an eye to the realities of the situation, claiming that the differential should be eliminated, or if anything reversed, the Chief Engineer being the real person responsible for the vessel and the Master merely the navigator. The rank and file, the large majority being only Mates and Assistant Engineers, are not particularly interested in this disagreement, but it is industriously fostered by the officials of each side, particularly of the Neptune, and has thus become an important obstacle to amalgamation.

Amalgamation would furthermore require the overcoming of the equally strong opposition of the Neptune to the idea of uniting with the "laborers" and "radicals" of the A. F. of L., and worst of all, the allround opposition to uniting officers with men.

All this cannot be achieved overnight, but will require a prolonged campaign of agitation and education —and possibly starvation.

It is worthwile to restate here the facts regarding the limitation in activity imposed by the various categories of work.

The Unemployed, so long as they do not comprise an unchanging group who would be bound in time to lose their character as seafarers and become mere "unemployed," so long as they retain their membership in the unions constitute a body within the unions free from these limitations.

The men on the coastwise vessels coming in frequently for a few days at a time, have a fair possibility for work while those on the ocean going vessels have very little, and those on the tankers are almost entirely barred out.

As for the laid-up ships, most of the "bonapards" are too far from the towns, but in the other cases, the men employed there can engage pretty fully in union activity.

It is understood, of course, that while these categories remain pretty constant, there is a fairly steady transfer of the individuals composing them from one group to another.

It is clear, therefore, that the only men who can have any direct effectiveness in the early stages of the agitation are those who are ashore or running coastwise. And among these categories there are not at present a sufficient number, active and able enough to organize for agitation at the union meetings. At present the minority who may be in favor of amalgamation are unorganized and unknown to each other. What must be done therefore is to organize a group of men from all the categories of work, who have the ability and the will to carry on a continual agitation wherever they may be, afloat or ashore, on the job or "on the beach." Each member of this group must consider it his task (besides the general propaganda for the purpose of winning over individuals, which never ceases), to organize as soon as he enters an "effective category" a new group among this category with a view to direct agitation at the union meetings.

As the slower process within the "ineffective categories" of winning individuals begins to show results, the task of organizing the effective groups becomes continually easier due to the influx of individuals who have already been convinced, and their power at the union meetings grows continually stronger. And as the question of amalgamation becomes more and more prominent, even the "ineffectives" at their occasional attendance will serve to swell the demand for a single Seafarer's Organization.

It is clear then that many an excellent workers will be limited for as long as he holds his job, to work on a single ship with a fairly stable crew, many of which, due to the conditions of life on a ship, he will not be able to reach, and many others of which are hopeless from the start. And even those whom he does convince will have to remain ineffective as long as they remain in their job. All of which is unfortunate, but apparently unavoidable. It is not a rapid process.

Amalgamation in itself will not bring about Industrial Organization. A deeper change is needed. Even though amalgamated, the unit of the organization would still be the craft, and the pointless territorial local. In order to organize for taking over an industry, the unit must be the plant. In the very nature of things this principle cannot be applied to the marine industry without modification. The unit corresponding to the plant is not the ship. From the viewpoint of operation, the individual ship is not an industrial unit. The unit is more properly the fleet of the particular Steamship Company which has its particular policies, industrial problems, trade routes, etc. (and will present the unions with its particular labor problems). The fleet of each Steamship Company should therefore constitute a unit of the organization, and this unit must work out the plan for taking over and operating the fleet when the time arrives.

Of course, for the operation of the ships, the organization should include as many as possible of the managing and office staff. But this presents no problems different from those of other industries. In fact, it is even less necessary in the marine field, as many Masters and Mates are thoroughly familiar with ship management, the Master himself transacting the ship's business in foreign ports.

All these details of the form of industrial organizations, however, must for a long time remain mere conjecture. The mechanical difficulties (if only the labor turnover which is many times as great as that of other industries) are so many that no straight scheme can be laid out, and even if it could be, it would almost certainly be tossed aside by events. And most important of all is the possibility of a change of flag.

The steamship companies with their hearts full of patriotism and their pockets full of profits, shou loudly for the American Mercha Marine but with tears in their eye they affirm that it is impossible run ships while hampered by the Follette Act and the exorbitant d mands of American Seamen.

Since the La Follette Act mere calls for decent safety and livi conditions aboard ship (and most it is not enforced anyway), and wages hardly approach 10 per cent of the total expenses of ship operation, the honesty of these wails can be easily estimated.

If they would stop their inefficiency and their manoeuvring for government aid, they could compete well enough with foreign vessels despite a slightly higher margin of expenses.

In every labor dispute, the workers are exhorted by Government and employers to be patriotic, and not to destroy the reborn American Merchant Marine. The threat of changing the flags is held up like a club. For if the ships were put under foreign registry, the superior American conditions would disappear, preference in employment would go to the foreign citizens, and the officers and engineers would be thrown out entirely, and their American licenses would be valueless. So well has this club been handled that there are strong voices in the unions to-day for giving subsidies to steamship companies and for making operating conditions "reasonable." Some of the companies at least (particularly those with large blocks of British capital) will not be able to resist for long the temptation of being free from the La Follette restrictions, reducing expenses, and teaching labor a lesson. The flag will change, and seafaring labor will learn its lesson.

* The M. E. B. A. and U. R. T. A. succeeded in getting signed contracts with the Shipping Board till January. The Mates' agreements did not expire till August 1, and they were consequently not included in the lockout. When their time came, however, the Shipping Board as well as the private companies refused to give them a contract, and they had to be satisfied with "gentlemen's agreements."

The Kuzbas Project—The [illegible] at Industrial Reconstruction in Russia

We reproduce below an article by S. J. Rutgers, written in Moscow during the Congress of the Third International with the purpose of interesting the delegates in the plans for the Reconstruction of Russian industry thru the help of international labor. The plans that then constituted only a general outline have since been worked out in detail and an appeal has been made to American labor to take part in the first industrial labor colony—"Kuz-bas". In another issue we will publish an article giving the particulars of the enterprise.—Editor's note.

By S. J. RUTGERS.

Economic conditions in Soviet Russia compel the Soviet administration to assist in the re-establishment of small industry and to allow a certain amount of free exchange in order to stimulate production and prevent starvation.

"Socialism is impossible without large capitalist technique, constructed according to the last word of science" (Lenin).

Therefore the Soviet policy of stimulating small peasants and small industry must be supplemented by measures intended to create a highly developed modern industry.

The results do not depend wholly on our own willingness: we need the co-operation of foreign capital in accepting the concessions. And even mere acceptance will not be sufficient, since our hope is not in the floating of a new financial scheme, but in the actual results of labor and organization.

The question arises whether other methods could not be added towards the same ultimate goal: the creation of a modern machine industry. The question arises whether foreign labor, upon which concessions would have to be based largely anyhow, could not also achieve results without the help of foreign capitalists.

Knock at Russia's Door

This question presents itself with the more force, since a large number of American-Russian workers, partly trained in the highly developed American machine industry, loudly and insistently claim admittance to Soviet Russia.

There is little doubt that any amount of American labor of different degrees of skill and specialization could be had and that no serious obstacles exist in having American technical and managing specialists join the exodus. It certainly is not the American capitalist we are most anxious to get.

All we can expect from concessionaires above the supply of labor and technical and organizing ability is the supply of capital in the form of machines, initial expenses, foodstuffs, etc. This certainly would be important, since Soviet Russia is in dire need of everything, but we should not over estimate the factor.

Consider Wood Concessions

A wood concession such as has been offered by the Soviet Government in the north of Russia and Siberia does not necessarily require at the outset extensive machinery.

The American lumber worker goes into the forests of the West and Middle West with his tent, a supply of foodstuffs and the necessary saws and axes and within a very short time builds a camp to satisfy himself and the horses.

He then proceeds to install at the proper place a saw-mill constructed from the wood nature offers him.

The necessary equipment for such mills requires but relatively little machinery and Russia even to-day possesses enough material in this line, which is not utilized and could be made to work. But even if such an installation would have to be imported, it would not involve a large capital outlay.

The main transportation facilities for wood will be water transport and if the place is well chosen no large amounts of capital will be required.

Only Small Outlay Needed

With only a small capital outlay and within a short period it would be possible to have already at the disposal a commodity for exchange, enabling the purchase of food and other necessities. It will then not be very difficult to strengthen the enterprise by starting some wood working industry such as manufacturing wooden articles for the use of the peasants, matches, paper, etc.

Co-operation between Russia and foreign labor can also bring results.

Coal mining largely depends upon wood for the shafts and the galleries, and all the buildings, engine houses, etc. can be constructed in wood.

No doubt certain machinery is needed such as pumps, engines, cables, etc., but if no special means are available, these can be purchased largely thru the results of the exploitation of the wood.

It goes without saying that if capitalists were willing and able to put large amounts of capital in such a scheme, they could secure quicker results than being largely dependent upon the results of previous achievements for gradual development. If such capitalists can be found, let them go ahead.

But it is more likely that a capitalist who applies for a concession in Soviet Russia will proceed on more conservative lines, and that he will not very readily dump into a class-enemy country large amounts of valuable means of production.

American Worker Has Means

The American worker, who is willing and eager to go to Soviet Russia partly on account of sympathy for the first Workers' republic and hatred against the brutal American plutocracy, partly on account of unemployment, moreover, is not altogether without means.

The workers that will come as pioneers must be well selected and organized and will bring their own tools and foodstuffs, etc., for the initial period.

[illegible] of the food [illegible] period and [illegible] is not used to its full [illegible] present conditions in Russia and can be spared for the purpose or can be purchased from Soviet funds abroad.

A well defined program stating the support to be expected from the Soviets as well as the rights and duties of the colonists has been formulated and for the rest a free hand is necessary in the internal affairs of management and industry of the region under the general supervision of the Soviet of Labor and Defense, that will have to approve the committee of general management.

Such an enterprise that may be of the utmost importance to the further development of Soviet Russia must be well prepared and all possible energy should be brought towards its success.

The Kuznets coal basin with Nadejdenski steel plant in the Urals as a large machine shop to hasten the development has been carefully chosen so as to combine food, wood, coal and iron.

Only such workers from abroad will be admitted as pioneers that give sufficient guarantees both as to technical capacities and moral qualities so as to make the enterprise a success.

The foreign delegates back at their respective homes can do much by way of suggestions and recommendations to further this plan and might help to create the right spirit and atmosphere for an organized immigration to Soviet Russia.

For it is by no means necessary to limit the plan to Russian-Americans in general; all industrially highly developed countries can participate.

Can't Expect Immediate Relief

Russia cannot expect an immediate relief even thru a German revolution, as far as the reconstruction of the economic and industrial life is concerned.

It has largely to rely upon its own forces and such forces as it can take in from the heritage of the western civilization now in a state of decomposition.

The sooner it embodies such forces into its own organism, the more chances that the proletarian dictatorship in Russia will lead towards Communism.

If full energy is put in this direction, Russia may be able not only to go far in re-establishing its own economic life but also to contribute much towards the reconstruction of western Europe, after the latter will have passed thru the destructive process of a revolution against the well organized, well armed and unscrupulous white guards of the European reaction.

True to the traditions of class warfare, the bosses have provided for an inquest into the shooting of Joas Assuncao, the textile striker murdered by the police at Pawtucket, R. I. Hirelings of the textile barons will no doubt report that Assuncao was responsible for his own death.

The Civil Liberties Union reports that there 113 politicals still incarcerated in America's bastilles. That ought to put a little more fight into the workers of this country. Help set them all FREE!

[illegible] American Labor, Position of Educational League

NOTE.—This week we publish the third installment of the principles and program of the Trade Union Educational League. It discusses "The Source of Our Troubles," with the same clearness that has characterized the two previous installments. Next week we shall publish the fourth and concluding installment. This week's installment is as follows:

The Source of Our Troubles.

Whence comes the ultra-conservatism and extraordinary backwardness of the American trade union movement?

What causes the seeming paradox in this country of a very high degree of capitalism producing a very low degree of labor organization?

Many are the answers made to this great riddle of the American labor movement. The chief of these are, first, that the conglomeration of races here, by greatly complicating the organization problem, has effectually checked the spread of trade unionism: and second, that the workers in this country, because of its bonanza development, have enjoyed more prosperity than European workers and have consequently been rendered almost immune to militant organization.

But these answers are altogether unsatisfactory. The first is discounted by the fact that some of the very best unions we have, notably in the needle trades, are made up of many nationalities.

And the second goes counter to all our labor history. Time and again the workers in this country have given convincing evidence of their aggressive spirit and adaptability to advanced types of unionism.

A generation or so ago, during the stormy '80s, our trade union movement unquestionably led the world for militancy.

And since that time our industrial history has been marked with a whole series of strikes, as bitterly fought as any ever known anywhere.

In view of these facts it is idle to maintain that our workers are naturally unmilitant.

The true explanation for the undevelopment of American trade unionism must be sought elsewhere.

Blames Wrong Methods

And it is to be found in the wrong methods used by our progressive and revolutionary unionists.

Until quite recently they have failed utterly to realize and perform their proper functions.

For a generation past they have been working contrary to the natural evolution of the labor movement. The result is stagnation and ruin all around.

One of the latest and greatest achievements of working class thinking, due chiefly to the experiences in Russia, is a clear understanding of the fundamental proposition that the fate of all labor organization in every country depends primarily upon the activities of a minute minority of clear-sighted, enthusiastic militants scattered throughout the great organized masses of sluggish workers.

These live spirits are the natural head of the working class, the driving force of the labor movement. They are the only ones who really understand what the labor struggle means and who have practical plans for its prosecution.

Touched by the divine fire of proletarian revolt, they are the ones who furnish inspiration and guidance to the groping masses.

They do the bulk of the thinking, working and fighting of the labor struggle. They run the dangers of death and the capitalist jails. Not only are they the burden bearers of the labor movement, but also its brains and heart and soul.

In every country where these vital militants function effectively among the organized masses the labor movement flourishes and prospers.

But wherever, for any reason, the militants fail to so function, just as inevitably the whole labor organization withers and stagnates. The activities of the militants are the "key" to the labor movement, the source of all its real life and progress.

Vigor Elsewhere; Stagnation Here

In other countries the militants, even while not consciously aware of the above principles, have quite generally acted in harmony with them.

They have stayed in the old trade unions and, through their organization, activity, and determination, have been able to take the lead in directing the workers' struggle.

They have communicated something of their own fire and understanding to the masses, with the result that their labor movements have been constantly pushed onward —intellectually, structurally, and numerically—to higher and higher stages.

But in the United States the militants, progressives and radicals alike, have taken a reverse course.

For fully thirty years they have systematically deserted and neglected the trade unions.

Afflicted with a chronic secessionism, they have attracted the overwhelming mass of the livest spirits among the workers to the futile projects of building up all sorts of dual unions based upon ideal principles.

Thus the trade union movement has been sucked dry of thousands and thousands of the best militants, the very elements who should have been its life springs, and thus its development has been blocked, its progress poisoned at the source.

By the desertion of the militants the unknowing masses have been intellectually and spiritually decapitated. Leaderless, helpless, they have been left to the uncontested control of a conservative trade union bureaucracy, which has hardly a trace of real proletarian understanding and progress anywhere in its makeup.

In view of this situation it wou be a miracle if the American lab movement, with its most vital fa tors practically cancelled, were any other condition than one extreme backwardness.

Dual unionism, the set policy of secessionism, which has separated the life-giving militants from the cumbersome organized masses—th is the prime cause of the stagnatio of the American labor movement.

That is the underlying reason fo our apparent paradox of the mos aggressive capitalist class side by side with the most weakly organized working class. Dual unionism ha hamstrung American Labor.

[illegible] Meeting [illegible]ges Aid to [illegible]ston Men

[illegible] the Joint Auspices of the [illegible] Defense and the United [illegible] Council Beethoven Hall was [illegible] on the night of March 1 [illegible] an enthusiastic crowd which, [illegible] listening to te speakers, do[illegible] $253.00 to the Sacco-Vanzetti [illegible]

[illegible] Dunne of The Worker [illegible] presided. Speakers were Fred [illegible]kapp, Pascal Cosgrove, Peter [illegible], Carlo Tresca and Norman [illegible]

Fred Biedenkapp dealt with the [illegible] methods of the prosecution [illegible] showed that only for the anti-[illegible] hysteria, the creation of an at[illegible]sphere of prejudice and the par[illegible] nature of the judge's charge [illegible] even the hand picked jury which [illegible] to last after a panel of 500 had [illegible] exhausted could not have rend[illegible] a verdict of guilty. He appealed to the workers to fight the case on the straight issue of workingclass loyalty.

Other speakers pointed out that the Sacco-Vanzetti case was but one of a long list of similar persecutions of active fighters in the ranks of labor and appealed to the workers to line up solidly for the liberation of all class-war prisoners.

Norman Thomas, of the staff of The Nation described the three methods of "framing" workers; conviction under laws such as the criminal anarchy law as in the case of Larkin, conviction by perjured testimony as in the case of Tom Mooney and the fastening on radical workers of a crime which has nothing to do with labor activities as in the Sacco-Vanzetti case.

The police were present in force to prevent Elizabeth Gurley Flynn from speaking, it is said. She is now on a tour of the Middle West for the Workers Defense and was unable to be present.

Resolutions demanding a new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti submitted by the Joint Board of the Furriers Union and Bakers Union No. 64 of the I. W. A. F. L. were unanimously endorsed by the meeting.

In addition to the collection $25.00 was pledged by Local No. 22 of the Waist and Dressmakers Union.

The latest developments in the textile strike shows graphically with what cynicism the employers and their representatives view proposals to arbitrate the fundamental causes of the strike.

Judge Jerome Hann, chairman of the special arbitration board, called by Governor Sansouci—the same governor who sent the troops into the Pawtucket valley—has decided that the strikers in the Rhode Island mills must return to work before arbitration can begin and that they must return under the working conditions existing at the time the strike began six weeks ago when the 54-hour week had already been put in effect in a number of mills. This is nothing more or less than an attempt to demoralize the workers' strike organization and indeed this is the principal task of all arbitration and conciliation boards. The show of force and the ferocious onslaught on the picket lines of the strikers in the Pawtucket valley has not had the expected result of terrorizing the workers in other districts; on the contrary it has created the greatest feeling of solidarity ever seen in the textile industry and swung neutral opinion to the side of the strikers. It is probably for this reason that strenuous efforts are now being made to get the workers to accept a phony plan of arbitration with the old demand of a return to work as a first step "towards industrial peace."

The immediate need in the struck districts is for food and finance. The commissary department of the Federated Textile Unions is handling the situation admirable but they need funds. They should be sent by all sections of organized labor and on the collection of sufficient relief depends, in a large measure, the success of the strike.

A victory for the textile workers would mean a victory for all organized labor in this section and a slowing up of the low wage and long hour offensive.

Gildea's New Pamphlet for Workers

Charles Gildea, of Butte, Montana, a member of the United Mine Workers of America since 1894, has written a pamphlet entitled "Corruptionists and Union Wreckers" which should be read by every militant member of a labor union. Altho the pamphlet deals mostly with the United Mine Workers and the struggle between reaction and progress within that organization, the facts given apply in general to all labor organizations in the United States.

Gildea, in this pamphlet, clearly defines the issue now uppermost not only in the coal miners organization but in the entire labor movement as well. He says:

> To get to the basis of this dissension, it must be noted that in the United Mine Workres of America there are two distinct schools of thought. One is led by John L. Lewis and the majority of the executive board. They want to make the union so pleasing to the capitalist class and the capitalist politicians that it will not be regarded as a menace to the exploiting designs of the employers. This element led by Lewis, would no doubt go so far as to be willing to be regarded as a bulwark against any form of radicalism and upon whom the employers could safely depend; with their control of the official organ the United Mine Workers Journal, they are doing an effective work for the capitalist class by lulling the membership into a false sense of security, by filling its columns with empty, meaningless platitudes, by eulogy of Labor's bitterest enemies, by cowardly denunciation of its friends and by denying to the Mine Workers the education that would enable them to measure properly their economic status in present society.
> The other school of unionism in the Mine Workers organization is led by men of the Alexander Howat type. Howat for years has been a militant battler for a form of unionism that must and will live—not with the consent of the coal operators but in spite of them. A union not to be used as a stepping stone for officials into political preferment at the hands of capitalist politicians but a union so officered that the coal operators would have to respect it thru fear of its power; not officered by men who feel elated when they are permitted to grace the banquet board with capitalists and their cowardly henchmen.

The issue could not be put more clearly and we are glad to recommend this little treatise on the present labor movement to our readers. It has the rather rare virtue of being written by a man who knows what he is writing about. The price is ten cents per copy or five dollars per hundred. It can be obtained either thro The Worker or directly from Charles Gildea, 101 South Idaho Street, Butte, Montana.

The removal of Joseph Pelletier from his office of district attorney of Boston on charges of divers forms of corruption does not affect his standing as one of the chief executives of the Knights of Columbus according to James Flaherty, head of that patriotic order. As far as we are concerned the announcement is superfluous for there is absolutely nothing in Pelletier's record showing any disloyalty to capitalism and that is about the only crime the order cannot condone.

In spite of the crime wave the New York police department can easily spare fifty or sixty cops to keep tabs on a defense meeting.

Should 10-Hour Workday at Starvation Wages Come Back in Textile Mills

Fifty thousand textile workers in New England are out on the streets striking against an increase in hours, from forty-eight to fifty-four hours and further reduction of twenty per cent in their wages.

These workers, the lowest paid skilled workers in the country had had their wages reduced several times during the last two years. Most of these workers have for long monthrs been unemployed. Immediately after the mills reopened their wages were reduced 22 per cent.

Most of the mill barons of New England have decided to cut the wages of these workers another twety per cent and to increase the hours to fifty-four per week.

In spite of their reduced conditions the New England textile workers are decided to oppose the new encroachements.

It is an enormous task and every worker ought to do his utmost to see that these strikers don't lose their just fight for lack of funds.

save the starving children of the Volga valley. They enlist my sympathy just as much as the little Armenian children.

"But Mr. Vickrey, of the Near East Relief, felt that while I was so openly defending the smaller organizations which are seeking to help the starving of Russia and in the course of that defense seemingly running counter to Mr. Hoover, it might prejudice the claim of the Near East Relief upon a part of that $20,000,000. And so he preferred to have me sever my connection with the Near East Relief, and I have gladly done so.

"Because I want those children in Transcaucasia to live, too; and if the Near East Relief cannot keep them all from dying—and it cannot—I want the American Relief Administration to do so. And if it will help matters to have me out of the Near East Relief, then I am glad to get out, even if it only save the life of a single child.

Relief Does Good Work

"Please understand that I am not criticising the Near East Relief. It is working in the closest kind of harmony with the Soviet Governments of Georgia and Armenia, precisely as the American Relief Administration is working in the closest kind of harmony with the Soviet Government of Russia.

"It is doing a good work, saving children.

"Neither you nor I, I am sure, have any quarrel with those who are honestly working to save the starving in Russia or Armenia. For that is what we are working for, too.

"All ye ask is that we be allowed to go ahead and do our share. But we do insist on that.

Washington Propaganda Hurts

"The whole business is a very simple one, which any man who thinks about it can see, and which no doubt those who launched this attack on the relief organizations friendly to the Russian Government did see very plainly.

"Former Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who can scarcely be accused of 'red' sympathies, places the starving in Russia at 15,000,000 and says that 15,000,000 more are on short rations.

"Therefore, if Mr. Hoover's most sanguine hopes are realized and his organization is able to feed even 8,000,000 people, 7,000,000 must starve unless you and I get busy and get food for them, and get it to them.

"One of the things that has handicapped us in this task has been the widespread propaganda from Washington that the Russian railways cannot carry any more than the supplies that the American Relief Administration is sending in."

"Well, Sir Benjamin Robertson, who has just come from Russia, where he has made a study of that very matter, says that this is not so, and that by mid-April the food which Americans are already bringing in will have reached its destination, and he is raising £500,000 ($2,500,000) in England to supplement the work of the American Relief Administration, so, as he says, 'to have grain upon the spot in Russian ports ready for transport up country early in April, when the Russian railways may be sufficiently clear to handle it, without interfering with transport consignments for the American mission.'

Reactionaries Refute Selves

"You see, all of this mischievous nonsense from Washington falls to the ground on the testimony of the reactionaries themselves. It was a smoke screen to discourage us.

"But if Sir Benjamin Robertson, who has no more sympathy with the Soviet Government than Herbert Hoover, can set about raising £500,000 ($2,500,000) to send food into Russia when Hoover's job is finished, then we who believe in the idealism of that Government—we to whom it means the hope of the world that the thing which they have dreamed over there and fought for and died for and which they are now starving for, shall not be crushed out—we should be cowards and traitors to our own faith in the future of the world if we let this smoke screen of mischievous propaganda stop our efforts for a moment.

Hold Gains Already Made

"You ask me to reply to these attacks on the little organizations trying to save their share of the starving of Soviet Russia. I do not need to. This meeting, where you have given over $1,500—you who have given again and again already—last night's meeting in the 71st Regiment Armory with its thousands and thousands who came together to help the starving children of the Volga; meetings like these among the workers all over this country—they are the answer. And what they say is 'What the workers of Russia have gained for the world, the workers of America, will not permit to die.'"

[illegible] justice.

The Bricklayers Union has been compelled to agree to drop certain practices by which it maintains working conditions and if Attorney-General Daugherty is to be believed—in this instance [illegible] the officers of the Bricklayers Union were brought to Washington and under threat of prosecution were clubbed into signing an agreement which the altruistic attorney-general announces is "a new bill of rights for the home-builder, rent-payer, manufacturer and business man." From this list the men who do the work are missing.

The four principal provisions of the "consent decree" as it is euphemistically called by the capitalist press, are as follows:

> 1. There is to be no limit to the productive capacity of the individual workman within the working day or any other given time.
> 2. There is to be no limit upon the right of the employer to purchase his material wherever and whenever and from whomever he may choose, whether those materials be union made or otherwise.
> 3. There is to be no favoritism shown by organized labor toward employers, trade associations or contractors' associations, and no discriminations are to be indulged in against the independent employer who may not be a member of such an association.
> 4. The labor organization is not to be used or permit itself to be used by material men, contractors or sub-contractors as an instrument for the collection of debts or enforcement of the payment of alleged claims."

In a few words, the bricklayers union have now no remedy to use against the employers unless it breaks the agreement forced upon it. It cannot "discriminate against an employer" and therefore cannot put on the unfair list and refuse to work for a contractor who does not pay the union scale.

It cannot insist upon the employer furnishing union-made materials for the job on which union bricklayers are employed.

It cannot call a halt when an employer drives at top speed his men because he has underbid a competitor and taken a job below cost in order to remain in business by "taking it out of labor's hide"—a favorite expression of the employing fraternity. If one employer pays the union scale and another does not both must be treated alike; which means that no employer will pay the union scale unless it is low enough to suit him.

A precedent has been established for the use of the most subversive arm of the government in coercing labor and labor organizations. It has been stealthily employed in the case cited and no one can say where the practice will stop. It is becoming increasingly evident that the labor unions, if they attempt to serve the interests of their members, will soon find themselves outside the pale of the law. The continued use of the legal and military forces of the government against the unions can have no other meaning.

Work must be pushed for the united front and trade-unionists should prepare to fill the jails of this nation in defense of elementary rights. The lack of unity and the absence of a concrete program are an incentive for further attacks on everything from the right to organize to free speech and free press.

The Class Division

The proposed amendment to the constitution which is being pushed by the National Woman's Party and which is designed to put the sexes on an equal footing before the law is meeting with opposition from the Women's Trade Union League. This organization has discovered that the amendment would wipe out favorable legislation obtained for women in industry and would afford endless opportunity to the employers to get out from under many favorable working conditions they have been forced to grant.

Here we have a clear example of the class cleavage in organization formed on sex or racial lines. Biologically women are women. Socially, under our present system, they are workers, exploiters or hangers-on of the exploiting class. Marxian economics may be a closed book to most members of the Women's Trade Union League but they at least recognize the futility of mere political freedom under a vicious industrial system in which equality with men gives them nothing but the right to be exploited in common with their male companions.

United Labor Council Unifies Shoe Workers

The United Labor Council has achieved another signal victory in its campaign for the amalgamation of the independent unions in any specific industry.

The three local Shoe Workers' Unions, including the Children's Shoe Workers' Union, the Amalgamated Shoe Workers' Union, and the United Shoe Workers of America, with about 20,000 affiliated members, have been united in one organization within the United Labor Council, and at a mass-meeting recently held at New Plaza Hall, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Shoe Workers' Unity Committee of the United Labor Council, plans were formulated for bringing all the Shoe Workers of the country, estimated at some 300,000, into one industrial union.

The Shoe Workers' Unity Committee, of which J. Conley has been elected chairman and P. J. McClellan secretary, is sending out a referendum to workers in the industry thruout the country in reference to the structure and the name to be adopted by the projected organization.

It is worth noting that the only local independent Shoe Workers' Union still remaining outside the United Labor Council is the yellow American Shoe Workers' Union, formed under the auspices of the bosses in their attempt to introduce the open shop into the industry, after the Shoe Workers' strike of three years ago.

Aid Striking Textile Workers

The Executive Committee of the United Labor Council has issued a cal to all local labor bodies for a conference to be held on Friday, March 10, at 83 East 4th Street, in co-operation with the local Committee of the Federated Textile Unions, for the purpose of determining ways and means of aiding the striking textile workers of New England. Both the problems of financial assistance and publicity will be taken under consideration.

The Prospects for a Labor Party

By CALEB HARRISON
Secretary of Workers Party

Sunday Eve, March 12,

8 P. M., at the

WORKERS HALL

1347 Boston Road, Bronx, N. Y.

IRISH BRANCH FOR WORKER

The Irish Branch of the Workers Party of America, decided at its last meeting that every member should subscribe to The Worker and also purchase five extra copies per member each week for distribution. The same action is urged upon all other branches as a speedy way of increasing the circulation of this revolutionary workingclass organ.

Each member was likewise instructed to bring in one application by the next meeting which will be in the headquarters of the Amalgamated Food Workers on 51st Street.

The Irish Branch is mobilizing every member for the support of the National Defense Bazaar and until that date, March 22-25, will devote most of its effort to making the affair a success. . . . .

the Secretary of the Council, I. Amter.

"A campaign of intimidation and terrorization has begun against the activities of the Unemployment Council and the Unemployed. The bosses and the authorities believe that they can crush the movement before it has got under way. They believe that they can scare the workers to such an extent that they will give up their notions of organization.

Workers Not Afraid

"The workers are not going to be intimidated. There was an organization meeting down town, which was attended by several of our good friends, who go about in the same clothes as we wear, so that we won't recognize them so easily. The jobless in the hall were afraid to say a word in the discussion, until a Russian, an American citizen, took the floor and put some life into them. It seems that we will have to have Russians at all of our meetings."

"The purpose of such meetings is not merely to get together and discuss matters, but to organize all the power of the workers. We must get all the workers together, so that in the struggle with the bosses we will be victorious. If we do this, there is no doubt of the outcome—we will be triumphant."

J. Louis Engdahl, John Marshall and I. Amter were the speakers at this meeting.

Membership Cards

The Unemployment Council has arranged some large meetings in conjunction with the Union of Unemployed.

On Saturday, 2 P. M., there will be a mass demonstration at Rutgers Square. On Tuesday, there will be a meeting at the Battery, in front of 25 South Street, at 2 P. M. On Thursday, March 9, 10 P. M., there will be a meeting at 34th Street and 3rd Avenue, Brooklyn, near the Bush Terminal Building. On Friday, March 10, 5 P. M., there will be a meeting at 10th Street and 2nd Ave., where the bread-line gathers. On Saturday, a large demonstration will take place at 110th Street and 5th Avenue.

Membership Cards are to be issued from now on. Real mobilization of the jobless is to be carried on. The declining employment figures renders action imperative.

Kollontai Writes of Third International and Working Women

NOTE:—Wednesday, March 8, is International Woman's Labor Day. THE WORKER celebrates this year's Woman's Day by giving considerable space to special articles dealing with the woman's problem. Most important of these is the accompanying article by Alexandra Kollontai, member of the executive committee of the All-Russian Soviet, in which she reviews the great efforts and achievements of the Russian Revolution and the Third International for the emancipation of working woman. Her views are set forth as follows:

By ALEXANDRA KOLLONTAI

At the moment of the formation of the Third International the women represented not only an active industrial factor in the world economy, but a political force as well, filling up the ranks of the political groupings according to their more or less developed class-consciousness.

In the interests of its objects the Third International was compelled to take up quite a new position already at its First Congress in Moscow in 1919 with regard to the question of attracting the women to the struggle for the dictatorship, and voiced distinctly its views in favor of the necessity of work among the wider masses of women.

There is no guarantee of victory, no possibility of construction without the participation of the working women.

Founded World Secretariat

In 1920 the Communist International founded an International Women's Secretariat in the Executive Committee.

This I. W. S. is not an independent organ, as it was in the Second International; it is simply one of the working apparati of the Communist International, enlarging the activities of the Communist parties by yet another militant task—namely the task of the complete and all-sided liberation of the women.

In contradistinction to the Second International, the Third in planning out its political actions takes into consideration the forces, the degree of organizedness and the class consciousness of the working women.

For the Third International the working youth and the women are special "cadres" of the proletariat, which must be utilized for the realization of a single plan of action.

The women have ceased to be only an auxiliary element, the world war and the thunder claps of the workers' revolution, which have found their expression in the development of the civil war in its different aspects, have made an active political force of the working women in the other countries also.

Woman Takes Historic Place

The Communist woman-worker has taken up her historical place under the banner of the Communist International.

In the reiterated actions of the German proletariat during these last stormy years of the commencing social revolution; in the prolonged economic strikes of England; in the revolutionary fights of the Hungarian and Finnish proletarians for Soviet power; in the actions of the Italian workers and the heroic struggle of the working women and the peasants of Russia; in the United States; in the growing movement of the Japanese proletariat—everywhere the women of the proletariat are working, struggling and generously sacrificing themselves, their families, their lives.

During the years of great struggles not only the mass worker himself but also his class mate—the working woman—have grown older, stronger and more class conscious.

The material is at hand. It should be utilized. The work must be deployed in all its width and breadth. The first step has been taken already?

Follow Uniform Plan

The Third Congress of the Communist Internatioinal has pledged all the Communist parties of the world to form sections for propaganda work among the women in pursuance of the example of the Russian Communist Party, and to carry on the work among the women on the principles and methods established by the Second International Conference of Women Communists.

At present in almost all the Communist parties of Europe Women's sections have not only been formed but, what is especially important they are carrying on the work according to a uniform plan.

By this means not only good practical results are attained, but this helps also to strengthen the spirit of internationalism, of cohesion, of a feeling of solidarity, which the Second Intenational lacked so much.

The principle of the necessity of attracting the women to the struggle for Communism is cropping up and it strengthened not only in the capitalistically developed West—but also in the economically backward countries of the East.

The Second International never attempted to spread its influence beyond the countries of Western culture. The East was a stranger to it.

The International did not even try to set itself the task of attracting the women of the backward nations to the struggle for their liberation thru Socialism.

Special Attention to East

The International Women's Secretariat of the Communist International, on the contrary, gives special attention to the East, estimating correctly that the conquest of the East is the surest method of dealing world capitalism a blow in the back.

In Korea the women's labor movement is most imposing in its proportions.

The working women take part in the armed uprisings, they not only express their will in the strikes, but they are trained to the use of arms.

In Japan 58 per cent of all the workers in the industry are women. The textile industry, which is so greatly developed in Japan, is carried on by the labor of women.

In the plantations of India over two million women are working.

In the home industries of the Near East women's labor plays an important role.

The developing capitalist industry in China is supported by the labor of women and children.

The yoke of capitalism is interwoven with religious traditions and the survivals of patriarchal customs, which are oppressing the women.

There Is But One Issue

There is only one issue—the struggle for Communism.

Naturally, the very first attempts of the International Women's Secretariat to enter into contact with the advanced part of the women proletariat of the East met with a live response.

The East is waking up. The East is beginning to move. A centre for the work among the women is being created in the Near and in the Far East.

On December 1st the I. W. S. has summoned a separate conference in the Near East for the women representatives of Turkey, Persia and the Caucasian Republics.

By spring time the I. W. S. is planning a conference of Communists from the countries of the Far East.

The work is progressing, the ties with the East are growing stronger, new forms of work and special tasks connected with the peculiar mode of life and special conditions of the women of the Eastern peoples are being planned out.

The I. W. S. is not only an organ of propaganda, but of action as well.

The work of relief for the famishing workers of Soviet Russia has called forth the organization of collections of donations on the part of German, Swedish, Czecho-Slovak, Bulgarian and other women Communists.

Make November 7th Holiday

The day of the great anniversary of the revolution—November 7th—has been fixed once and for all by the Communist women of Sweden, Germany and a number of other countries as a day of public demonstrations, meetings of working women, publication of leaflets, appeals, etc.

Each country has its own woman correspondent, connected with the I. W. S.

The latter proposes to call a conference in February of all these correspondents in the countries of the East and West.

By the efforts of the Communist International two international conferences of Communist women have already been carried out in 1920 and 1921, in connection with the Congresses of the Communist International.

The I. W. S. has published six numbers of its international organ ("The Communist Woman's International"; under the editorship of Klara Zetkin).

The last number is devoted almost exclusively to the Second International Conference of Communist women.

No Problem in Russia

In summing up the results achieved by the Communist International in the matter of attracting the working women's masses into the struggle for Communism, it is necessary to reckon not so much with the practical attainments of the movement, as with the tremendous heava, which has been accomplished in the question of the attitude towards women on a world scale since the time of the October revolution and with the help of the Communist International.

Not so long ago the bourgeois world was faced by the question, as yet unsolved by capitalism, of the equality of rights and the all-sided liberation of women.

The dictatorship of the working class in Russia has solved this outstanding problem also.

The so-called "Question of Women's Rights" does not exist for Soviet Russia. The role of the women in the public economy, their passing over to productive labor instead of the unproductive slaving for their families—has wrought a radical change in the position of the women and the attitude of the toiling society towards them.

To the Liberation of Women!

The proletariat of the whole world has now a live example before its eyes as to how the fate of the entire proletariat, and in particular that of the working-class women, has been modified with the victory of the aims to which the Third International is calling and striving.

Great are the achievements of the working class during these four years of Revolution, great is the heave accomplished in a whole number of social-political questions.

But yet the greatest achievement of the Russian Revolution and the Third International in these four years lies in the solution of the problem of the liberation of the working women.

The practical road to a radical solution of the question of equal rights for the women has been found and pointed out.

Thru the dictatorship and world federation of the workers under the banners of the Communist International—we shall go to the building up of Communism, and, consequently, to the liberation of the women.

An Appeal of a Revolutionary Mother to the Mothers of the Proletariat

By KATHERINE GITLOW

On my way to see my son in prison who is a class-war prisoner I carried a bundle of eatables. A woman dressed in rags, with a bundle in her hands, remarked to me, "Yes, a mother, we do all we can, tho they don't deserve it. If they would only listen to their mothers they wouldn't be there."

I looked at her and felt sorry for her. Poor mother and son! Both are unhappy because they do not understand. Sons, thousands of the working-class sons in the prisons! Capitalist society provides nothing for them.

After they are pushed thru public school, or as is more often the case, they do not go thru public school because the worker cannot afford it, they receive their diplomas or working papers whichever the case may be and are left to the mercy of those who employ labor. And it is among the children of the working class that they look for cheap labor. At home parents demand that their children contribute towards the upkeep of the family even tho the market for labor is overfilled and the owners of the jobs refuse to buy their labor. Life at that time is more of a hell than a pleasure for the youth of the working class. For some the struggle for a job just to live becomes very hard, and they look for easier means of making a living. They start to steal, of course they do not start with safe-blowing, simply with small things. They learn how to do these big things in the jails where they come in contact with other prisoners who are experienced and who are also victims of the same capitalist society. That is the trouble, mother.

Mothers of the working class, if you would only understand you would not blame your sons. And, perhaps, if you would have understood you might have saved your sons from being in jail for offenses of this kind.

It is always better to fight and go to prison for a principle than to live like a mouse, always looking for a crumb to steal in order to live and also standing a chance to be caught in the trap, and when caught men who commit such offenses are done for.

So, poor mother and poorer son, I will tell you that I was not as unhappy as you. I was conscious all the time that my son was in jail because he was fighting the system that made 90 per cent of the prisoners permanently such who could have been useful workers, happy with their mothers, if only the workers would understand that it is to their interest that the workers own the means of production and education.

So, mothers of the working class, your duty is to organize and to fight for the abolishment of a system that is responsible for so many crushed lives of the youth of the working class and its unhappy mothers. And when you will organize and learn the truth you will find inspiration in the struggle for a better world for your children.

Come, you mothers of the working class, and take your place in the ranks of the revolutionary workers. Women are rallying around the International of the revolutionary women of the world. Help tear down the diseased capitalist structure and help put in place a new healthy structure where the workers will enjoy the full product of their labor, where there will be no jails for the sons of the workers and tears for the mother. In this work, proletarian mothers, is found a world of happiness.

Are American Girls Coolies?

By JEANETTE D. PEARL

"A working girl can dress comfortably and neatly on $90.00 a year and could live on sixty cents a day for meals," according to the testimony introduced by Emporia merchants at a hearing conducted recently by the Kansas Court of Industrial Relations.

The capitalist class is starting its campaign for a six dollar a week wage-scale for girls and women. The hearing begun in Kansas will ultimately make its circuit thru all the states in the Union.

Legalize "Coolie" Wage

The coolie-wage is what the capitalist class means to foist legally, thru its Industrial Relation Courts, first upon girls and women and then upon boys and men.

And a fertile field for the recruiting of this cheap labor supply is found among the untrained women and girls. The ever lower standard of living imposed upon the worker, compels the wife and mother to go out to work in order to supplement the income of husband and father.

An influx of unskilled women workers enables the master class to beat down the wages of the more skilled workers and also to make harder the conditions of labor.

In this the master class is aided materially by the sex conditions of women, imposed by nature. The maternal functions of woman, her greater family obligations, her comparative newness to co-operative association, enables the master class to exploit her more ruthlessly and more unmercifully than male workers.

Launch Low Wage Campaign

This is the age of beating down wages. This is the age of the open shop drive. The master class is studiously preparing to undermine the resisting power of the more skilled workers by launching a vigorous campaign, thru the medium of its Courts of Industrial Relations, propagandizing for a six dollar a week wage-scale for girls.

By compelling that acceptance by the more docile element of the labor body and then utilizing that docile element against the more skilled workers, the master class have at their command a very fine weapon in the class struggle.

They not only exploit women workers more intensely, but they also use them against the male workers to lower the standard of living, to lower wages, to make harder the conditions of labor and to increase the unemployed reserve.

But Few Women Organized

Women constitute fifty per cent of the population and one-third of the working population in the United States. Yet the number of women organized in the ranks of labor is comparatively small. Women must not permit themselves to scab it on their male workers by working for less wages. Equal pay for equal work must be their slogan and an ever increasing pay one of their aims, to achieve which, women must organize together with their fellow workers, as co-workers in the class struggle, to end that class struggle.

The relatively small proportion of women in the ranks of organized labor indicates that there is something wrong with our method of approaching women. A correct method of approach should yield a greater response. That the response has been meager is due to the fact that organized labor has never taken into consideration the different psychological, physical and social traits of women. An appeal to reach the broad masses of women must be worked out on the basis of these differences.

That does not mean that women are inferior to men. It simply means that women are different from men and this difference must be taken into account.

Urge Auxiliary Organizations

Those with a knowledge of organization work among women, the Comrades in Europe and particularly Russia, have found that as a recruiting ground for organization work among women, a woman's auxiliary organization is most fruitful.

As a preliminary to entering the organized ranks of labor, the broad masses of women must first be drawn into women's organizations where their timidity, their reserve and lack of self-confidence will be dispelled and a knowledge of class-consciousness will be instilled, so that they can take their places in the class struggle side by side with their fellow wage-slaves, battling for emancipation.

SING!

By ROSE PASTOR STOKES

International Woman's [illegible] to select? Shall it be some one heroic [illegible] who lived and died for liberty? Some great figure, [illegible], bigger, more self-sacrificing than the rest? One whose name should be written, anniversary after anniversary, in the hearts of the young generation and the old?

Yes, maybe such a one.

Where to search? In the histories of the French or the Russian Revolution, of course.

I turn to the pages of recent Russian history: Example after example that thrills and inspires. What women! What minds, what wills, what defiance of danger, even of death! What love for the people and the cause of the people! Proletarian women, most of them women of the flaming passion, women of burning eloquence, of dogged determination; women of large capacity for suffering, women of sacrificial spirit; women to lead and inspire the proletarian womanhood of the world.

One of these, surely, I should choose; and sing her, this day. Any of these, chosen at random, would be source of inspiration enough—a light to live by, a torch to light the spirit by, a fire to warm the heart by; with iron enough in her will to harden the softest and the weakest of us in these iron times of reaction.

Names spring to the lips—a score of them—leaders, all. Choose one, and let her life be the theme this proletarian International Woman's Day.

But, no. Leaders come to-day and go to-morrow; and even those who come and stay—the high souls who live and die for freedom—they have the plaudits of the crowd to sustain them, that, and much besides.

Better to sing her who——.

But, listen:

Do you know a mother who takes bread from the mouths of her hungry little ones to feed the famine-stricken peasants and workers of Soviet Russia?

Do you know what it means for a working-class mother in present-day capitalist America—a mother with a little brood at home—to send her dollar for relief of men, women and children she has never seen?

Do you know what it is for her to spare even an old garment, an old pair of shoes, an old coat or shirt? Do you know how great is the need which makes the giving an unimaginable sacifice?

Do you know how little stands between her and destitution, between her and starvation? With an ailing husband perhaps—broken in the mills of Mammon—with a job to-day and none to-morrow—living from hand to mouth?

Any day she and her little ones may face charity or despair—despair, of all bitter things the bitterest, except one thing—and that one, charity!

Yet she gives, yet she sacrifices; without announcements, without blare of trumpets. Always with the simple but strangely-moving gesture, "Well, the same poor folk we remain. A dollar more, a dollar less—what does it matter?"

You know it matters. She knows it matters. But the answer to her shrug is a little, throat-contracting laughter. One must laugh, sometimes, in order not to weep; in order not to go foolishly down on one's knees before that supremest spirit of our age—the spirit of working-class solidarity.

"Over there, they have nothing. We have a little," she will say, "so we must send all we can."

Sometimes, there is a baby at the breast—starving; sometimes, there is one pulling at her skirts and crying, "Mamma, more!" But mamma remembers the nursing mothers in Soviet Russia whose breasts are dryer than her own; whose children are too weak to cry; and she robs herself, her infant, her little one, to feed the mothers and children of working-class Russia.

"They have died—they are dying, for us," she says. "We must go a little hungry to save them. We must share our little with them."

But you and I know that if is not just a simple matter of sharing her little. You and I know that in this accursed system, standing on the verge of a precipice, it is like setting the foot just the little bit further out that may send the body hurtling down to disaster and death.

Yet they do it—these mothers. Every day these working-class women of the world; these working-class women of America!

Are they not worthy of the great women who lived and died for the Russian proletarian revolution? Are they not worthy of our song to-day? Sing them, comrades! Wherever you have a voice—sing!

Because of them, the light shall never go out in Russia. Because of such as they, the light shall grow till it becomes more than the sun of the world; for it shall illumine both sides of the globe, at one and the same time, forever.

We Now Have With Us George Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah"

It is nothing new to see the stage used for propaganda purposes these days. To employ it as a means of bringing a much discussed and disputed theory in philosophy to the attention of the theater-goer is a real Shavian trick. In "Back to Methuselah," we are confronted with the great riddle of the universe—Life. The play is a natural sequence to Shaw's "Man and Superman" where he presents the superman but does not actually tell us how to reach that goal. In his new work, he gives us the answer—"Imagination is the beginning of creation. You imagine what you desire; you will what you imagine; and at last you create what you will." In short, he has dramatized the reaction which has set in against Neo-Darwinism in the form of Creative Evolution.

The first week of the cycle consists of "In the Beginning" and "The Gospel of the Brothers Barnabas." The first one is the story of Adam and Eve. Adam's brooding that he must live eternally is brought to a climax when he discovers a dead fawn, the first sign of death in Eden. Thru this, the Voice of the Serpent helps him solve his problem of eternity; she advises him to will to live a definite length of time and then shed his flesh after having left progeny. She reveals all the secrets of life, the emotional as well as the physical to Adam and particularly to Eve, until she imparts the final secret of reproduction and the life process. It is with Cain's entrance that strife and bloodshed come to the world not only in the form of brutality, but also as the beginning of the age-old struggle between the old and the new.

"The Gospel of the Brothers Barnabas" is set in modern times. The brothers are still pondering over the same problem that occupied Adam's mind. Their discovery is the same as Adam's—the will to live. Here Shaw takes his fling at English politicians by means of Joyce-Burge and Lubin, the counterparts of Lloyd George and Asquith. Both are quite willing to prolong their lives but with the understanding, of course, that this longevity applies only to the best men, that is to themselves.

We have a genuine Lloyd George in all his ignorance and glory; when he rises to his heights in exclaiming "How I wish I could have devoted myself to biology. I have always been interested in rocks and strata and volcanoes and so forth."

Albert Bruning and Moffat Johnston as the Barnabas Brothers presented very accurately the great task of preaching a new gospel. Margaret Wycherly as the Voice of the Serpent and as the parlor maid had an opportunity of displaying her strong personality in her subtle way. George Gaul and Ernita Lascelle as Adam and Eve contributed greatly toward the primitive atmosphere with their natural acting and their appropriate costume (or rather lack of it).

In spite of the fact that "Back to Methuselah" is not a play in a dramatic sense, it leaves one refreshed with new thoughts.

TAKE NOTICE

The Iskra Publishing Co. arranged a May Day Cele for Sunday afternoon and ning, April 30, at the New Casino, 107th Street and Avenue.

The whole proceeds will go to the "Iskra," the only Russian daily of the Workers Party.

All friendly organizations requested not to arrange conflicting entertainments on the day.

FERRER SCHOOL DINNER

The friends of the Ferrer Modern School, of Stelton, N. J., will hold their second dinner of the year at the Firefly, 3 West 47th St., New York City, Friday, March 10, 7 P. M.

There will be a general discussion on Art and Education. The following friends will participate: Carl Zigrosser, Floyd Dell, Ernest D. Cook, Michael Gold, Elizabeth Byrne Ferrer and Alexis Ferrer. Music.

Reservations for tickets at Tafels, 162 Madison Avenue, (Mad. Square 2294), or at the Firefly, 3 West 47th Street. Telephone.

In a Crisis

Soviet Russia is in a crisis. The next two or three months will decide her fate. Relief activity must be deeply intensified, widely expanded if Russia is to be saved.

The Executive Committee of the Friends of Soviet Russia has decided that one of the most vital ways of extending and intensifying the work lies in organizing the special talents, the intense enthusiasms, the living sympathies and unbounded energies of the working-class women of America.

Therefore a plan is under way to immediately carry forward special organization work among working-class women for women's sewing circles, women's knitting circles, women's collecting relief circles, nursing mothers' relief circles (for relief of nursing mothers and infants of Soviet Russia) as well as other relief activities among working women.

Rose Pastor Stokes has been elected national secretary of the Women's Friend of Soviet Russia and all communications are to be addressed to her at 201 West 13th Street, New York City.

The Friends of Soviet Russia asks everybody who knows any woman likely to be interested, to write her name and address on the blank below, and send it in at once.

If you know a woman whose heart aches for the terrible plight of the starving women and children in Soviet Russia and who is able to help, give us a chance to make our appeal to her and organize her with her sisters for immediate aid to Russia. If she is unable to help, she is able to reach others who are able to help.

Most of the help anyway has come from those who are least able to help. It is the poor men and women of the working-class of the world who have given relief in unbelievable quantities to the starving workers and peasants of Soviet Russia.

However poor the woman you know may be, send us her name if her heart is in the right place.

YOU CAN SAVE A LIFE, EVEN BY SAVING A MINUTE! DO IT NOW!

LOCAL NOTES

All circles are making good progress. The League is simply humming with activity.

The newly organized Circle in Williamsburg announces that the lecture by Oliver Carlson scheduled for March 3rd will be postponed to March 10th, due to a Mass Meeting arranged by the Williamsburg Branch of the Friends of Soviet Russia. Meetings are held every Friday night at 8 o'clock sharp.

March 18th, Circle 1, in conjunction with the Workers Party, Bronx Branch, will hold a Paris Commune Comraderie at 1347 Boston Road, Bronx.

The newly organized Finnish Circle is growing rapidly and now has a membership of thirty.

The West Side Circle is also making good progress. Its membership now numbers fifteen and it expects to be one of the largest circles before the year is over.

The Brownsville Circle has finally procured headquarters. The circle will soon be ready for its summer activities.

Circles will soon be organized in Yonkers, Staten Island and Coney Island. Comrades living in these sections please communicate with Young Workers League, 61 Canal St., New York.

ORGANIZERS WANTED

The Friends of Soviet Russia requires the services of several capable men for organizers. If you are qualified, or know some one who is qualified, communicate with the National Office at 201 West 13th Street, New York. Applicants should have had special training as organizers. In answering, state experience, peculiar qualifications for this work and with what territories you are familiar.

How to Cure World Unrest

By ART YOUNG

Rochester, N. Y. — Mrs. Price Bulge, a wealthy society woman of this city, has announced that she intends to devote much of her time and money to further the movement against the radical teachings that cause so much world unrest.

To a reporter she said: "Communism and all other radical "isms" will destroy the family."

Mrs. Bulge has been divorced four times.

[illegible] Women's Day Rally Tuesday, March 14

The Workers' Party celebrates International Woman's Labor Day by Mass Meeting for relief of Soviet Russia.

International Women's Labor Day will be celebrated on March 14th by Local Greater New York, Workers Party of America for the relief of Soviet Russia.

International Women's Labor Day has been established by the International of the Communist Women in order to demonstrate on this day the international solidarity of working women. The Workers Party knows of no better means to demonstrate this solidarity than to work for the relief of women and children in Soviet Russia—to show by this activity that this solidarity is more than a mere phrase.

The Mass Meeting which will be addressed by many prominent men and women of the labor movement will also start the campaign for engaging the women of America in the class struggle.

William F. Dunn, Editor of the Worker, Dr. Hendin, Secretary of the Jewish Federation of the Workers Party, Catherine Gitlow and Jeanette D. Pearl will be the speakers.

All men and women interested in the organization of class conscious women should attend this meeting, which will be held on March 14th, 8 P. M. at the Workers Hall, 1347 Boston Road, Bronx.

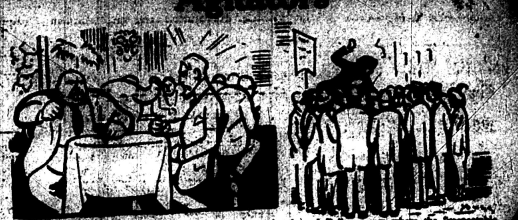
Branch Organizers Attention—Branch Organizers are notified that application cards should be returned at once to the local office.

Financial Secretaries Attention—Collection of dues should be made promptly and money turned in AT Once to the Local Office.

Agitators



Did you ever listen to conversations in restaurants, hotels and Pullman cars where the "respectable element" gather and express their inmost thoughts? If you ever have the most violent remarks of a hungry soap-boxer are pale things to you ever after. If a working-class speaker in a hall or on the street ever gave voice to sentiments one-half as bloodthirsty as those uttered every day in places where gather the men with 56 inch waist-lines his audience would, as one man, demand his immediate retirement to an insane asylum.

Fight the Famine!

"The famine conditions on the Volga," said Dr. Fridjof Nansen, in a recent interview, "surpass all our most pessimistic anticipations. It is sufficient to say that Dr. Farrar (the representative of the English Relief Commission) who accompanied me thither, and who has had experience of famine in India, Africa and Asia, had never before witnessed such a terrible nightmare, or such tragic sights as those he saw in the Volga area."

Together they had visited a number of feeding centers, children's homes, hospitals, and a large number of villages. Dr. Nansen discovered that the majority of peasants leave their huts only to go for water, and they live on what is left of the straw collected in the autumn.

This they grind in stone mortars together with sunflower seeds, bark and clay, and then mix with flour made of the bones of dead animals. There are practically no domestic animals left in the villages. A few households have one horse left, but these are so weak that they cannot keep on their legs.

In the Saratov Province, which has no forests, there are not even roots, which serve in parts of the Samara province as an important substitute for food.

In the German Volga Commune, conditions are very bad. In many cottages corpses of people who had died of hunger are to be found. They lie unburied for days, because the other members of the family are too weak to go out to report or bury them. In a number of huts, whole families are on the point of death, among them being the corpses of those who had already died of hunger.

In the Buzuluk District, the famine conditions are more terrible than in other parts of the famine area. In spite of the considerable relief work that is being done, the number of people suffering is so great that it will be impossible to save even half of the children of the district from death by starvation.

Not less than 500 truckloads of food are required in the Volga area to provide a bare pound of food per day per person. In addition, medical stores, drugs and fodder are needed.

The Volga District requires 170,000,000 poods (3,600,000 tons) of food for human consumption. The district, altho formerly the granary of Russia, has produced only 46,000,000 poods this last year, leaving a deficit of 124,000,000 poods (2,132,000 tons), which must be procured elsewhere.

WHAT COUNTRY CAN BETTER PROVIDE IT THAN AMERICA WITH HER HUGE SURPLUS OF GRAIN!

Government regulations for transport workers in Russia. There has been created a committee of five to take charge of the transport department. Guards have been selected from among the representatives of the famine districts, to accompany the food trains to their destination. Persons guilty of irregularities in the transportation of food answer for their misdeeds before the Revolutionary tribunal. The railwaymen must constantly observe the terrors of hunger which are merely increased by delays in transportation. An hour of delay, a pound of bread lost on the way mean deprivations for the starving Volga district. They mean fresh distress and more deaths. Those fulfilling the demands of the food transport department should have their names inscribed on the "Red Tablet". Others guilty of infractions will pay the penalty. The transport workers have today but one slogan: Not an hour of delay for the food trains. No grain must be lost."

There was a big meeting in Chicago, with Com. Edgar T. Whitehead as the main speaker. Chicago is planning intensive trade union activities. A special organizer has been put on the job; he will carry on his work in the smaller towns in the vicinity of Chicago, that being one of the most fertile fields in the country."

"I am only a poor working man myself living on my daily work from hand to mouth. I wish I could more than talk for the starving children in Russia, but there are some here that need the help of us little helpers."

The Tailors' Section of the Technical Aid for Soviet Russia, New York, has turned out 886 girls' coats, 288 boys' coats, 230 trousers, 131 shirts, 98 pants, 11 dresses and 120 dozen caps.

The staff of the "Nation" saved $11 on lunches. This has come to the FSR for the hungry in Soviet Russia.

Last week, there came to the offices of the FSR a clergyman who openly stated that he considered it a crime that a man or woman should posses a watch and chain valued at $500, when millions are starving in Soviet Russia. He presented the watch and chain to the national office.

This week, a man entered the national office and said he wished to make a contribution. He would give no name. "Anonymous." He stretched a $1,000 bill, took his receipt and left the office. Undoubtedly a man of means—but he is a friend of Soviet Russia, a friend of the Friends of Soviet Russia.

Last weeks big items were as follows: Chicago $2,000, Czecho-Slovak Marxian Federation $1,182, Anonymous Brooklyn $1,000, San Diego $1,000, New Haven $600, San Francisco $550, Cleveland $401, Boston $300, Scranton and Olyphant, Pa. $305, Yonkers, N. Y. $250, Baltimore $246, Worcester, Mass. $200, Finnish Cooperative Trading Ass'n., Brooklyn $200, Lawrence, Mass. $175, Kenosha, Wis. $165, Gary, Ind. $125

The Literature Loan!

The Literature Loan Campaign of the Workers Party is now on in full swing. The first three days of the campaign not only have turned in some splendid promises but what is better actual cash. Here are a few notes taken from letters received:

"Will send in a loan in a few days. I like that plan splendidly. Think the comrades will take to it like a duck takes to water."—Sam Ticer.

Comrades at Glassport, Pa., elect a comrade to organize the loan drive.

The first comrade to send in a loan was comrade H. Steichman of Indianapolis, Ind. His loan was $5.

And the next was from comrade Frank Gosciniak of Alston, Mass. The amount was $5.

And the third was one of $10 from the Finnish Branch at Jamaica, N. Y.

We confess we feel gratified with the first three days' receipts since the drive opened.

The secretary of one live local writes: "As to the Loan Campaign, we will take part and do our best."

"Keep the good work going," writes one comrade in extending a loan.

Writes a comrade from St. Louis, "We are arranging plans to push the loan campaign."

"We have received the loan receipt book and in our meeting elected a member to collect loans," says one secretary of a Finnish Local.

Promises of active support of the Literature Department's Loan Campaign arrive in every mail. These, with the receipts of the first days of the campaign convince us that the Campaign has met with general favor of the membership. What's needed now is concerted and enthusiastic action by all members and the full $5,000 will be subscribed in short order. THEN—the Literature Department of the Workers Party will function as it should, in the interest of every unit of the Party.

Lloyd George has threatened to resign and English political circles are in a panic. This is the result of British inability to develop more than one successful liar at a time.

Allan Broms To Lecture for Young Workers' League

Allan S. Broms, noted lecturer and speaker, will deliver a series of five lectures on topics of fundamental importance. The lectures are based on the revolutionary movement in America and should be attended by every class-conscious worker.

Lectures are to be given Friday evenings at 61 Canal Street as follows:

March 17th—Political Action and Peaceful Revolution.
March 24th—The Dilemma of Industrial Unionism.
March 31st—Making Your Movement Count.
April 7th—The Problem of Revolutionary Leadership.
April 14th—The Industrial Incentive of the Future.

OWENS WILL TOUR OHIO

Edgar Owens, Secretary of the National Defense Committee, started a statewide tour of Ohio March 1st. The purpose of this Ohio tour is to raise funds necessary to defend a number of Ohio comrades who have been made victims of the White Terror of the capitalist class a few months ago and to appeal the cases of Comrades C. E. Ruthenberg and others.

The dates arranged for Owens are as follows: Cleveland, 5th; Lorain, 6th; Mansfield, 7th; Tiffin, 8th; Toledo, 9th; Lima, 10th; Dayton, 14th; Cincinnati, 16th; Portsmouth, 17th; Jacksonville, 18th; Neffs and Bellaire 19th; Dillonvale, 20th; Martins Ferry, 21st; E. Liverpool, 23rd; Salem, 24th; Canton, 25th; Akron, 26th; Warren, 27th; Niles, 28th; Youngstown, 29th; Pittsburg, 30th; Philadelphia, 31st.

TRENTON MASS MEETING

The Mass Meeting arranged by the City Central Committee of Trenton, N. J., Sunday, February 26th, was a pronounced success. Podeeratz Hall was filled.

The meeting opened with the singing of the Internationale by the German Singing Society. Edgar Owens, Secretary-Treasurer of the National Defense Committee spoke in English, Josef Berg, in German, and John Bertell in Hungarian. A Collection of $27.00 was taken up.

The City Central Committee announced this as the first of a series of meetings that will be held in Trenton and arrangements are being made to get the full message of the Workers Party to the workers of Trenton.

PSYCHO - ANALYST AT LIBERATOR EVENING

Dr. S. A. Tannenbaum, a well known psycho-analyst and editor of the magazine "Psyche and Eros", whose recent attacks upon certain phases of the Freudian theory have aroused much controversy, is to deliver an intimate talk on "The errors of the Freudian Philosophy of Psychoanalysis," at the Liberator Evening which is to be held Sunday at 8 P. M. at Arlington Hall, 23 St. Mark's Place, 8th Street and 3rd Avenue.

American Labor and Its Literature

By ALEXANDER TRACHTENBERG

The American labor movement cannot boast of an extensive literature. Younger movements in Europe have more studies and publications to their credit.

Lack of public interest in the general labor movement can be ascribed to the isolation of the economic organizations of the workers from the political labor movement and the latter's comparative weakness in this country.

It is only since the war that Labor has come to be considered a factor in American public life. Prior to 1914 the public consciousness of the American people was awakened to the functioning of the labor movement only at times of great industrial disturbances.

The great need for workers during the war gave the labor unions an opportunity to strengthen their position in the various industries. Standards were raised and the organizations were solidified, politically, however, Labor's achievements were nil.

It is true that Labor was called brother in arms and given some places on obscure bureaucratic advisory boards, which flattered the leaders, but did not give Labor more power.

The post-war program of "reconstruction" included an extensive campaign for the open shop, wage-cutting and sundry other reductions in the prevailing standards.

This "deflation" program is stirring some sections of the American workers to concerted action.

Question Political Policy

As a result much dissatisfaction is also being evinced with the traditional political policy of the organized labor movement. The sterility of this policy is particularly seen in Labor's impotence in the present conflict against the combined power of capital and government. The recent Chicago political conference, called by sixteen railway unions must be taken as an indication of Labor's realization of its inability to successfully resist the onslaught of the employers without projecting its organized economic power into the political arena.

Not until labor becomes fully conscious of its inherent political strength and begins to struggle for power in the state, will it be looked upon as a factor to be reckoned with in present-day capitalist society.

Notwithstanding the provincialism of the American labor movement some notable contributions have been made to its literature. Most of the studies have come from economic departments of universities where teachers prepared text books (Carlton, Groat, Hoxie) or where graduate students chose for their doctoral dissertations special features of the Labor movement (Wisconsin under Commons, Johns Hopkins under Hollander, and Barnett, Columbia under Seligman and Seager).

Dictionary of Labor Affairs

To the several worth-while monographs we must now add the very useful labor encyclopedia compiled by Waldo N. Browne and recently brought out under the title "What's What in the Labor Movement" (B. W. Huebsch, 578 pp., $4.00). The compiler designates the volume as a dictionary of labor affairs and labor terminology, but it is much more than that. Extensive historical treatment is given to certain subjects and others are very lucidly interpreted for the layman.

Those who will use the volume will probably think of some subjects or terms which were omitted. Labor has such broad ramifications that it is hard to tell where its "terms" end. In a general sense it embraces all fields of social, political and economic endeavor. The line must be drawn somewhere, and the place where it is drawn in such compilations depends on the compilers.

That Mr. Browne has combed the field well is shown by the inclusion of the "spitpon philosopher" and his up-to-dateness is discerned in the reference to "Lusker" and "Lusking" and to the Socialist Party as "the moderate and constitutional wing of American Socialism." On the other hand, such terms as "Slack," "Deportations," "Joint Board of Sanitary Control" are omitted.

Finds Few Inaccuracies

The reviewer is reluctant to criticise the book. He must, however, mention a few inaccuracies which crept into the volume:

1. The split in the Russian Social-Democracy occured in 1903 not in 1905.

2. The Russian Bolsheviks would deny the allegation that they have discarded "some of the most important tenets of scientific Socialism." In fact, they maintain, that they are the true exponents of Marxian Socialism, and that their policies were dictated by Marxian precepts.

3. It is not correct to say that the left wing elements in the various Socialist movements opposed parliamentarism per se. The left wings were organized, in part, because of a reaction against too great an emphasis on parliamentary activity, rather than for a negation of it.

4. No reference is made under the Communist International to the 21 points, altho. the 1920 Congress is discussed. A cross-reference is, however, given to "Lenin's 21 Conditions" and we also find it under "Twenty-one Articles of Faith." As a matter of fact, the conditions of admission promulgated by the 2nd Congress, were always referred to in this country as "21 Points" and never under the above-mentioned titles.

5. The International Working Union of Socialist parties, sometimes called the Vienna International, is referred to as the 2½ International. The recent attempt to organize the syndicalist and anti-political revolutionary groups, is referred to as the 4th International.

6. The first Debs case would be looked for under the A. R. U. strike and it should have been listed under that head.

Compilation Meritorious Work

The reviewer was astonished not to find Bliss' Encyclopedia of Social Reforms, still a useful reference volume, among the references of the compiler. The articles about the Labor movement in other countries are not complete and some important countries are altogether omitted.

The compilation is a meritorious work and a distinct contribution to labor literature. Every student of the Labor movement will want to have the volume among his reference books.

THIRD CONGRESS OF C. I. THESES AND RESOLUTIONS

The publication of all theses and resolutions of the Third Congress of the Communist International held June 22nd—July 12th, 1921, has been long overdue.

The Literature Department of the Workers Party offers now an attractive volume of 200 pages, containing all official decisions of the most important conclave in the history of the rejuvenated International.

Every member of the Workers Party should obtain a copy of this booklet for study and future reference.

Anyone interested in the progress of the revolutionary movement thruout the world will want to have this documentary account of the work of the last Congress.

The decisions of the Third Congress reflect the changes which have taken place in the revolutionary struggles of the various countries. The reading of the Theses and Resolutions dealing with principles and tactics reveals the close scrutiny which the delegates gave to all the burning questions in our movement. The analysis of conditions prevailing in the various countries and the instructions given to the parties shows, that the Third International is bringing the different national movements into a unified system of revolutionary thought and action and that a truly international party is being fashioned out of hitherto existing independent groups.

The material contained in the volume deals with the international situation and the problems arising out of it, tactical considerations of party progress in various countries, structure of communist parties, relation with Red Trade Union International and co-operative movements, work among women and young people and an evaluation of the position and work of the Russian Communist Party. The report of the Executive Committee and its famous "GO TO THE MASSES" manifesto are also included.

Altogether the volume is indespensable to every student of the revolutionary working-class movement and our Literature Department will gladly dispatch it post haste to any address upon receipt of fifty cents.—A. T.

An interesting indication of the extent of Soviet Russia's foreign relations is to be found in the current issue of the "Russian Information and Review," issued by the Russian Trade Delegation in London.

It gives a list, dated Dec. 1, 1921, of the countries where Soviet Russia has plenipotentiary missions, war prisoners' commissions, special missions and trade delegations.

This list is continually growing larger, but it has not yet been increased, in any particular, by the addition of the name of the United States of America. The complete list is as follows:

PLENIPOTENTIARY MISSIONS:

GERMANY: Plenipotentiary Representative, Krestinsky. Assistant, Pashukanis. Secretary, Brodovsky.

LATVIA: Plenipotentiary Representative, Ganetsky. Assistant, Alexandri. Secretary, Kliavin. Libau Consul, Zhengovsky.

LITHUANIA: Chargé d'Affaires, Sander.

FINLAND: Chargé d'Affaires, Chernykh. Secretary, Korinets.

ESTHONIA: Plenipotentiary Representative, Litvinov. Assistant, Stark. Secretary, Shenshev.

POLAND: Plenipotentiary Representative, Karakhan. Assistant, Obolensky. Secretary, Lorens.

TURKEY: Plenipotentiary Representative, Aralov. Assistant, Mikhailov.

PERSIA: Plenipotentiary Representative, Rothstein. Secretary, Nikanovich.

AFGHANISTAN: Plenipotentiary Representative, Raskolnikov. Secretary, Rosenberg.

BOKHARA SOVIET REPUBLIC: Plenipotentiary Representative, Yurenev. Secretary, Bodrov.

KHIVAN SOVIET REPUBLIC: Plenipotentiary Representative, Byk. Secretary, Oskolskaya.

ARMENIA, GEORGIA, AND AZERBAIDJAN: Plenipotentiary Representative, Legran. Secretary, Schiffers. Consuls at Baku and Batum.

WAR PRISONERS' COMMISSION:

AUSTRIA: Chairman, Bronsky. Secretary, Huber.

SPECIAL MISSIONS:

CHINA: Plenipotentiary Extraordinary, Paikes.

FAR EASTERN NEGOTIATIONS AT DAIREN: Plenipotentiary Extraordinary, Markhlevsky. Secretary, Vilensky.

TRADE DELEGATIONS:

GREAT BRITAIN. Chairman, Krassin. Assistant, Berzin. Secretary, Klishko.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA: Chairman, Mostovenko. Secretary, Shutko.

ITALY: Chairman, Vorovsky. Assistant, Tikhmenev. Secretary, Strauyan.

NORWAY: Chairman, Mikhailov. Secretary, Zaretskaya.

SWEDEN (Centrosoyus Delegation): Chairman, Kerzhentsev. Assistant, Heller. Secretary, Simanovsky.

Let the demand grow for the opening of trade relations with Soviet Russia.

Let the demand grow for the complete and unqualified recognition of the Russian Soviet Republic by the United States of America.

They Beg For BREAD!

There are 15,000,000 people in the famine region in Russia. Starvation stares them in the face. They are exposed to the horrors of foulness and filth, bitter cold, disease and hunger! Death is taking its steady toll. Every time the clock ticks some suffering man, woman or child topples over dead. Their tortured, shriveled bodies cover the naked wastes of Russia.

Can you witness this suffering without raising a hand to help? Do you know that thousands are rushing to the aid of these suffering millions? A vast relief army is being mustered in New York City at the following stations 83 East 4th Street, 61 Canal Street, 230 East Broadway, 356 East 81st Street, 1403 Fifth Avenue, 240 East 23rd Street, 257 East 10th Street, 1347 Boston Road, 226 Roebling Street, 10 Siegel Street, 1883 Madison Street, 229 Sackman Street, Room 104. Enlist as a recruit for this city-wide drive.

These comrades will scour the city and appeal for the help of their friends, neighbors and fellow-workers with the slogan: "Give up a meal for starving Russians."

Saturday, March 4, will be HUNGER SATURDAY, and a vast sum will be rolled up by the workers of New York City on that day of self-sacrifice.

Join and help!

Child Education

The three great bulwarks of the capitalistic system are the church, the press, and the school; and the greatest of these is the school, for it is here that is fashioned the endless stream of recruits that supports the other two.

It would be foolhardy of us to expect that the school of the present order would do other than prepare our youth to accept and support the economic system now in vogue, and as long as these schools accomplish this—and they do accomplish it—we who hope for a new and better social order certainly have our work cut out for us. In our efforts to fashion a new world, it is but natural that we should turn to the oppressed and look for support in factory and mill; but those who are to live in the new world are now in the schools, and it should be our greatest concern to find out whether they are being prepared to live in a different world from the one we now have.

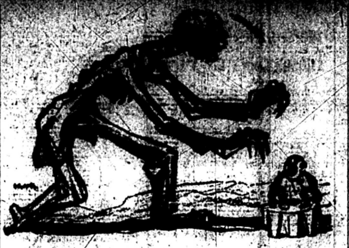
Among the workers there are many who oppose in a negative way the system of education followed in our public schools, but few indeed are they who have inquired into the nature of this institution sufficiently to enable them to see its danger, and to recognize the importance of its relation to the Labor movement.

We shed copious tears at the thought of little children in the southern cotton mills, but are supremely indifferent to the millions shut up in those jails which we call school houses—veritable slave factories where every act and thought of the child is prescribed for it and where it is taught that it is more blessed to believe than to think.

The workers of this country early recognized the need of education for the young, and fought valiantly until they secured free schools for their children. And having secured the schools they concerned themselves not at all about the thing to be taught in them or the manner in which it was to be taught. It certainly is amazing that they can now look on with indifference at what the schools are doing to their children. Is it accident or design that the thousands of "graduates" year after year are of one pattern, as from the same mould, all equally crippled in will, in initiative, in the power or desire to think for themselves? Denied self-activity, told what to do and what to think, is it any wonder that they develop no power of judgement, and yield to the greatest pressure, the majority? Is there not a monotonous sameness about them, in manner, in thought, in belief—and are they not fit grist for the capitalistic mill? Is it not their willingness to accept without investigation that enables the enemy press to exert its baneful influence? Could the sacerdotal soporifics of theologians and the lies of editors influence a public capable of weighing evidence and forming judgment?

Sooner or later the workers will have to concern themselves with the vital question of child education. The revolutionary movement is at the core an educational movement. You cannot build a new world out of material that is almost too rotten to live in the present one. There can be no free society until the people are capable of living in freedom, and the schools of today are certainly not doing anything to develop a people capable of conceiving or making a free world.

Recognizing the importance of this question, "The Worker" hereafter will publish weekly articles dealing with the subject of child education. The purpose of these articles will be to acquaint readers with the danger that lurks in the public school system, and to enlighten them regarding the modern educational movement which shows much signs of growth in Europe and America—a movement based on the free development of the child by permitting freedom to express himself, to experiment, and to form his judgment based on the result of his own experiences.



So terrible are the results of capitalism's misrule with its destruction and stoppage of production that the Hunger Spectre stalks thro every nation. Even the overfed parasite occasionally glimpses it as Bill Gropper shows above.

Woman's Day, 1922

The war brought the problem of women in industry to the front. With the increasing economic insecurity of the male worker, with the task of supporting a family by the labor of the male becoming ever more difficult, the influx of women into the ranks of the wage-earners has been a rapid one for the last two decades.

With it came the demand for equal suffrage—the middle class interpretation of sex equality.

When millions of men were withdrawn from peaceful pursuits and set at the work of destruction in 1914 the gaps in the ranks of the industrial workers were filled by women.

Unorganized, many of them deluded into hating their male competitors for the job more than they hate the exploiter as a result of the "militant feminism" preached by bourgeois leaders, they are to-day an easy prey for the low-wage, open shop employer.

The task of the class-conscious workers is to show to the woman in industry that her problem is the problem of the whole working-class and that it cannot be solved by the mere abolition of sex inequality—that will-o'-the-wisp followed by the idle females with more leisure than brains.

This is the message that must be carried to the working women of America on International Women's Day—March 8th.

The Big Difference

France, "the cradle of liberty," the home of pristine capitalist democracy, has invaded Russia, killed its best sons, ruined its crops, devastated its country, and starved its children in order to force the workers and peasants to pay back the old Czarist debts. These are the debts contracted by the Czar for the purpose of enslaving the Russian masses. The Soviet leaders have been branded as thieves and scoundrels because they openly stated that they saw no reason for paying the debts incurred by the Czar's rule of the knout and dungeon.

Now, capitalist France, thru the mouth of M. Loucheur, former Minister of the Liberated Regions, comes across with a proposal which is most astonishing in view of his motherland's violently persistent interest in the inviolability of contracts. At the banquet of the Industrial, Commercial, and Agricultural Associations of France he said: "I say plainly that I believe we never will be able to pay a sou to America. I say it because there are Americans here who, I hope, will cable my words across seas. We never can pay the fifteen billion francs we owe America, with the added interest. America has all the gold, and we never could pay in goods on account of the customs barriers raised by the United States itself."

There is more truth than poetry in the above statement. This is plain talk and interesting talk at that. But it forces us to ask several questions. Why is it that France who is so insistent on Soviet Russia paying her the Czar's debts is so anxious to refuse to pay her debts to America? It must be remembered that the Soviets did not borrow any money from France and that the present French government did contract the debt she owes the United States. Apparently this is another case of capitalist honesty yelling for help.

Why is it that when Soviet Russia balks at paying French capitalists money she never borrowed from them all the imperialist hounds of hell are unleashed at her throat? And why is it that when France refuses to pay debts she owes, the American army is not thrown in, her Premier is not branded as a scoundrel, and her country is not invaded? Why is it dishonest for the Soviets to refuse to pay the debts they don't owe and for France perfectly honest to leave unpaid the money she does owe?

Where is the difference? There is a big difference. In the one case the controversy is between a working-class government and a capitalist government in the other the issue is between two imperialist governments. We can rightly amend the old adage to read, "There is always honor among thieves." Whenever the workers hit the capitalists in the heart—their pocketbook—they commit an unpardonable sin, an irretrievable crime, and the most infamous cruelty is visited upon them. But when capitalist governments have a falling out it invariably turns out to be a "problem of finance" or at worst a war for democracy in which millions of workers are maimed and slaughtered in order to shift columns in their exploiters' balance sheet.

The whole debt problem brings to light the fundamental conflict of class interests and the inevitability of war while the capitalists rule and ruin. Far be is from us to counsel America's sending an army to collect its debts from France. Nor do we advocate a blockade to starve the French children. But we would like to have American workingmen think over the why and wherefore of France getting different treatment from the United States than she accorded Russia. The question is especially pertinent when we remind ourselves that Soviet Russia doesn't owe France a cent and that the American workingmen have paid in billions of dollars and hundreds of thousands of killed and wounded to help save the hide of the French capitailsts. Let's think and think hard on this. We have nothing to lose, a whole lot to learn, and still more to gain.

Still at It

The Progressive Labor World, of Philadelphia, is one of those subsidized, money-controlled labor sheets that claims to be "Published in the Interests of Labor Organizations."

This probably explains why one of its leading editorials is entitled, "Good-bye, International," and why much good space is wasted in an effort to prove that the workers of the world, especially those of Soviet Russia, have given up singing this song.

No one will deny that the "International" is being sung today by more millions of aspiring workers than ever before in the history of the world. The editorial in question will only help bring to the attention of more workers, still steeped in ignorance, the fact that there is such a song. And soon they will also be singing it.

that [illegible] and have worked in some twelve different countries including the U. S. A. I haven't had time to study good English or push a pen but have had time to push my fist into the nose of a few scabs.

My last act in the battle line was in Newport, Ky., and I stayed on the job night and day. I was sent into the Newport mill to get a few facts about the inside which I done and delivered the same to union headquarters.

In Charge of Machine Guns

When I entered the mill office Mr. Andrews himself (superintendent of the mill. Ed. note) shook my hand and asked me if I was an oversea man. I admitted I had spent three years, nine months in the Canadian army which I am now ashamed of. Then I was asked about a machine-gun. I here want to say that I am an expert machine-gun man and I showed the chief of the mill guards that I knew my business.

Then I was escorted around the plant and shown seventeen machine-guns set in different places, all from a point where they could murder the workers best. Then I was told by Chief Grant that I would be given charge of the machine-gun squad and that I would be paid the sum of eight dollars per day for murdering my fellow workers; that I had the backing of Mr. Andrews' money and also the backing of Governor Morrow who has become famous thruout the south as the capitalists friend and property protector of said capitalist.

Told to Shoot to Kill

I was told to shoot to kill and if I killed certain men I would be paid extra for the job. I went to work at once as captain of the machine-gun squad and the troops that were there were sent home at once, and Captain Grant, the Chicago gunman, was told to take charge of the job.

The Battle Begins

So the fun started. The first shot was fired by Slim Murphy from Chicago, a gunmen, who was shipped in by the company. The shots were from a machine-gun stationed on a platform running out from the mill to a tank and just above Captain Grant's office were sixteen other machine-guns and a number of smaller arms which refused to fire as someone had monkeyed with them. The gun on the platform would never have fired but it was near impossible to get at it without tipping everything off.

The Workers Defend Themselves

The first shots being fired by the company the workers were forced to defend themselves which they did very nicely. When Captain Grant with his hands full of scab-herders found he had been tricked in some way you should have heard him holler for help which was very easy to get as he had only to admit to Mr Andrews that the job was too big for him.

Then Mr. Andrews called on his good friend, Governor Morrow, and the help was rushed across from Covington in the shape of our armored tanks and the state guard from that city.

State Troops Shot Up-Town

They came thru Newport shooting wild, knocking down women and children and sapping men on the head with rifle butts who were bothering no one

Intended to Burn Strikers Homes

The next day their brave leader Major Denhard ordered the guards to move the families out of the strike zone as he expected to burn their homes. I wonder why this brave leader of the scab herders refused to burn the strikers alive, I guess he did not want to be bothered with the odor of frying meat.

Must we support an army to kill us because we ask for work and enough wages to live on?

Let us all get together and support the army that fights for a chance to live.

Yours for direct Action,
MACHINIST.

The Worker has the name and address of the writer of the above letter but for reasons that should be obvious we withold it. Surely it is a human document and convincing in its very simplicity. It is a page from the life of a fighter in the far-flung battle line of labor, just the tale of a few incidents in the daily struggle of which the theoretician knows so little and of which he finds it so hard to learn.

It dispels pretty well, we think, attacks on men and women whose only demand is for more bread are the acts of men whose passions are whipped to a white heat by the struggle.

Capitalism's brutality is a coldly calculated thing. Let the counter-offensive of the workers be just as cool and well planned.

UNION SIGNS AWAY RIGHTS

The Bricklayers, Masons and Plasterers' International Union of America has signed a decree prohibiting the restriction of the amount of labor each workman shall perform in a day, making it unlawful for members of the union to refuse to handle material turned out by non-union workmen and prohibiting them from acting in concert to help or injure any manufacturer.

Soviet Delegates To Leave if Bullied; Will Accept No Dictation at Genoa

Murder Chief Is Appointed Haitian Ruler

(By the Federated Press)

WASHINGTON. — Senator Walsh of Montana, by securing the adoption in the senate of a resolution calling upon President Harding to disclose both the credentials and the instructions given to Gen. John H. Russell, of the Marine Corps who is about to become "high commissioner" and actual dictator in Haiti, has exploded a political mine under the administration which may have very serious consequences.

The Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society has issued a statement here, quoting the Washington Post, the official organ of the president, to the effect that Gen. Russell "will have in effect plenary authority over all the affairs of Haiti, both civil and military, including the marine forces and the gendarmerie of Haiti, and of the United States legation, which will be in the immediate custody of the charge d'affaires."

The Independence Society declares that such an appointment is unprecedented in American history, and that the creation of a "Pooh-bah" over a formerly free and independent republic whose technical independence is still recognized by the United States is without warrant by congress, which is still investigating the American occupation.

Killings Were Indiscriminate

"It is significant," says this protest, "that Gen. Russell alone among the various commanders in Haiti since 1915, has not yet been called on to appear before the senate committee for examination." During his administration in Haiti, the illegal corvee or forced road labor existed; indiscriminate killings of untried prisoners by marine officers took lace; native Haitians were imprisoned and tortured when no harge had been made against them; artial law was declared and enced to prevent criticism of the cupation; the illegal plebiscite by hich a universally opposed constitution was fraudulently imposed upon the Haitian people, was carried out under his command; the ttempted coercion of the Haitian resident in 1920 to secure special nancial privileges for the National ity Bank was carried on with his ctive official participation."

Following the adoption of Walsh's solution of inquiry as to the pres's sending of a military and il dictator to Haiti in the person his seasoned offender, Senator of Utah, offered a resolution nding by what authority and what terms and conditions the Department is seeking to are a $14,000,000 loan for Haiti, declaring that since such a loan ot desired by the Haitian people is believed by them to be unanted and illegal and contrary he best interests politically and nomically of Haiti and her peo—and the floating of such a loan forbidden.

Senator Pomerene, one of the te committee which recently be a whitewash of the Wilson and ding regime's record in Haiti and to Domingo, objected to King's lution, even after it was shorn criticism and of the clause for the loan.

Minor Starts Tour Mch. 19 for "Daily"

Robert Minor, the world's most famous labor cartoonist and journalist, starts on a nation-wide speaking tour March 19th.

His first appearance will be at the Central Opera House, 205 East 67th Street, New York City, at the Paris Commune Mass Meeting of the Workers Party of Greater New York. He will speak on "The Lessons of the Paris Commune."

The tour is being arranged as part of the big campaign for "A Daily Worker." It will be conducted under the slogan of "Make the Worker a Daily," it being recognized that this is the greatest need of the workers today.

Other meetings planned for Minor after the New York demonstration will be the following: Newark, N. J., March 20; Paterson, 21; Jersey City, 22; Trenton, 23; Reading, Pa., 24; Baltimore, Md., 25; Philadelphia, 26. Early in April he will start a trip west.

Great enthusiasm is being shown by the Workers Party membership in preparation for these Minor meetings, and it is expected that large audiences will turn out everywhere.

An Attempt at Division?

It can be taken for granted that the coal operators, in refusing to enter into conference with the miners know what they are doing and that they have asked and been promised the full support of the government in their plans for eliminating the United Mine Workers of America from the coal-fields.

The latest development—Frank Farrington's announcement that the Illinois district would open separate negotiations for a wage agreement unless the national office forces a joint conference before March 1st—is one that may mislead many of the progressive elements who have no use for John L. Lewis but who do not know that Farrington is the same type. The stand of the Illinois district for Howat and Farrington's fight in his behalf does not mean that Farrington is a radical or even mildly progressive.

He is merely a politician and was forced to back Howat in order to hold his office of District President.

His latest proposal smacks a little too much of dividing the forces of the coal-miners in the face of the enemy to suit us. Illinois is the largest district controlled by the United Mine Workers of America and it is entirely probably that the operators are willing to make concessions there that would result in the Illinois miners staying on the job and furnishing coal while the rest of the organization went down to defeat. Illinois could then be picked off at leisure.

It hardly seems possible that the membership of the Illinois district will be a party to this betrayal after their striking demonstration of solidarity with the Kansas rebels but such proposals on the eve of a nation-wide conflict cannot help but create dissension and weaken the front.

Senator Seidel, socialist, presided at Albany the other day and The Call went the limit in relating the occurance. It said he handled the gravel just as well as any other politician which is proof that the workers can run the industries. Be of good cheer, Comrades!

United Labor Front Dodged at Chicago

By ARNE SWABECK

The delegates attending the conference, called by the authorized committee of the sixteen standard railroad unions, on February 20, in Chicago, who anticipated fusion into a single labor party pledged to independent political action, were disappointed. It produced little in the way of positive results.

Thruout the sessions this question was skillfully avoided by the dominant majority,—the heads of the big international unions, of which some were present in person and others represented by their devoted lieutenants.

They Spoke About It

All spoke of the unity of labor's forces, each using his own interpretation, but when seriously approached or when definite lines of unity was proposed by some of the "honest-to-god" delegates, the majority block remained unshakably silent. They had no authority to act and could not commit their organizations.

Preachers and rabbis, speaking on behalf of the absent "public," con-

Credit of Half Billion to be Asked by Russia; Soviet Emissary States No Rongh Stuff Will Go; Will Tolerate No Capitalist Clique of Nations

Soviet Russia's representatives at Genoa will attempt to keep the discussions centered on the economic needs of Europe and will not raise any purely political issues, according to the instructions made public at Moscow.

They will oppose the League of Nations or any other capitalistic grouping of nations.

They will agree, in return for a minimum loan of $500,000,000 to supply Europe with the raw materials so badly needed for a revival of industry and they are instructed to insist that no obstacles be placed in the way of the fullest German co-operation with the Soviet Government which is now in close communication with Berlin.

The Russian delegates are not going to Genoa with a chip on their shoulders, rather they are to make necessary concessions without protest, but if the Allied governments attempt intimidation they will be answered by the withdrawal of the Soviet delegation.

With the United States out of it, the conference, in the absence of Russia, would be an empty farce.

It is only from France that an arrogant attitude is expected as the British policy is fairly settled.

Tchitcherin will probably head the delegation and will insist on payment for the damage to Russian industry and the loss of life due to invasions which the Russians will prove by documentary evidence to have been financed by the allies.

It is believed that this will more [illegible] any claim put forward by France and England for the sums loaned the Czar's and the Kerensky government.

Sir George Paish, the unofficial spokesman of the British bank-interests, commenting on Russian participation at Genoa, said:

"The attendance of Russian representatives at Genoa, whatever their plans, is much to be desired. It will enable the nations to discover exactly where the Russian Government now stands in the matter of permitting free movement of trade and capital. It will enable the Russians to obtain at first hand information she needs concerning the willingness of foreign nations to assist the Russian people with credits.

"The Russians will be told at Genoa that credit is only possible where there is confidence, and confidence is possible only when a nation adopts a policy which experience and not merely theory has proved to be sound and workable."

That the Genoa conference is the center of interest in England at present, overshadowing even the coalition, is evidenced by the reply of Austin Chamberlain, governmental leader in the House of Commons, to a question on the government policy towards recognition of the Soviet government. The house leader stated that all depends upon the outcome of the Genoa conference.

Political circles in London express the belief that the American refusal to take part in the conference has seriously weakened the influence of Lloyd George and a member of influential organs, including the Northcliffe press, blame him for the American attitude.

Irish Rebels Do Their Bit for National Defense

At the Irish Booth at the National Defense Committee Bazaar—March 22-2[illegible] will be displayed the red ensign hoisted over the Dublin Council Chambers when the building was seized recently by the Dublin unemployed headed by Liam O'Flaherty and Jack McIntire—both well known here.

The flag arrived in yesterday's mail with instructions to raffle it off for the Communist class-war prisoners.

The Irish Branch challenges all other branches to a beauty contest and has already entered Mrs. Pat McClellan, "Bunny" Brannigan and Mrs. Tom O'Flaherty as their choice for the prise money. It is planned to place all candidates in the Irish Booth—which will be enclosed for the purpose—and charge 25 cents admission to all who desire to thus help the class-war prisoners and at the same time compare the various national types of pulchritude.

The Irish have real money to bet on their candidates.

With America unrepresented the French will probably now be able to prevent any consideration of treaties and reparations by the conference.

Without American aid the opinion here is that the Allies must either master all their resources for a new attack on Russia or admit her to the family of nations with full rights and privileges.

It is admitted that unless American assistance, moral and financial, is pledged, that a new war would quite possibly result in domestic disaster for the nations undertaking it.

The Irish Workers' Future

Irish Labor leaders appear to have definitely resolved to work within the orbit of the "Free State." This decision on their part may be questioned from the standpoint of expediency and strategy by the working-class.

It is well known that the directing personnel of both pro and contra-treaty men and women are, with one or two exceptions, either active or passive supporters of the existing social and economic order, and it is, accordingly, a moot point whether the working class could more speedily and purposefully achieve its ultimate destiny under the bourgeois form of government which either group, in control, are pretty certain to inaugurate.

There are many persons who hold to the belief that the support of the workers to the Republican wing in the critical days following December 6th, would have been a correct and logical tactic.

The reasons for their failure so to act will undoubtedly shortly be made ferred their blessing upon the conference, its aims and purposes, followed by broken down A. F. of L. leaders, who had been rewarded for their "faithful" service in the labor movement with comfortable political jobs, social patriots speaking for the Socialist Party, and farmers.

With deep emotion, Chairman Johnston, International President of the machinists, said in his best salvation army style:

"If ye have faith even as a grain of mustard ye could move mountains."

Calls It "Unwise"

True, they were all out to "lay the foundation of a great movement, having for its purpose the restoration of our government to the people."

But, as a chairman Johnston put it, "it would be unwise to even consider the formation of a new political party. Let us coalesce and work thru existing organizations."

"And so, the conference resolved to issue another puny call for labor to "punish its enemies and reward its friends."

The present economic crisis and its attendant terrible unemployment is the whip that is being used to force the working masses into submission in the general attack to destroy unionism.

Organized capital has become aggressive in its fight to demolish the barriers set up by the workers against the violent unrush of the capitalist forces.

The courts, the police—the heavy artillery of the state has been brought into play. The guns have roared in West Virginia, in the New England textile districts, in the packing house centres in Newport, Ky., and elsewhere, at the dictate of the masters.

Labor Is in Retreat

The old method of bribing labor officials has become almost superfluous because labors' forces are on the retreat everywhere.

Yet the rank and file is slowly awakening and becoming restless. Here and there voices can be heard, demanding that something must be done.

All this is enough to make the labor leaders, who call themselves progressive and are able to sense that something is in the air, sit up and take notice. Their organizations are at stake, and what is more, their leadership is at stake.

In order to forestall the rank and file taking the initiative themselves and following the more conscious and determined amongst them into aggressive action against the oppressive conditions, which perhaps would result in real unity of the working-class, these leaders hasten to show that they are on guard and only looking out for the best interests of the workers while they take care not to go any farther than the safety of their jobs demand

Says Coalition Is Inevitable

The fusion of all labors' forces into a single American Labor Party, each retaining its autonomy and the right to criticize the programs and tactics of the others, is inevitable.

The conference could not agree on a program or declaration of principles. It chose to reaffirm the old "glorious" document The Declaration of Independence and agree upon its various grievances, set forth in a document called an "Address to the American People."

The Plan of Action adopted by the conference, shows a little more sign of vitality. It recommends that all forces represented in the conference organize joint committees within each state, congressional district, county and municipality—that they unite for the purpose of securing the nomination and election of senators and representatives to Congress, etc., in the coming election of 1922, who are pledged to the interests of the producing classes and to the principles of genuine democracy in agriculture, industry and government.

Demonstrate Failure Again

It provides for a general committee of fifteen who shall co-operate and assist the local organizations in the coming election, is empowered to employ organizers and publish literature and shall call a conference on the second Monday of December.

To that conference are invited all such organizations, bodies and persons as are in accord with the purposes of the conference.

The joint committees in the several states have free hands to support any candidate they may see fit, regardless of what party he belongs to, if he pledges himself to the interests of the producing classes, in the coming election. Something that all candidates do.

This will mean that all the organizations who are urged to unite for this purpose will do about the same thing which they have for so long attempted to do with no success at all, and the rank failure of such policies will undoubtedly be clearly demonstrated at the time the next conference meets.

Famine Becomes Worse!

The famine has spread in Soviet Russia. Cannibalism has raised its head. Stories—authentic stories—corroborated in their fearful details, have reached the world. Two women in Ravol Rugatschev have eaten the corpses of two children and lured to their hut an old woman, whom they killed and ate. In another village, corpses have been taken from the graves, cut up and eaten. In another, a peasant woman gave her children the corpse of her thirteen year old daughter to eat.

All news from Soviet Russia is most disheartening, when one thinks of the misery that the Russian workers, men, women and their children are passing thru. Starvation has increased. More and more millions are drawn into the maelstrom of death from which there seems to be no rescue. The bitter winter that has harrassed Soviet Russia has added fresh hundreds of thousands to the death toll. Death—Death, everywhere!

The roads are covered with the corpses of those who wandered about aimlessly in search for food. The cemeteries are filled with the uncovered bodies of those who blindly sought their last resting place there, in the hope that either salvation or death would come.

Strewn about the graveyards, they present a gruesome sight—a gruesome indictment of the system under which we live. A system, in which those who control the food and credit of the world allowed this misery to grow on a helpless people, refusing them aid, denying them assistance proclaiming a categorical NO to their appeals, their cries for food—UNTIL IT WAS TOO LATE!

Dr. Nansen is right, a thousand times right, in his denunciations of the capitalist governments of the world who are responsible for the famine in Soviet Russia.

He is a thousand times right when he states that it could all have been avoided if the greed of capitalist governments had not prompted them to place politics before humanity.

He was a million times right when he said that at last when they have consented to give—their help will arrive too late to save millions from certain death.

And the workers were ten million times right when immediately they heard of the famine in Soviet Russia, they began their collections for the starving workers and peasants of Soviet Russia.

Workers of America! Farmers of America! Working men and women, children of America! What do you intend doing to drive famine from Soviet Russia? What will you do to give the Russian children food and milk? IT IS UP TO YOU!

Taxes to Relieve Russia

The Moscow Soviet has created a regular fund for famine relief by imposing special taxes on industrial enterprises, proprietors of confectionery shops, cafes, restaurants, telephone subscribers, concerts, lectures, theatres, etc

International Workers' Relief

The International Workers' Relief Committee will establish a transportable factory in Russia. An American car will be changed into a locksmith's and turner's shop, operated by electricity. It will turn out horseshoes, tools and implements.

With a technical staff of international representatives, the car will proceed to Siberia, where it will carry out repair work in exchange for grain, which will be sent to the famine district.

Stamping shops are being opened in which empty tin cases are being manufactured into cups, plates, spoons, etc. There is a shop at Bogorow, employing sixty workers. 10,000 cases can be handled daily.

The Workers International Relief Committee asks organizations in other countries to furnish it with materials, to make up the articles above named.

Technical Schools for To-Morrow

Realizing that the future of Soviet Russia depends to a great extent upon the development of proper technical skill for the execution of the immense tasks that confront the country, the Soviet Government is making the greatest efforts to open and maintain some technical training schools for boys.

As these schools cannot continue their work without a supply of materials, a special appeal is being sent to the western world for the supply of tools, machines and materials.

One Hour's Pay Per Week

Chicago has begun a big campaign with the slogan: An hour's pay per week. Collections are to be made in the shops and unions, thus bringing the whole industrial population of Chicago into the range of relief work.

The resolution of the Chicago Federation of Labor endorsing the campaign of "One hour's pay a Week" reads as follows:

"The Chicago Federation of Labor, in regular meeting assembled, fraternally requests that every affiliated organization bring this matter (Russian famine condition) to the immediate attention of its members and have them vote on a contribution of one hour's pay a week per member, to be used for relief of the famine sufferers of Russia. We would further recommend that all such contributions be sent to the Chicago Federation of Labor or to the local office of the Friends of Soviet Russia."

RAILROADS SPREAD LIES

The absolute falsity of the railroad company's claim that a cut in the wages of their employees is an essential preliminary to the reduction of freight rates which is being demanded by farmers and business men thruout the country, has been conclusively demonstrated by a statement made by the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees.

According to the statement, even if railway workers were to receive double their present wage rate, the increase would add less than one cent on the dollar to the present cost of each ton of freight. For every $100 worth of freight transported the value would total only $100.88.

"In 1914," the statement continues, "the average price per ton of all commodities transported by freight was $56. Wages increased for railroad workers during that period 80 cents per ton. And in 1919 had the increase to the railroad men been added to the price of commodities, the increase to the consumer would have been but 80 cents per ton on the average. Whereas the addition of other charges brought the average price per ton for commodities shipped by freight in 1914 from $56 up to $119 in 1919.

"The public will not be deceived in this matter, because it well knows that if railroad labor would work for nothing the railroad owners would still charge all that traffic would bear."

Bunking Society Women Easier than Scabbing for Ex-Pimp and Thug

BY THE FEDERATED PRESS

New York.—Alfred E. Lindsay, who fleeced New York society women out of about $1,000,000 and took the life savings of several women, according to Mrs. Laura Marling, in 1908 was pursuing the vocation of private detective, strikebreaker, and industrial spy, with offices at Forty-seventh street and Fifth avenue, New York City.

He went by the name of Post, Mrs. Marling told the district attorney's office, and even at that time specialized in preying on women.

Lindsay, who was arrested in a hotel in Philadelphia, is in jail here on charges of grand larceny, unable to provide $50,000 bail.

The employers and manufacturers and other business men whom he assisted in past years to break strikes and "teach labor its place," somehow have taken no interest in him since he got into the toils of the law.

GARY ON LABOR'S RIGHTS

To-day, when buncombe concerning the identity of interests of employer and employee, and the blissful conditions that will arise when they learn to "understand" and "cooperate" with each another, is so much in vogue among employers who are trying to put over the American Plan, and also, unfortunately, among labor leaders of a certain type, workers should be grateful to Judge Gary for the brutal frankness with which he sets forth the relative status of the capitalist and the worker as the capitalist really conceives it.

His latest utterance on the subject, made in the course of a statement regarding the stockholders of the United States Steel Corporation, rates labor as a passive tool of capitalism, without either human or industrial rights. Speaking of the capitalists he says:

"Their capital permits the existence, the activities and the success of the corporation. They properly may and ultimately will dictate the personnel, the governing rules, the policies, sales and purchases, extensions and improvements, rates of compensation and improvements, rates of compensation to employes * * * terms and conditions of employment and all other matters pertaining to the properties and business and management of the corporation. They (the stockholders) are entitled not only to a fair and reasonable return on their investment, but to all the net proceeds of the business."

ASK $500 PLEDGE OF MILK DRIVERS NOT TO JOIN UNION

After three months of hard fighting, with all the odds against them, and their own union heads refusing them support, about 5,000 of the milk wagon drivers who went on strike November 1 to resist the Companies' open shop drive, are still out.

It is reported that now the milk trust demands a deposit of $500 from any former striker who applies for work, to be held by the company as a guarantee that for one year he will not join a labor organization or participate in a strike.

In addition a deposit of $150 is required to guarantee the collection of accounts for milk sold on the route.

The Borden's Farm Product Company has started a yellow union in which representatives of the company are to sit upon every committee, and the workers are to have the privilege of successive appeals from little bosses to big bosses with the company president as the final authority.

[illegible] America never forgot this generosity and in return feels it her sacred duty to defend struggling peoples.

Of course, she chooses the subjects of her charity and very often fails to notice what she prefers to let go unseen and unheard. She would include here Russia, India, Ireland, Egypt, Haiti; she interprets these people as not having justifiable struggles, grouping them all as "rebels" (a very distasteful word in America) and consequently not deserving of consideration.

How did America repay the French people in 1871 when they struggled against their oppressors? We get a fine glimpse of this in a letter written by the International Workingmen's Association (the First International) to the citizens of the United States in 1871. It contains two stories—first, a reprint of an article by a bourgeois newspaperman, an honest observer who wrote what he saw. The second story is told by a member of the Paris Commune.

Mr. Robert Reid was the Paris correspondent for the London Daily Telegraph and the New York Herald. Very much excited over the daily murders and long lists of victims which Thiers was adding daily from among the Communards, Reid decided to ask the American and British ambassadors to intercede and try to bring peace. The British Ambassador could no nothing. (British imperialism had nothing to gain.) Mr. Reid then went to Mr. Washburne, the American, who received him very rudely. This was April 17th, one month after the establishment of the Commune. Washburne replied, "The men in Paris are rebels. Let them lay down their arms. If they refuse to, the moral responsibility will rest with them."

Historical irony! An American less than one hundred years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence telling an Englishman that the Parisians were "rebels" because they wanted to throw off the yoke of despotism!

Nor was Mr. Washburne merely a spectator of events and a passive believer in his own ideas and prejudices. On May 24th, he again met Mr. Reid, and in the course of their conversation, he said, "All who belong to the Commune and those that sympathize with them, will be shot." Mr. Reid's comment in his news story is, "I did not expect to hear this semi-officially from Mr. Washburne." He might very well have been surprised to hear these words from the representative of the greatest democracy of the world.

Had Mr. Washburne taken this attitude openly, the stigma that has remained attached to his name would probably not have been so great. But instead, he showed an entirely different point of view in his direct dealings with the Communards. To them he said that he deplored the fact that due to his position, he was unable to do as much as he would like to do for the Commune.

On May 24th, the same day that he told Mr. Reid that every member of the Commune and its sympathizers would be shot, he informed the Commune that every member and every man in the Federal Army would be saved.

He offered his intervention between the Versaillese and the Federals. The Comunards accepted the offer with the proviso that two months be given for preparation for the general election of a constituent assembly. It was assumed that he went ahead with his promise; that the Prussians were neutral.

But when the Communards wished to pass the gate where Prussians were stationed, they were prevented from doing so, much to their consternation. Further, his offer of intervention resulted in paralyzing the defense for two days, in spite of the fact that they were in a critical juncture.

This was due to the fact that they were led to believe that the Prussians would be neutral and would intercede between the Commune and the Versailles Government. The Commune tried to keep this fact as yet from becoming public; but, prematurely, the National Guard learned of this and, filled with confidence in Prussian neutrality, fled to their lines, there to surrender as prisoners.

What happened then is only too well known to history. The trust laid in the Prussians by the Guardsmen was abused: their sentries shot thousands of them and handed over other thousands to the Versailles Government. The Commune was destroyed and with it the aspirations of the proletariat of France.

The diplomatic representative of the American Republic served the revolutionary people of France ignobly. But it is clear to us to-day that Mr. Washburne was absolutely faithful to his own class which sent him to France.

The tragedy is that this was not to be the last time that America would be a party to duplicity. What will be America's final treatment of th Workers' Republic on the other side of the Atlantic?

Belated Repentance

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

After every debauch the toper resolves never again to be tempted by John Barleycorn. After every bloody sacrifice to Mars the unwilling and deluded devotees swear never again to be fooled when the war-god covers his armor with the white togs of peace, places an olive branch over his cauliflower ear, mounts his throne and declares that only armaments can prevent nations flying at one another's throts.

Will Irwin, the war correspondent, has written a book called "The Next War." It is a good book principally because the writer has used material gathered by the revolutionary writers and speakers who for the most part spent a considerable portion of their lives in jail for the reason that they did not wait until the war was over to point out the economic causes of war and its disastrous effects upon civilization.

The book will be read by and meet with the approval of thousands of people who joined the wolf-pack when the rulers sounded the battle-cry, and it will do much good altho it draws no conclusions except that war is a terrible thing and that with the latest improvemens in chemical warfare another world struggle would make of the earth a desert.

Will Irwin explains in detail the economic causes of war in general and of the last war in particular, but one searches in vain for a single sentence that would inform his readers that he knows that bankers, captains of industry and statesmen are caught in the mechanism of the capitalist system and forced relentlessly into advocacy of war. Perhaps this is too much to expect from so recent a convert to pacificism; after all it is only pacificism that the writer preaches.

The book is filled with a mass of evidence showing the wholesale destructiveness of modern warfare and the purely businesslike origins of the various patriotic slogans. I imagine that when the next war comes the mere possession of "The Next War" will be prima facie evidence of treason. It is written in an easy, journalistic style that makes reading it a pleasure, and the pictures, statistical tables and comparative charts are a veritable mine of information; it will make the most ignorant understand war and it will make them afraid of war, but it will not stop war as some enthusiastic reviewers have claimed.

NOTES IN BRIEF

Civil War in West Virginia. By Winthrop D. Lane. B. L. Huebsch. 125 pp. paper cover), 50 cents.

A descriptive account of the brave fight which the miners have been making for the right to organize and collectively defend their interests as wage workers. The author visited the coal region as a correspondent of the New York Evening Post and studied the situation at close range. He corroborates the miners in their contention that the powers of the state are on the side of the coal barons who are determined to root out unionism in that field at all costs.

West Virginia is an old stand-by in the manifestations of the class struggle in America. Its aggravated features will continue unless other labor unions support the miners in their struggle against the combined strength of the absentee mine-owners and the state authorities. The West Virginia miners have shown by their struggles and sacrifices that they are determined to clean out the hell-hole of capitalism which made their state famous. Will American labor give them a helping hand?

The Closed Shop. By Lamar T. Beman. H. W. Wilson Co. 197 pp. $1.80.

The Open Shop. A debate between Andrew Furuseth and Walter Gorden Merritt. H. W. Wilson Co., 47 pp. 50 cents

The first is a handbook in the Debaters' Series. Like the other volumes in this series, it is designed to aid debating teams in preparation of material and briefs for debates. The compiler has brought together expressions of opinions for and against the closed shop and has prepared a very exhaustive bibliography on the subject. The material is largely drawn from articles in the periodical press, altho some references are made to books and pamphlets dealing in whole or in part with the subject. Since only excerpts could be given, the reader will have to go back to the original articles and get a comprehensive resumé of the closed vs. the open shop question.

The debate which the Intercollegiate Socialist Society staged at the Lexington Opera House with President Furuseth of the Seamen's Union and Attorney Walter Gordon Merritt of the Industrial Rights League as participants, cannot be considered as a valuable contribution to the discussion of the subject.

At a time when a concerted attack is being made by the employers of the country against all the achievements of the labor unions during the past decade, a discussion on so burning a question should have resulted in something more than mere generalities. The significance of the open-shop movement, the forces back of the general anti union campaign, the part which the press, financial interests, Chambers of Commerce, and the state are playing in the present attack of the employers upon the workers should have been brought out during the debate.

Furuseth failed to do that, demonstrating again the inability of a pure and simple trade unionist to grasp the fundamentals of the class struggle. A Communist in place of Furuseth would have brought home to his audience the true meaning and extent of the open shop campaign against which the labor unions are now called upon to fight.

[illegible] School [illegible] Union Uses Police

The Lunchroom Workers branch of the Amalgamated Food Workers has been locked out at the Cafeteria in the Rand School and is picketing the place.

Despite the fact that the Rand School is a socialist institution, owned by the socialist party, financed and supported by the subscriptions of workers of all shades of opinion thruout the country, the aid of the police forces of capitalism has been secured by the Rand School, pickets have been slugged, stabbed and arrested, the services of a private detective agency—also run by socialists—have been obtained to "protect" the Rand School from the workers who built it and paid for it and the usual bunk about "the red menace" is being peddled not by the capitalist but by the "socialist" press; "socialist" lawyers have refused to defend the union members and the officialdom of the socialist party in New York is trying to create dissension between the cooks and waiters union of the American Federation of Labor and the Amalgamated Food Workers—two organizations that have long had a working agreement.

The Lunchroom workers state that they have always extended special consideration to the Rand School. Men have been laid off and disciplined to accomodate the management for complaints the union would have paid no attention from other concerns and all the organizers state that they would far rather deal with a purely capitalistic institution than with the Rand School management.

Last year the Rand School hired a manager formerly employed by the Thompson Restaurant Company, well-known for his slave-driving propensities, but he was unable to overcome the deficit resulting from the falling off in business altho gross receipts last year were $61,000.00 with wages approximating $15,000.00 or less than 25 per cent. of the receipts.

A scab shop figures that from 29 to 33 per cent. of the gross receipts must go for wages. The workers then submitted to a $2 decrease per week but this did not save the situation and the Cafeteria was closed to open up three weeks later with a new crew.

The old help applied for their jobs and were told the usual thing—that the Cafeteria was now under private management and that the Rand School had nothing to do with it. Capitalist concerns quite often change names and management to evade agreements with unions.

A conference was called attended by Charles Ervin, editor of The Call. His contribution to the discussion was a statement to the effect that he would attack mercilessly any union fighting another union.

The Lunchroom Workers were told that Silverman, the lessee—socialist and ex-restaurant proprietor—had a contract with the Waiters Union No. 1 of the American Federation of Labor but when the Amalgamated Food Workers interviewed the secretary of this union he expressed surprise that the Rand School had not settled with the Amalgamated. He also informed the committee from the Amalgamated that the executive board of Local No. 1 had passed a motion declaring that the entire matter must be left to the Rand School management for settlement.

The responsibility for subsequent events therefore rests solely upon the Rand School management and it is NOT a controversy between unions as The Call would like the public to believe.

The Amalgamated Food Workers, finding that no settlement was possible and that only the waiters employed by the new management were union members—where previously all help employed was organized—decided to picket the Rand School and did so.

The pickets were arrested and one hour after, the arrests Organizer Meyer, Secretary Obermeier, Organizer Rezac of the Hotel workers branch, and Hartman, secretary of the Lunch Room Workers Branch were beaten up in the corridor of the Rand School by gangsters secured by the management.

The Building Maintenance members of the Public Service Union, employed at the Rand School, have struck in sympathy with the Lunch Room Workers, and the action has been endorsed by the United Labor Council.

The reason for the stand taken by the management is clear. More profit can be made in a Cafeteria where only the waiters are organized than in a place where all employers belong to a union and enforce human working conditions.

The assaulted Food Workers have decided not to appear against the Rand School, and have decided not to use the capitalist courts in their fight.

The Rand School thus demonstrates that it is a capitalist and not a working-class institution; that it supports reaction as against revolution and is willing to use the capitalist government to fight unions based on industrial lines.

[illegible] YOUR [illegible] HUNGER AND THE RULE OF GOLD

TO WORKERS, [illegible] AND FRIENDS OF LABOR EVERYWHERE:

HUNGER [illegible] the ally of the oppressor.

HUNGER [illegible] New England [illegible] facts and figures [illegible] cost of production and profits.

THIS UNEQUAL STRUGGLE CENTERS IN THE PAWTUCKET VALLEY OF RHODE ISLAND

On January 23 and 24, 1922, 8,000 workers—HALF OF THEM WOMEN—left the mills in protest against a new reduction of wages which would force the average wage down to $17 a week of 54 hours. Since the week of Jan. 23 not a wheel has turned in 12 mills in 11 different villages of the PAWTUCKET VALLEY.

The combination of mill owners control the machinery of the State Government and caused the GOVERNOR to send armed militia into the peaceful PAWTUCKET VALLEY to intimidate the strikers. A delegation of strikers with affidavits proving abuse by these troops of women and old men went to the State House and Governor San Souci refused to see them.

These unfortunate workers never went on strike before. They lived herded like neglected cattle in dilapidated company houses under vile conditions. No running water except a big pump in a common back yard serving each group of overcrowded shacks. No sanitary drainage. The mill interests have prevented social legislation for women and children. Women work all night in the mills without legal restriction.

"THE BATTLE OF HUNGER AGAINST THE RULE OF GOLD

Thruout the Pawtuchet Valley the ranks of the strikers have remained unbroken. The workers are all enrolled under the banner of THE AMALGAMATED TEXTILE WORKERS OF AMERICA, and this union has established six community restaurants in as many towns, where two good meals are daily served the strikers. The AMALGAMATED also issues credit slips for groceries to those who require them. Special provision is made for the wants of the thousands of children, from food and clothing to medical attention.

The number the AMALGAMATED is feeding now, during the seventh week of this fight, is approximately 3,000 each day. This number will grow larger rapidly from now on, as the slender resources of these underpaid workers are becoming exhausted. The battle for a square deal for American textile workers gives every indication of being a long one.

Unless these workers get YOUR FINANCIAL SUPPORT hunger may defeat them and their absolutely just cause.

The Call's New Allies

"Foster League Communistic, Catholics say" announces The New York Call in its issue of March 6. Judging by the three line bank head we should say that in this particular instance The Call is greatly desirous of giving as much publicity as possible to the latest pronouncement of the National Catholic Welfare Council. As the Catholic church is the greatest foe of socialism and socialists in this country, and as The Call is an official organ of the Socialist Party some guileless persons may be somewhat puzzled by the eagerness which The Call displays to give publicity to the statements of those generally supposed to be its enemies.

To those who have been following with some interest the recent acrobatics of The Call management in its attempt to rally the labor unions to its support there is nothing mysterious in its sudden decision to line up with the clericals; for, be it known, the Call program and the Socialist Party program, unlike the program of the Trade Union Educational League, depends for its success upon winning over the trade-union bureaucracy by pointing out to it a more dangerous enemy.

The trade-union officials of the American movement are mostly of the Catholic faith and so the Call in the slimy manner so typical of all apostates prepares to raise the old cry of "For Cross and Country" against all who look with disfavor upon the coming alliance of national socialists, capitalistic labor-leaders and the militia of Christ.

There are a number of things we could say about a publication posing as the mouthpiece of the working-class which openly encourages the injection of the religious issue into the already divided labor movement of America but we believe our readers are able to make the proper deductions.

Giving the Game Away

The Cincinnati Times Star, whose editor and owner is closely related to Big Bill Taft of "God knows" and injunction fame, is out with a weighty pronouncement on the threatened coal strike in which the editor opines that the coal-operators in refusing to negotiate with the miners are going a bit too far.

He says:

> Radicals on the employing side have never explained how, if they get rid of the Gompers-Lewis type of union, they can escape contact with other types of labor organizations, less American and more dangerous to established institutions, which would take its place.

The thought strikes us that some of the established institutions to which a new and more militant type of unionism would be a menace are the open shop, the successful use of armed forces of the state in industrial disputes, the jailing and conviction of workers for activity in behalf of their class and other little diversions of the employing and financial interests. With these manifestations of imperialism at home the existing type of union officered by the individuals now in power, has demonstrated its inability to cope.

It is ineffective because it takes no cognizance of the changes that have taken place in industry and government in the last 30 years and is still trying to make workable a plan of organization and an ideology appropriate to a time when some remnants of democracy existed and when trustification of industry had not yet been accomplished.

We are inclined to believe that the Gompers-Lewis type of union will receive from now on considerably more support from the intelligent capitalist than it has in the past and that it will—indeed it is—looked upon by the ruling class in America much as is the "Christian" type of union in Europe.

John L. Lewis is no more revolutionary than Elbert H. Gary and Sam Gompers is no more radical than Elihu Root. This type of labor leader asks only that the employers allow them enough organization to satisfy their personal craving for power; if they get that they are well-satisfied to let the capitalists have everything else.

The bonus will be paid by a sales tax. The bonus will be paid from the interest on foreign loans. The bonus will be paid in notes which the banks will discount. The banks will not be allowed to cash the notes, says the comptroller of currency. The bonus will be paid by a tax on wine and beer if we can get the wine and beer. The bonus will be paid by an excess profits tax only the excess profits tax has been repealed.

Patriots Vindictive in the Golden West

(By The Federated Press)

Oakland, Cal.—Revival by the Better America Federation of the three-year-old case against members of the Communist Labor Party may lead to the sentencing of eight men to long terms in San Quentin.

In 1919, when the Communist Labor Party was formed, police raided an organization meeting of the party, following an attack upon the Communists by a mob, and arrested most of the leaders. Two were convicted, and the jury disagreed in the third case (the charge in all the cases being "criminal syndicalism") and since that time no further prosecutions have been held, and the cases were being quietly dropped, owing to lack of any evidence and to protests on the part of liberals and radicals.

Now the B. A. F. has insisted that the prosecutions be gone on with, and a new joint indictment has been sworn out against J. H. Dolson, J. A. Ragsdale, J. G. Reed, Edric B. Smith, J. E. Snyder, C. Aylward Tobey and Clarence Tobey. The men are being held under $2,000 bail apiece. Bail has been raised for some of the victims by Mrs. Meta Erickson and by Anita Whitney, herself out on bail under appeal for the same case; but it is not possible to raise bail immediately for all the men.

With the B. A. F.'s money back of the prosecution, it is feared that the defendants will be railroaded to San Quentin for having organized a party nearly three years ago.

RAILROAD "NORMALCY"

Chicago.—Sixty thousand railway telephone and telegraph operators were deprived of the eight-hour day by the United States Railway Labor Board in a ruling made public Saturday.

According to the ruling the "principle" of the eight-hour day holds for this group of railway employees as it does for all other employees previously deprived of the eight-hour day. The roads, however, are obliged to pay at the rate of time and a half only after the ninth hour of work.

The revised rules also prescribe regular pay for Sunday and holiday work, for eight hours. The split trick of eight hours, over a spread of twelve hours, is authorized.

NO "COMPANY UNION"

Schenectady, N. Y.—The employees of the General Electric Company, by a vote of almost two to one, have rejected the so-called Rockefeller or "American" plan of shop "representation." The vote was 5,704 to 3,549.

The proposal was opposed by the Metal Trades Alliance, while company influence was brought to bear as strongly as possible without resort to actual intimidation.

WAGES, NOT FARES, DROP

Sacramento, Cal.—Wages of motormen and conductors here have been reduced 5 cents an hour in the passenger service of the Sacramento Northern (electric) railway, and 7½ cents in the freight service. Passenger conductors and motormen will now receive 57½ cents an hour, and freight employees 62½ cents. There will be no reduction in fares.

SOUTHERN CHIVALRY

Mobile, Ala.—Ninety cents a day for an 11-hour day is the wage paid women laundry workers in at least one establishment here. The laundry at Fairhope, Ala., pays $1.25 a day. White farm help is paid $2 a day and no meals are provided. Negro farm workers receive only $1.50 or $1.75. Lettuce here costs 25 cents a head.

Milwaukee.—"There are 200 different organizations raising funds for Russia, including the one in charge of Manipulator Herbert Hoover," G. T. Fraenkel, Chicago machinist, told the Federated Trades Council here, "and some of them are so much mistrusted that organized labor has organized a relief movement of its own." He spoke on behalf of the newly-formed Trade Union National Committee for Russian Relief.

[illegible]

NOTE.—[illegible] program of the League [illegible] It is as follows:

WHAT MUST BE DONE

Two things are absolutely indispensable to the further life and progress of our labor movement: first, the militants must definitely and finally rid themselves of the dual union secessionist tendency that has negated their efforts for so long; and, second, they must thoroly organize themselves within the trade unions for the effective application of their boundless energies and dynamic programs.

When this is accomplished, then, and then only, can we look forward confidently to the American labor movement taking its proper place in the forefront of the world's trade union organization—a position which it occupied thirty or forty years ago, before its militants became poisoned and ruined by dual utopianism.

Substantial progress is now being made towards the accomplishment of these two vital essentials. In the first place, the militant rebels are freeing themselves from dual unionism with wonderful rapidity; and in the second place, they are everywhere forming the necessary propaganda groups within the organized masses of trade unionists.

The organization thru which this new and most important movement of militants is taking shape is The Trade Union Educational League.

What Is the T. U. E. L.

The Trade Union Educational League is an informal grouping of the progressive and revolutionary elements thruout the entire trade union movement; a potent means to assist these militants in the performance of their natural functions as the brain and backbone of the organized masses.

It is not a dual union, nor is it affiliated directly or indirectly with any such. It does not issue charters, nor does it collect dues or per capita tax.

For the revenue to carry on its work it depends upon voluntary donations from supporters and sympathizers, profits from the sale of literature, etc.

It is simply a virile educational league, operating within and in support of the trade unions, and by no means in opposition to or in competition with them.

It is an auxiliary of the labor movement, not a substitute for it. It is identical with the movements thru which the militants in other countries have transformed their trade unions into real fighting organizations.

The League's Program

The Trade Union Educational League proposes to develop trade unions from their present antiquated [illegible] condition into [illegible] powerful labor organizations capable of waging successful warfare against Capital.

To this end it is working to revamp and remodel from top to bottom their theories, tactics, structure, and leadership.

Instead of advocating the prevailing shameful and demoralizing nonsense about harmonizing the interests of Capital and Labor, it is firing the workers' imagination and releasing their wonderful idealism and energy by propagating the inspiring goal of the abolition of capitalism and the establishment of a workers' republic.

The League aggressively favors organization by industry instead of by craft. Altho the craft form of union served a useful purpose in the early days of capitalism, it is now entirely out of date.

In the face of the great consolidation of the employers the workers must also close up their ranks or be crushed.

The multitude of craft unions must be amalgamated into a series of industrial unions—one each for the metal trades, railroad trades, clothing trades, building trades, etc.—even as they have been in other countries.

The League also aims to put the workers of America in co-operation with the fighting trade unionists of the rest of the world.

It is flatly opposed to our present pitiful policy of isolation, and it advocates affiliation to the militant international trade union movement, known as the Red Trade Union International.

The League is campaigning against the reactionaries, incompetents, and crooks who occupy strategic positions in many of our organizations.

It is striving to replace them with militants, with men and women unionists who look upon the labor movement not as a means for making an easy living, but as an instrument for the achievement of working class emancipation.

In other words, the League is working in every direction necessary to put life and spirit and power into the trade union movement.

How the League Organizes

The Trade Union Educational League groups the militants two ways: by localities and by industries. In all cities and towns general groups of militants of all trades are formed to carry on the work of education and reorganization in their respective localities.

These local general groups, to facilitate their work, divide themselves into industrial sections—such as printing, building, textile, railroad, metal, clothing, transport, etc.

All the local general groups are kept in touch and co-operation with each other thru a national corresponding secretary.

Volunteers Wanted!

To help address envelopes and fold circulars. Apply National Office, FRIENDS OF SOVIET RUSSIA, 201 W. 13th ST., ANY TIME AFTER 9 A. M. Those out of work will be supplied with meals.

Likewise, all the local industrial educational groups are linked together, nationally, industry by industry, through their respective corresponding secretaries.

Every phase and stage of the trade union movement will have its branch of the life-giving educational organization.

Let the railroad industry illustrate the general plan: In every important railroad center there will be educational groups of railroad men, not of single crafts, but of the whole sixteen in the industry.

These local groups will co-operate nationally, thru a secretary (a volunteer unless the local groups find ways, thru donations, to pay him).

A national program will be established and a great drive instituted to combine the sixteen squabbling unions into one solid body.

Amalgamation will be made a burning issue all over the country wherever railroad men meet and talk. From the live wire section man in San Diego, California, to the rebel engineer in Portland, Maine, the whole body of railroad militants will move unitedly and irresistably to the accomplishment of their task, the erection of a great and powerful industrial union of railroad workers by the amalgamation and invigoration of the sixteen craft unions.

The union leaders refuse to carry out this absolutely indispensable project, so it is up to the rank and file militants to do it for themselves.

The Trade Union Educational League will make great use of pamphlets, bulletins, journals, etc., in its educational work. Its official national organ is THE LABOR HERALD, a monthly published at $2.50 per year. THE LABOR HERALD is carrying a burning message of constructive unionism and solidarity to the discontented rank and file.

It is filled from cover to cover with the living, dynamic organization principles which can find no place in our static, muzzled, dry-as-dust official trade union journals.

The launching of The Trade Union Educational League marks a turning point in American labor history. It is the beginning of an era in which the trade unions, flourishing under intensive cultivation by their organized militants, will gradually pass from their present hopeless defensive fight into an aggressive attack upon Capital, an attack which can end only with the abolition of the wage system.

The program of The Trade Union Educational League is the only possible effective answer to the "Open Shop" drive of the employers; it is the sole means by which the American working class can take its proper place in the world battle of Labor.

Active trade unionists willing to co-operate in the work of the League are requested to write to the undersigned for further information: Wm. Z. FOSTER, Sec'y.-Treas., 118 N. La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

(By The Federated Press)

New York.—A national reserve fund of $2,000,000 is being collected by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, to be used in the event the critical situation developing in the Chicago and Rochester markets develop into a strike or lockout. In these centers new agreements must be reached by May.

The manufacturers have demanded restoration of the 48-hour week, the right to hire and fire at will, abrogation of the principle of equal distribution of work, increase of the quantity of output required under the standard of production, and a 25 per cent reduction in piece and week work rates.

The demands are practically the same as those made by the New York manufacturers in 1920, but which they were forced to abandon following a strike in which the Amalgamated gained an overwhelming victory.

An editorial in the current issue of "Advance," the official organ of the A. C. W., declared that to accept the demands of the Chicago employers would mean to surrender the organization. "In New York the employers sought a fight with the union," the editorial continues, "and made unconditional surrender a condition of peace. In Chicago both sides are seeking to arrive at an understanding rather than otherwise. With that end in view the negotiations are now being continued.

"Industrial democracy, to the extent that it has so far been developed in the clothing industry, is now being tested in Chicago. It is the first great test without resort to strikes."

LUMBERMEN FOR VIOLENCE

Seattle.—Protest is being made to the governor of Mississippi by Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, against the slugging of J. W. Perkins, timberworkers' organizer, in that state recently, it has been learned at timberworkers' international headquarters here. Lumber barons of that state have threatened death to other organizers and officials of the union.

LAUDS CENTRALIA HERO

Centralia, Wash.—Union labor here regards the $150,000 stone memorial being planned by the American Legion as a shrine for Wesley Everest. "Above the building forever will hang the cloud of a great question causing every onlooker to inquire deeper into the cause of the Armistice Day tragedy in 1919," declared the Central Labor Council recently.

DEMOCRACY IN ACTION

Charleston, W. Va.—Notice of eviction has been served on 50 or more locked-out miners and their families, according to The West Virginia Federationist, organ of the labor movement of this state.

"Two families were evicted at Rocklick, but a snowstorm halted the proceedings," declares The Federationist. "Pangs of hunger haunt the women and children and the cold wave makes the situation more acute than ever.

Unless relief comes more liberally from the workers of the nation, God help suffering humanity in the southern West Virginia coal fields."

HARDING REJECTS WORKERS

Despite his passion for conferences, preferably those accompanied by much pomp and circumstances, President Harding does not approve when the workers so far forget their place as to request a conference on matters touching their own interests.

A delegation of Maintenance of Way Employes representing 450,000 workers recently appealed to the President for a hearing on the wage-cuts ordered by the Railway Labor Board, and the arbitrary methods of the Railway heads.

The President refused to receive the delegation, which was informed that the question was one in which the White House could not interfere.

Dominion Status

Under the terms of the agreement of London, the constitutional status of the "Free State" is to be similar to that of the Dominion of Canada. But the fundament of the Canadian political structure is the British North America Act of 1867, which itself provided that the constitution of the Dominion should be similar in principle to that of the then United Kingdom.

Constitution-framers for the "Free State" are therefore limited, at the very outset, for their politico-architectural designs to the unwritten, it is true, but for all that, very certain and definite specifications of the British Constituion.

What those specifications are every revolutionary number of the world proletariat recognizes. The charters of so-called liberty, on which rest the glories of a putrescent imperialism, have, in effect, proved the most substantial barriers to the emancipation of the British slave. Whether our Healys, Duffys and Duggans will dare, flouting a watchful Coalition, to range outside that field or at all ignore the Anglo-Saxon mode remains to be seen.

It is scarcely likely that they will seek to confer with the authors of the only Free State in existence. Apart from their inhibition inherent in the pact of London itself, it does not seem feasible that the representatives of holy Ireland should take counsel with "The Bolsheviks of Russia!" Liberty Hall might, if its opinion were sought, make such a piquant and refreshing suggestion, but we have our doubts both ways. If the workers of Ireland and their leaders have determined to mould the "Free State" to their ultimate will, it seems to us they shall have to do so thru other channels and by other ways and means than those of a paper Constitution.

To the Co-operative Commonwealth

The workers must therefore proceed towards the creation of that Co-operative Commonwealth, which has in recent years been so freely featured in the writings and utterances of Irish progressivists and radicals as their objective. A truly Co-operative Commonwealth were, indeed, worthwhile, but we greatly fear that many of those, who write and speak in terms of such an ideal, have a poor concept of its meaning and a still poorer idea of the way to attain it. Co-operation, in so far as its practice in Ireland during the past few decades could be observed and noted, meant little more than the combination of groups of farmers to protect and increase their profits. One failed to detect any expression of a desire, for instance, on their part to share those profits with the hired man or to place the service of the community at large above their own immediate and special interests.

Tough Problem

As a type the Irish farmer is the most ingrainedly selfish and narrow that we have knowledge of or acquaintance with. He presents to the forward-looking among the Irish people the toughest of problems, but a problem that can and must be solved by those who would radically change the economic status quo. It is worthy of note that out of a total number of agricultural holdings in Ireland amounting to 572,045 there are no less than 408,579 of less than 30 acres each. In other words of the entire Irish farming community more than 71 per cent are owners or occupiers of bare economic or less than economic holdings. The interests of that 71 per cent are, if its components but knew it, practically parallel with those of the industrial workers and agricultural laborers. For, in point of fact, they are simply workers themselves, the one seeming point of difference between them and their brothers being that they are possessed of a stake in a small patch of ground—a stake which in terms of honest economics amounts to no more than the individuals reserve of labor-power. The small farmer, just as his industrial brother is leech-bled year in, year out, by the banking, commercial and professional classes which grow fat on his industry and thrive on his social myopia.

Occupational Statistics

Irish economic and social statistics have hitherto been so crudely assembled, classified and sectionalized as to present little more than a confused blur to the student. Yet some interesting comparisons may, with a little care, be deducted from them. Out of a total population at the last census (taken 1911) of 4,390,219 the occupational returns were as follows:

Professional (including clerical)	141,134
Commercial (including banking)	111,143
Industrial	613,397
Agricultural	780,867
Domestic, indefinite and non-producing (including presumably police, children; general workers and unemployed)	2,743,678

Liars can figure

These figures may, because of the fatuous process of differentiation followed, be played with at will, but if they indicate anything at all, they show the utterly indefensible and inequitable distribution of human, and by inference, material resources of the country. The "Haves" are clearly in gross disproportion to the "Have-nots" as to numbers in a land whose summarized property according to recent estimates reached the astounding figure of $2,500,000,000, or, including children, $600 per capita. Of this colossal sum be it remembered, too, that approximately $1,600,000,000 or 64 per cent represented Bank deposits, investments in British Government stocks and the capital, loan and debenture stocks of Irish Railways and street car systems.

The aggregate number of persons in receipt of relief, in other words of folks destitute amid plenty, reached in 1914 the staggering figure of 572,709, which is equivalent to stating that in that year over 13 per cent of the entire population existed in a state of beggary. And this figure is true of a period of alleged economic stability. To what extent it has been swollen during the post-war reaction to "normalcy" we have no certain knowledge. Of a surety the Irish people stand in sore need of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

To Awaken the Masses

The indications are clear for the men and women in the Irish Labor Movement who want to end the sordid economy that has led to such a state of affairs. They may not be asked to help inscribe a political charter of bourgeois freedom, but they can and must awaken the submerged masses to the realities of the situation. They can and should utilize their own organization to disseminate the truths that will stir to constructive activity the lethargic minds of not merely the industrial and agricultural workers, but of that large body of bare economic and less than economic owners and occupiers of land, whose mutual apathy has been induced by a process of hopeless and apparently interminable grabbing of a jealously guarded piece of soil. The workers, as such, will readily grasp, where a cul-de-sac superstition does not bar them, the lesson of these truths. The tuition of the other element may prove slow and painful, but it is none the less worthwhile.

Example of Soviet Russia

Soviet Russia will afford many excellent object lessons. There in making the finest human experiment in history a few minds have encountered and by degrees overcome the manifold obstacles, which the irresponsiveness of the domestic materials and the implacable enmity of foes from without had put in their way. A tenacity of purpose, linked with a certainty of program and the support of a loyal, class-conscious and determined army were the means that enabled them to carry through. The Revolution—dread word! will not come about overnight in Ireland, but if proceeded towards steadily by men and women of determination, it must and will come in time.

Constructive Program Needed

There is thus a huge field of activity for those who would inaugurate in Ireland an era of economic equality and security. Yet, mere precatory remarks or diffuse and vague propaganda will not bring it about. History has demonstrated that it is the man or men with a definite program who invariably win in the end. The abolition of the system of exploitation that now obtains, however much to be desired, cannot be an end in itself. Chaos follows if there be no constructive plans. To evolve such is the task that today confronts the workers in Ireland and those of us here who believe in and wish and hope for the emancipation of our kind.

Warren Gamaliel Harding has been president for one year. Ten millions of unemployed is the greatest indictment humanity can register against the failure of his administration. The remaining years of his term will be featured by failures just as great. Capitalism has nothing but failure to offer civilization. And Harding is a child of capitalism, Turn to Communism.

[illegible]

10,000,000 of us are now out of work. Unemployment is on the increase. We and our children are hungry and cold. We have no money for food, clothing and shelter.

We can't earn any money because there are no jobs.

The factories are closed. The mills and mines are shut down.

WHY?

Because the bosses don't need us now. So they KICK us out into the streets and let us starve. The warehouses are loaded with the goods that WE have made, the things that WE need now.

When the bosses have sold these goods, they will put us to work again. Meanwhile, they go to Palm Beach and Europe, where they spend the millions taken from our labor.

"Smile," they say, AND STARVE!

The workers on the job are being crushed by the greed of the bosses. Wages have hit bottom. Long hours and slavery are the order of the day. The bosses are carrying on a savage fight against the Labor Unions and are using the unemployed to smash them.

While millions of us men are unemployed, 2,000,000 children are being worked to death in the mills and fields, because the bosses make bigger profits out of them. Working women have to slave nights in mills to keep their children from starving. IT IS HELL!

America is the richest country in the world! We workers produce $62,000,000,000 worth of goods every year. The richest mines, the most highly developed industries are in America.

AND 10,000,000 WALK THE STREETS!

Workers! Shall we be content to starve because the bosses can't make a profit from our labor?

It's up to Us.—DEMAND WORK!

Demand that the factories and mines be opened!

If the bosses refuse, then let the Government hand them over to us to operate.

Public highways, bridges, more schools are needed. Demand that the Government begin building at once, so we can get work.

If the Government refuses, DEMAND COMPENSATION AT TRADE UNION WAGES!

The U. S. Government gave $500,000,000 to the railroad magnates. It gave a billion to the shipowners. It spent billions on the war. It raises hundreds of millions for the army and navy.

WHY NOT RAISE MILLIONS FOR US?

Russia needs millions of dollars worth of mining and farming machinery, motor trucks and locomotives.

Demand trade with Soviet Russia! Demand that the Government grant them long term credit, just as they have given it to Poland, Roumania and Austria. Trade with Russia will start the factories going full blast. IT WILL MEAN WORK FOR US.

ORGANIZE TO MAKE THESE DEMANDS.

Let us join our forces with Organized Labor. Then the bosses and Government will have to listen to us.

BOURGEOIS PROPAGANDA

Editor, The Worker:—The power of capitalist propaganda is one of the most potent influences against which the worker's movement has to contend. The steps of progress are everywhere opposed by this propaganda.

The capitalist point of view is everywhere set forth so that almost unconsciously and hypnotically the mind of labor is moulded in the desired way.

Many workers have been so steeped in this propaganda for years that it is a difficult task to arouse them out of their lethargy to do their own thinking in a class-conscious way.

We all realize how during the war the full force of capitalist influence was used to arouse the workers against their socalled enemies across the seas and to induce them to work harder and ever harder in the production of war materials, all in the name of "democracy."

Now we see the same means used to persuade wage earners to accept repeated cuts in wages and more arduous working conditions in the name of a so-called "return to normalcy."

The "open shop" is pictured as a haven of refuge to the weary worker, instead of a means of almost complete enslavement of the worker, as it really is.

That this policy has had the result of hoodwinking a certain proportion of the working class there can be no doubt, some even believing that the boss and his friend "normalcy" are doing him a favor when they cut his wages.

A more recent feature of this propaganda is the billboard advertising which presents various slogans intended to allay popular discontent with the horrible living conditions of today.

For example, "This is your country, you fought for it, now work for it," can hardly allay the hunger of a propertyless and unemployed ex-soldier, altho such is obviously its purpose.

What antidote have we workers for this poison which is being continuously injected into the minds of our fellows by press, movie, sermon and story?

The spread of class-conscious thought thru the influence of the workers' press upon the rank and file, until in due time the average worker will think like a worker and not like a capitalist.—W. Wells.

ESPERANTO

Editor, The Worker:— Esperanto and the radical movement are closely connected. Both are international in scope and identical in aims. This has been so well understood by Radicals the world over that from statistics compiled by recognized authorities in the Esperanto world it has been found that two-thirds of the Esperanto movement is in the hands of radicals. And of these two-thirds 75 per cent are Communists.

The favor with which Soviet Russia looks upon Esperanto is well known and it has even been said that Esperanto was taught in primary Russian schools. Czechoslovakia has officially recognized Esperanto, as have a few more European and South American countries.

New York City has not been inactive in this respect and three months ago was founded THE LABORISTA ESPERANTO CENTRO, with headquarters at 323—2d Ave., whose purpose and aim is the propaganda of the International Language among radicals. The program of the Laborista Esperanta Centro is a vast one and includes the free instruction of Esperanto to workers, the distribution of circulars about the International Language at radical meetings, the nomination of delegates at each and every Labor Union. Free classes of Esperanto are held at the CENTRO, 323—2d Ave., every Monday and Friday evenings, at 8 P. M., to which all comrades are invited to attend.

The Esperanta Laborista Centro makes herewith an offer to supply teachers of Esperanto who will freely give their services to any WORKERS PARTY LOCAL YOUNG WORKERS PARTY LEAGUE LOCAL, or to any other Radical organization who will provide a local for the classes.

The teachers of the LABORISTA ESPERANTA CENTRO are already teaching in various parts of the City, among others at the FERRER SCHOOL, and more teachers are being trained day after day.

THE BAKER'S UNIONS have endorsed the International Language and the delegate of the Esperanta Laborista Centro to this Union is teaching Esperanto to its members.—M. Amiel, 2048—7th Ave., N. Y. C.

The United L[illegible]

By WM. W. WEINSTONE

The Communist International was constituted from the Left Wing groups of the reformist Socialist Parties of the Second International and developed by splitting these parties.

Communist Parties were formed in the countries of Europe and America and the Labor Movement of the world was divided into Communists and Yellow Socialists.

The Communist International declared merciless war upon the traitors to the working class— the Scheidemanns, Hendersons, Thomas' and Gompers—the heroes of the rotten Second International. The hostility to these Social-Chauvinists and out and out Bourgeois Reformers was unconcealed.

It said emphatically to the working class that as long as they follow these Judases of the Labor Movement, they are doomed to crucifixion by the Capitalist class.

There is but one thing to do with these traitors—to drive them out of the Labor Movement as discredited bourgeois lackeys.

In its first appeal issued in January, 1919, to the Communists of the world, the Third International stated that a fight without mercy must be put up against the social traitors and the Centrists must be criticized relentlessly and unmasked as phrase-mongers and lip revolutionists.

The Third International successfully conducted this policy. The sections of the C. I. exposed the bourgeois ideology of these lieutenants of Capital. They denounced them for their support of the Bourgeois Dictatorship and their unwillingness to fight for the Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

During the first year, the fight against these opportunists was limited however to propaganda alone. To defeat the reformists and to expose their true character to the workers, it was decided that propaganda alone was insufficient.

It was necessary to demonstrate to the workers on the basis of their own experiences, in the practical, everyday struggle, that their leaders were unwilling to fight for their interests. The working class of Europe would have to go thru the period of disillusionment, similar to that experienced by the Russian workers under Kerensky before they discovered that the Scheidemanns were serving only the Bourgeoisie.

Participation in Class Struggle

The Second Congress of the Communist International therefore declared that it was the task of the Communists not simply to agitate for the Dictatorship of the Proletariat on the basis of the theory alone, nor limit their fight against the leaders of the Second International to bitter denunciation.

It was the duty of the Communists to participate in the daily struggles of the workers and by close and constant association with the masses, by fighting side by side with them for their immediate needs, to expose the cowardice, incompetence and treachery of the Bureaucracy.

For Immediate Needs of Workers

The Communists alone are willing or able to fight for the immediate interests of the proletariat. The Bureaucrats are unable to do anything but to demoralize the workers and to surrender to the capitalists without a struggle.

This policy of fighting for the immediate interests of the workers appeared to some groups in the International as a concession to opportunism.

The duty of Communists, they proclaimed, was to agitate for the Dictatorship of the Proletariat and not advocate anything less than that.

However, it was evident that not only must Communists engage in the struggle of the workers but if they are really an advance guard, they must lead the workers in these struggles. In these struggles they could a thousand times more effectively expose the labor charlatans as bourgeois agents masking as leaders than could be done in any number of polemics on Dictatorship versus Democracy.

The policy of conducting the fight on the basis of immediate demands, while pointing out the limitations of these demands, would have the additional value of further disturbing the equilibrium of Capitalist production.

It would hasten the development of the intensive class struggle leading to the final contest for power; the immediate struggles inevitably growing more general, sharper, and taking in ever greater numbers.

Strategy To Expose Reformists

The Second Congress not only laid down the general principle of participation in the daily struggles but also directed the Communist parties to operate in the working class organizations of whatever political color, and advised the British Communist Party to enter the Reformist Labor Party in order to better expose the Reformists, from within.

Lenin went even further in this policy and counselled the British Communists to support Henderson in the coming election so that the workers might see with their own eyes and feel thru their own experiences, the futility of reforms and reformers to free them from the hell of Capitalism.

[illegible] Third International [illegible] invited the Yellow Amsterdam International to co-operate for aid to Russia and help to the Spanish workers suffering from the brutal persecutions of the White Terror.

In each of these proposals there was the strategy of unmasking the reformists as false leaders unwilling to fight for the simple, elementary needs of the workers; of being the real split-makers dividing the workers for their own bureaucratic interests. And the results show that this strategy was successful.

United Front of Labor

The Third Congress endorsed the Open Letter policy and invited the Communist Parties of the world to follow the example of the German Communists.

It did not, however, as yet throw out the slogan of the United Labor Front.

In his speech of December 4th, Zinoviev, president of the C. I., pointed out the necessity of putting forward this slogan for the immediate action of the Communist sections.

No New Departure In Tactics

The United Labor Front policy is therefore no new departure in the tactics of the C. I. tho the extreme "Leftists" will join with the Reformists in proclaiming it as such.

It has been developing gradually. Its general and universal application at this moment arises out of the particular conditions existing among the working class of the world.

Everywhere there is evident an undercurrent for unity caused by the ever increasing oppression of the Capitalists. The Labor Unions are being dealt smashing blows. The workers are in retreat before the united attack of the master class and they are retreating without a fight.

The proletariat under this terrific pressure longs for unity of all workers, for the defense of their wage standard and of their elementary rights and needs. This cry for unity cannot go unanswered.

The Communists must seize the initiative and raise the banner of the United Labor Front. Stepping forward as the defender of the interests of the working class they also appear to the workers as the unifying force in their struggle.

Challenge To The Bureaucracy

The United Labor Front is not a unity of Communists with the Labor aristocrats on the basis of class conciliation, it is a challenge to the Labor Bureaucrats to conduct a united campaign for the class struggle.

How can the drive of the capitalists to smash the Unions be broken? By a United Labor Front! How can we stop the attack on wages, hours of labor, anti-strike laws? By a United Labor Front.

We Communists demand such United Action upon a program that will unify the workers as well as place them in an advantageous position to further carry on the class struggle. How do you Labor Bureaucrats stand? Are you for Unity of the workers or for Unity with the Capitalists.

Value of The United Front

What is gained from these tactics? They expose the reformers. The latter charge the Communists with breaking up the Union and dividing the ranks of Labor. They are now dividing the workers and refusing to fight for the "legitimate" demands of the Unions.

Or if they are engaged in a united struggle, they are shown to be deserters as the "Black Friday" of the Triple Alliance demonstrated.

In either case, the Communists become more closely associated with the masses that follow the Yellow leaders, their prestige rises and they prove to these backward workers the need for a new leadership.

United Labor Front in America

How shall the Workers Party apply this tremendously effective policy to America? This means, what shall our concrete program of United Action consist of?

That there is a need for a United Labor Front among the workers is tragically evident. That there is sentiment for United Action is evidenced by the recent conference called in Chicago by the Railroad Chiefs; by the Unity Pact, feeble and inadequate tho it is, of Railroaders and Miners.

The rank and file at the Convention of Miners demonstrated their desire for unity when they backed Howat against Lewis.

At this moment the Communists have the task of creating united action and the proposal for the calling of a Labor Congress made in the Open Letter of the Workers Party, was the first step.

Yet this does not exhaust the possibilities of a United Labor Front policy. The American workers are the most backward politically. They still follow the policy long discarded by European Labor of "punishing the enemies and rewarding the friends," which in practice means punishing the workers and selling out to the Capitalists.

It is about time that the American workers took a step forward and it is for the Communists to show the way and propose the formation of a United Political Front of Labor on somewhat the model of the British Labor Party—The identity of the uniting bodies to be unaffected; their autonomy of organization and full freedom of criticism retained.

In such an organization composing the great masses of Organized Labor, the Workers Party would find a fertile field for winning the workers to their program.

It need not be pointed out that such a party would be no substitute for the Workers Party.

As against the Revolutionary Workers Party it would be indeed a step backward, but as against the present non-political policy it would be an important step forward.

Under this form of organization, contact of the advance guard with the rear guard would be accomplished—the one thing the American Revolutionary movement has been so sadly lacking.

The United Labor Front policy has many other tactical advantages to offer. A critical and careful application of this policy will constitute the greatest step forward in the liberation of the American Revolutionary Movement from its isolation today and will be the most effective blow aimed at the Bourgeoisie and their lieutenants, the Gompers, Johnstons and Lewises.

[illegible]ork Among Women Task of Soviets

NOTE:—Here is the first of several articles on Russia that THE WORKER plans to present to its readers from the pen of Mary Heaton Vorse, just returned from an extensive tour thru the great Workers' Republic. This article has to do with work among women in Russia. Watch for the next.

By MARY HEATON VORSE

When I went into the Hall of the Third Soviet where the Communist Party women of Russia were holding their convention, Prebogenski, the great Russian economist, was speaking.

Behind him red flags made a flaming background. A group of working women sat at the presidium table, among them Alexandra Kollontai, short, dark hair framing her impressively handsome face. Prebrogenski faced an audience of peasant women and factory workers who had come from towns in the remote corners of Russia.

There were few intellectuals. A scant dozen hats or fur caps made rare punctuation marks among the shawled heads.

Some had traveled for days by sleds, and days more by railway. Many had ever before seen a railway. There were women from the far Urals, women of the Crimea, women of Ukraine, even women of Astrakhan on the Caspian.

Sheepskin coats kept most of them warm for the hall was unheated, some new ones, making bright orange blotches in the general grey background. Great felt boots were on their feet, woolen shawls bound their heads.

A curious audience for a great economist to be addressing. He was explaining to them the intricacies of the new economic policy which affects the life of every person in Russia, for Russian leaders do not talk bunk to their party members. At a Russian political meeting there is a total lack of one thing and that is, hot air.

Prebrogenski talked two hours. chnical talk, difficult talk to fol- y. Never for a moment did he k down to his audience, which ened with unbroken attention.

uring his talk notes were being petually passed to the platform. it the Russian custom. People wish to speak send up their es or ask written questions of the speaker.

A flood of speakers followed Prebrogenski. Many of these working women spoke with an earnest delivery that many an experienced speaker could have copied with benefit. They all had the merit of unconsciousness and perfect sincer- y.

One of the women especially im- essed me. She was a motherly oking square built woman of about years old. Later I talked with r, sitting on the bed in the big dor- tory, for the delegates lived in the oviet House where their convention s held. In the old days it was a onastery; now, where the monks ept, a ceaseless flow of Russian rkingmen and women are quar- d when they come to Moscow their various conventions.

nna Pavlova came from the d Province," the Manchester of sia. She had been a cotton spin- all her days until she became Communist Party organizer. She an unconscious feminist when ked her what she thought of Rus- "What Russia needs," she declared promptly, "is more women in the government. Now all of us will come back and everywhere we will explain Prebrogenski's speech. Wherever there is a strong women's ganization you find there is no uble in collecting the food tax.

Henry B. Allen

Once we have explained it to the women, they try and get it thru the hard heads of the men. You know yourself, when a man is too old to put over his mother's knee he rarely learns another thing. With a woman it is different.

"Take the famine relief. We just came in and explained the terrible conditions, and the women didn't even bother their hard-fisted husbands, they took the food out of the bin themselves.

"When you go to a new town," I asked her, "what do you do first?"

"I go to the Soviet House, and if they have been informed that I am coming, a meeting has been prepared. What I do and talk about depends upon whether the women are organized or not."

"Take a town where the women have not been organized."

"The first thing I would do then would be to organize a nursery where the women could leave their children. The only way to organize women, is to get hold of them by their daily needs and talk about the things they talk about—about their children for instance. If we didn't interest ourselves in their problems we could not expect them to have confidence in the Government, could we? So first thing I would do would be to tell them how nurseries were organized in other towns and help them to organize."

"Do you ever have any difficulty to get the women to leave their children in nurseries?"

"At first, peasant women are skeptical of everything new. But now we can't organize them fast enough. In one of the counties in my province there is a very good woman organizer, and the women of the next county came to the Soviet House and said:

"We leave our babies here, and the Soviet officials can nurse them, if you do not organize nurseries for us, the way you did in the next county."

This woman was sure that work among women was the most important task before the Soviet Government, and that without the help of the women the great primary task of blotting out illiteracy would be impossible.

TOURIST CLUB TO HIKE

Sunday, March 12, the Nature Friends Tourist Club will hold its first spring hike in the Ramapo Mountains. This tour affords mountain scenery unequalled in the neighborhood of New York. Meet at 8 a. m. sharp, at W. 130th St. (Fort Lee Ferry House). Fare $1.50. Bring lunch with you.

This organization is the only English speaking class conscious tourist club in the city, and all comrades are invited to join. Any information desired can be obtained from William Whitman, 162 E. 14th St., New York City.

THE TECHNICAL AID

The Educational Committee of the Technical Aid Society urges all workers to attend its classes conducted at 240 East 23rd St. These classes prepare for service in the economic reconstruction of Soviet Russia, they are therefor intensive and practical. Courses are given in various branches of work—Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry, Russian (for non-Russians and Russians), Electricity (theory and practice), Agricultural work (tractors), Navigation, Drawing, etc. Fees are nominal. BY CALEB HARRISON

District No. 1 (New England): Convention in near future. Membership now 2,659, before Christmas convention only 900. This is a healthy growth.

District No. 2 (New York City): Comrade Edward Lindgren is now on the job as district organizer. District No. 4, up-state New York, was added to District No. 2, making one District. Lindgren is arranging for the District Convention. Great activity is reported in Buffalo and vicinity. Local New York is organized and functioning well.

Active in Pennsylvania

District No. 3: Convention held March 5th. Provisional Executive Committee active. February 19th the Party in Philadelphia held its convention with 32 delegates representing 356 members. City Central Committee was organized and much activity planned.

District No. 5: This is the Pittsburgh District, where the White Terror remains unbroken. A new District Organizer is just on the job, one who can put in some hard blows against black reaction.

District No. 6: Convention will be held April 1-2. District Organizer Charles Baker is very active on an organization tour thru Ohio and West Virginia at present. He is bringing branches into line in many towns hitherto unorganized. This District promises to be one of the most active.

District No. 7: Michigan and Indiana are being covered by an organizer. Several new branches have been organized.

Call Convention at Chicago

District No. 8: Convention called for March 12th in Chicago. Great activity reported from the district in the form of meetings, demonstrations and trade union activity.

Chicago has a City Central Committee of 22 members, Moritz Loeb, Secretary, Room 303, 166 West Washington St., Chicago, Illinois.

Milwaukee is a live local with a C. C. C. of seven members. Clara Knappe Secretary. Here they are active with meetings, etc.

District No. 9: Frank Miner of Minneapolis is District Organizer. Convention will be held in near future. This is one of the large districts in point of territory where it takes a longer time to get things moving.

District No. 10 (Headquarters—St. Louis): District Organizer Sullivan in this district is very active developing the branches and locals. He recently visited the Packing districts of Omaha where he did excellent work for the strikers. The provisional executive committee recently made arrangements for the district convention to be held April 16.

We are waiting to hear from Denver, Colo., the office of District No. 11. We do not know what arrangements are made for convention.

Organizing Pacific Coast

District No. 12: The provisional committee is formed and getting ready for the district convention. Beside this, we are getting encouraging letters from all the large cities of Washington and Oregon, showing that many volunteers are busy forming branches.

This is perhaps the largest district in point of territory. It will take some time before the district is well organized, but even so Los Angeles and San Francisco are very active as locals. Meetings, debates, lectures, trade union activity, is constantly moving and keeping the members active. Provisional district committee is now forming. Comrade Ella Reeves Bloor is now in Los Angeles engaged every night in some form of activity.

Districts No. 14 and 15 comprise the Solid South. There are no district organizers functioning yet, but many letters from comrades in Memphis, Atlanta, Thorsley, Ala., and points in Oklahoma and Texas which indicate that even in the territory of the Ku Klux and reaction we will soon have flourishing organizations.

[illegible] Local Greater New York with a monster mass meeting at Central Opera House, 205 East 67th Street, at 1 P. M. Tickets will be 25 cents each. Proceeds of the meeting to go to the National Office to make The Worker a daily. Leaflets and posters now ready. Branch Committee must call at the Local Office, 208 East 12th St., without fail to get their quota.

First conference of Branch Organizers, Literature Agents, Financial Secretaries and representatives of Branch Executive Committees will be held Friday, March 10th, 7:30 P. M., at 47 Chrystie St. Branch Organizers are requested to bring with them a list of the membership, in alphabetical order. Literature agents must have their literature order blanks and financial secretaries must bring application cards and members dues.

Women's Day Meeting

March 14—International Women's Labor Day—mass meeting in Bronx for Russian relief and the organization of class-conscious women.

May Day—arrangements made to hold conferences for united action of all working-class organizations on May Day. The Local will hold a Ball on May 1st, night, and all branches are directed not to hold any affairs on that date and to cooperate to make this Ball a success.

Unemployment—branches are notified that unemployed members are to be registered on blanks distributed at the City Central Committee to delegates.

Educational Activities

Educational Conference was held March 3rd with an attendance of 25 delegates. Conference decided upon a program of five educational centers, Bronx, Harlem, East Side, Brownsville and Williamsburg.

Since it was late in the season it was decided to concentrate attention upon a central school and to build up the educational sectional centers later. Conference of all comrades qualified to teach or direct discussions will be called by the Educational Committee in the near future.

Come and See What Class Conscious Workers Can Do to Help Starving Russians

Many organistions are doing their bit toward this cause in various ways. Some arrange dances and balls, others run concerts or engage professional speakers and lecturers. For these purposes big halls must be hired and a lot of money is being spent. This is what working girls of the Unity House on Lexington Avenue and 29th Street are doing. It is really something new.

A Children's Week for Eight Days

The girls of the Unity House are giving up their house work and time for an entire week. They collect all kinds of articles from infants' wear up to expensive jewelry.

Various unions are doing their share by sending in their contributions:

CONTRIBUTION	UNION
Bakers	Bread
Butchers	Meat
Brewery Workers	Soda Water
Knitgoods Workers	Sweaters
Whitegoods Workers	Underwear
Dressmakers	Dresses
Children's Dressmakers	Children Dresses

and other articles too numerous to mention. Things are sent even from other states and cities of the country such as Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and also Connecticut.

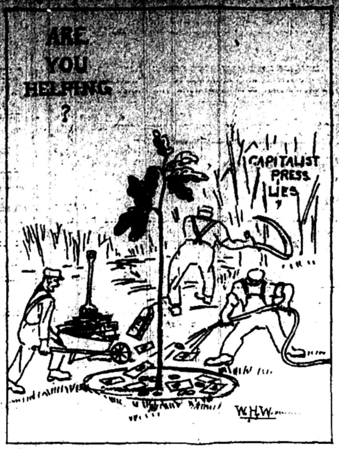
Now, workers and friends it is your turn. Come and have a good time. Besides articles, that you will be able to purchase for a small sum, you will also have a chance to hear good music and singing.

On Friday, March 10th, that's the opening of the bazaar, there will be a Metropolitan Opera House singer. On Saturday Comrade Olgin will speak on "New Russia." The Actor's Union has promised its best talent. During the other evenings there will be piano recitals, dancing and other attractions.

In short it will be a big affair without any expenses and all receipts will go to the hungry children of Russia. We advise other workers' organizations thruout the country to follow this example, by arranging similar affairs for the same purpose. DO NOT FAIL TO ATTENT ON THE OPENING NIGHT.

John Galsworthy's "The Pigeon," which Edward Goodman has been presenting at the Greenwich Village Theatre, is flying uptown and will open Monday night, March 13, at the Frazee Theatre. The cast, including Whitford Kane in the title role, Hubert Druce, George Renavent, Edna James and others, remains unchanged. The Greenwich Village Theatre will be dark for one week and on Monday night, March 20, Strindberg's "Creditors" will be presented there as the first production of Ellen Van Volkenburg and Maurice Browne for their spring season.

Communism versus Capitalism! That is the struggle that is holding the center of the world stage today. On which side are you?



ARE YOU HELPING ?
CAPITALIST PRESS LIES
W.H.W.

That is a good question that one of our most active boosters asks in the above sketch. Take a good look at it. It is:—

"ARE YOU HELPING?"

Study the cartoon carefully. It wants to know whether you are helping to make THE WORKER grow and become powerful.

Our comrade pictures THE WORKER as a tree, young but strong. It must be fed and strengthened by the "subs" that our hustlers get from those who do not now read THE WORKER.

"Subs" means finances for THE WORKER, funds to help it become a bigger and better paper. A bigger and better paper means that we can interest more readers.

That is what we must have in order to be able to mow down the capitalist press lies as pictured by our comrade.

ARE YOU HELPING? IF NOT, GET BUSY TODAY! There is a sub blank at the bottom of this page.

KULTUR

Drifting and driven,
Blank-faced, unchanging,
Half fed and threadbare,
Slip smiling along.
Stomach urge uppermost,
All others perverted,
Be-draggled and mired
Like dead cats in gutters—
With thoughtless contentment
Mindless, sweat on.

Smile through
And "jazz" away the hours!
It's the most wonderful land on earth!
Read the "Morning News" and go to work.
This evening you will take your bread
To the movies and will be assured
By the glorious climax
With its osculatory "fade out,"
That around the corner
A fortune awaits you;
Then you will take your woman home
And loiter in the hallway for two hours,
Talking about—nothing.
Thinking the usual conversational subjects
Of the street.
Next day work like hell for ten hours—
For you must "begin at the bottom."
On Saturday the splashing music
Of a rusty tin tub,
Will fill your luxurious Railroad Apartment
As the odors of the be-piped cell
Mingle with those of your arm-pits—
Or at the free, public bath,
Bristle with civic pride
And thank God you're not a Russian.
Laugh and be glad
Of your American clean mindedness,
And screech your coarse throat hoarse
At the ball game.
On the morrow, go to church;
For you must worship,
Pray,
Protect the flag,
Propagate—
And die in the home for the aged.

MEN are in jail for you,
Who once upon a time
Espoused your cause,
And took upon themselves its burden,
While you "jazzed" on,
Smiling and silly.

Harold Colvin-Salls.

CHARTERS ARE NOW READY!

The charters are now being delivered by the printers and applications from locals and branches will be filled immediately. Send applications to Caleb Harrison, Secretary, Workers Party, Room 405, 799 Broadway, New York City.

Another confession of lawlessness under capitalism. There are 100,000 violations of the building code in New York that the authorities overlook because of the building shortage. Capitalism is the greatest producer of criminals since time began. Let the workers investigate and see what Communism has to offer them.

Unemployment is a crime of the capitalist system. To abolish it you must abolish capitalism.

When Does Your "Sub" Expire?

Some of our readers have been receiving the first few issues of "THE WORKER" in its new form in spite of the fact that their subscriptions to "The Toiler" had expired.

We wanted you to get these samples of our new paper, the most up-to-the-minute revolutionary paper in America, so that you would realize the necessity of renewing your subscription.

With this issue, however, we are discontinuing all subs that are not paid up-to-date. If you want to get "THE WORKER" from now on, you must renew. Send in your sub now to THE WORKER, Room 405, 80 E. 11th St., New York City, N. Y.

From Baltimore, Md.—"Here's a six months sub. Hope to send you a few more real soon."

Subs come in accompanied with a request for the platform and program of the Workers Party.

By SADI

The eyes of all the really nice ladies of the world last week were fixed upon sweet Princess Mary and her simple bridal finery, which the newspapers with a sob report in a three colum article of touching loyalty.

Sweet and simple Mary. You working men and women of the world please learn what real simplicity in dress is like, and cease extravagance in clothes.

Princess Mary had a simple bridal gown of silver cloth, real point lace, pearls and gold, English duchess satin, etc., etc.

Her other simple dresses were of satin, lace, cloth, pearls, chiffon, gold tissue, ribbons, jewels and so on.

Simple Mary has simple satin and gold and brocade gowns for every day occasions.

The Russians may starve, the tortured Indians may die; the unemployed go hungry, the English slums may stink of sick babies, but our simple Mary in her sweet simplicity shows the common crowd a fine heroic and self-sacrificing example of sweet simplicity in her simple wedding gowns, hats, shoes, stockings, furs, capes, coats, etc. etc. etc.

Surely this ought to teach English labor fighting the wage cuts real economy and humility.

But alas, the workers of England and America and all the rest of the world will never learn how to dress as simply as her royal highness, sweet and simple Mary. Mary, royal, double royal, special blooded, princess by God ordained, of all England and English possessions.

Slow music, please, and drop a tear to show you are touched—in your pocketbooks.

MAKERS OF HISTORY

When you studied history
In the sixth grade,
Did you not wish
That you had lived in 1776?
That you might have been
Paul Revere, or John Stark?
Would you not rather have walked
With bleeding bare feet
On the snows of Valley Forge,
Than to have sat upon the throne
Of King George?
What heroic things we would have done!

But do you know that today
There is a Revolution,
Which, compared to that one
Is as a mountain
To a grain of sand;
Requiring infinitely greater sacrifice,
Broader Vision
And deeper understanding.
The revolt of those who DO
Against those who OWN.
Are you intelligent enough
To grasp it?
Will your children say with pride?
"My father and mother endured hardship
To advance
The REVOLUTION."

Muriel Wright.

Capitalism destroys. Communism builds.

Capitalism breeds despair. Communism brings hope.

39,000,000 citizens of France stand behind her obligations, states Ambassador Jusserand. The main trouble is that none of the 39,000,000 has any money.

They have an excellent way of increasing the size of the Bible class at Saranac Lake, N. Y. A delinquent last Sunday was dragged to church at the end of rope. Good training for the First Liberty Loan Drive of the next war.

An unfortunate resident of Newark, N. J., dropped dead when he drew a royal flush in a poker game. That's just about what would happen to the 10,000,000 jobless if Harding's "prosperity" was ever realized. It is so long in coming we won't believe it if it does arrive.

When the working-class is broke it knows where to do its shopping. The sales of Woolworth's "Five and Ten Cent Stores" for February this year showed largest sales for any February since the company was organized. For the first time February sales exceeded $10,000,000. No wonder the workers are feeling so cheap nowadays.

They Don't Want to Live

More than 20,000 human beings couldn't endure life under the present social system in this country during the past year and killed themselves—SUICIDES.

The number of those who put themselves to death during the past year was 23 per cent. greater than during 1920. There were 840 suicides in New York City alone, an increase of 103 over 1920.

We are told that 1,200 men and women before killing themselves, murdered more than 2,000 others, fathers or mothers killing their children, not able to leave them to endure the tortures of a "civilization" that had driven them to despair.

Apologists for the present social system say you cannot blame it on capitalism. Yet we are told that men and women were driven to suicide by loss of employment and commercial failure, twin evils of capitalist society.

With the ushering in of Communism, with the abolition of the last remnants of capitalist society fully accomplished, the reasons for human beings despairing of life and killing themselves will have been reduced to a minimum. Under Communism living will be a real joy for the first time in human history. Forward to Communism.

Individual Acts of Terrorism

Since the birth of the Communist movement in this country, the henchmen of capitalism, "Bill" Burns, the Thiels and other dime novel detectives, have been seeking to charge various disasters as being individual acts of terrorism growing out of the teachings and practices of the workers' advance guard.

They have tried to blame Communists for the Wall Street horror in New York City, for the Post Office explosion in Chicago, for the wrecking of Ex-Attorney General Palmer's home in Washington, and, of course, for every act of violence that takes place in all great industrial struggles.

Much the same reasoning was adopted by the social patriots in combatting the "21 Conditions of Affiliation" promulgated by the Second Congress of the Communist International. They tried to shout down affiliation with cries of new "Haymarket Riots" that might be repeated and charged against the workers, forgetting that the Mooney frame-up was still a living thing, and that the case was being prepared against Sacco and Vanzetti.

Individual acts of terrorism have been the defense of the helpless and desperate since time began. It is usually present where opportunities for organized effort are absent. The Communist movement has taken a definite stand repudiating it as a weapon of the working-class struggle.

The official position of the Communist International, as adopted at its Third Congress, held June 22nd—July 12th, 1921, is as follows:

> "With regard to acts of White Terror and the fury of bourgeois justice, the Communist Party must warn the workers not be deceived, during crises, by an enemy appeal to their leniency, but to demonstrate proletarian morality by acts of proletarian justice, in settling with the oppressors of the workers.
>
> "Individual acts of terrorism, however they may demonstrate the revolutionary rancor of the masses, however justified they may be as acts of retribution against the lynch law of the bourgeoisie and its social democratic flunkeys, are in no way apt to raise the workers to a higher level of organization, or make them better prepared to face the struggle.
> "Acts of sabotage are only justified when they can only serve the purpose of hindering the dispatch of enemy troops against the workers, and of conquering important strategic points from the enemy in direct combat."

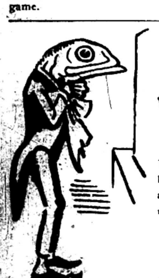
We publish this statement for the benefit of our readers. The capitalist press will not publish it the next time they launch an attack on the Communist movement. We do not expect the hell hounds of the system, commonly known as secret service operatives, to have brains enough to understand it. But the workers will learn and act accordingly.

The Genoa Conference

The announcement of the decision of the United States government that it will not participate in the Genoa conference can only be interpreted to mean that the European governments must wipe out that menace to capitalism—the Soviet government of Russia—before they can hope to receive substantial aid from the American capitalist class in restoring their shattered financial and industrial systems.

It is entirely probable that the decision was reached after conferences with representatives of French imperialism and that the present French government is entirely in accord with the American policy—which in actual fact is a replica of its own.

The propaganda disseminated by the Hoover relief organization, the mobilizing of the remnants of Wrangel's army, the donation of munitions worth 200,000,000 francs to the Turks by the French government and similar incidents tend to show that another drive against Russia is under consideration. The Harding administration is probably acting on what it believes to be inside information and prefers to continue waiting for the overthrow of the Soviet government feeling that it has the situation well in hand at home and that it has nothing to lose by playing a waiting game.



Wisdom of the Poor Fish

By Art Young

THE POOR FISH says his boss gave him a book on "Success and Character" and now he gets to work fresh every morning.

[illegible]

The apathy of the European and American workers in the face of unprecedented unemployment and wage [illegible] is probably the strongest influence in the formation of this policy.

It is significant also, that the capitalist press of this country just now is more than ever disturbed over the fact that the Red Army has not yet been demobilized. It is this army of workers and peasants that stands in the way of successful fruition of all the imperialist schemes. Were it only out of the way, Europe might become once more a paradise for capitalism. To-day it is a nightmare.

It's Getting Darker

Things are getting darker all around. Our unemployed are more numerous and worse off than ever. The high cost of living is going higher and the slightest attempt of the workers to resist the furious capitalist onslaught is met with hot lead and cold steel as seen in the murder of textile strikers in New England.

This is not a condition limited to America. It is worldwide. The ruin and chaos brought on by the war grip the entire world. And the situation does not offer the slightest hope for improvement. The future is pitch black. There are large supplies of "undigested" goods in the world because the masses who need them can't afford to pay for them out of the meagre wages given them by the bosses. Manufacturing prices are high. Taxation, both local and national, is growing ever more burdensome because of the increased expense in maintaining the strike-breaking and labor-crushing agencies of the armed forces of the various capitalist government. The breakdown of the exchange system makes trade impossible in many cases. With the practical disappearance of the gold standard in many European countries there is no link between the currencies of one country and another. This brings about an uncertainty of prices and rate of exchange turns business into wild speculation.

The whole machinery of capitalist production and exchange is shot to pieces. In a frantic effort to bolster up the system of wage-robbery the capitalists, aided by their labor-lieutenants, have launched a furious offensive against the workers of the world. For the workers of every country there can be but one way out of this blind alley of oppression and misery. We must answer the attacks of the capitalists in kind, that is, in the only language they understand. Against the united front of the enemy we must present a united front of labor. We must have unity of action by the toiling masses.

The call for a united front issued by the Communist International is the first ray of hope in these days of darkness. It is the most encouraging event of the times. It should inspire hope and courage in the heart of every worker. It points the way out of our misery. This is no time for any militant group of workers to stand pat on "purity of thought" and keep our ranks divided. Every workingman and woman should welcome this call for unity of action and line up in the fight against our mortal enemy—the capitalists of the world.

The Detente Cordiale

Our editorial drummers are making lots of noise about the twenty-year truce signed between England and France. The dove of peace is cooing once more; will this be its swan song or a death rattle for Capitalism? Europe is all in tatters, and the only visible sign of success in reconstruction is the great number of military alliances concluded by the diplomats.

There is not the slightest gain for peace in the new treaty. Lloyd George and Poincare have simply come to an agreement not to fight before they will be in a position to afford it.

And who should know better than they how long before Europe can be hurled into another orgy of blood. Considering the economic conditions at hand, twenty years is perhaps not so grossly exaggerated a guess.

As usual everybody wins at these conferences. Poincare has won, at least he has saved his face by securing a few weeks' postponement of the Genoa Conference; Lloyd George has won because the conference is to be held; as a matter of fact both sorely need the conference and neither one is ready for the date first set.

The guarantees given France against an attack by Germany aren't worth the paper they are written on.

Germany is in no position to attack France. All such talk merely affords France an excuse for maintaining her huge army. The pledge to protect Poland is also a bluff since Poland is in no danger from attack. The real difficulties of the situation have not even been touched.

Every Capitalist peace agreement hides a hornets' nest. The Treaty of Angora has not yet been revised, the Near East is a smoldering volcano. The German reparation settlement is still far from being an accomplished fact. France has not yet given up the hope of dancing to Wall Street's fiddle. The differences in politics toward Russia are still to be overcome.

The Anglo-French Alliance is a "Detente Cordiale." The two are as far apart as before. Not one of the causes for rivalry has been removed. As long as the Capitalists thru their Georges and Poincarés are at the helm military alliances and wars will be the only fruits of peace.

Not until the workers take things into their own hands and kick out their Exploiters and Oppressors can there be an Entente Cordiale among the nations of the world.

Gompers' "Friends" Again

The members of the present Congress at Washington, according to Mr. Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, have done nothing for labor, but have, on the other hand, done a lot to labor.

Nevertheless, reports the Federated Press, Mr. Gompers announces that the federation is planning to enter this year's congressional campaign upon its usual "reward our friends and defeat our enemies" plan.

Traveling once around the vicious circle we find that Gompers picks the "friends" of labor among the Democratic and Republican parties who are now in control of congress, but who in Gompers' own words, "have done nothing for labor."

Gompers and his executive council have learned nothing. Let the rank and file of American labor wake up. Spread the demand for independent working-class political action. Get into the Workers Party.

Fine Taste in Colors

The capitalist press is not quite so naive as it used to be. Time was when an incident such as the picketing of the Rand School by a union—an incident to which the socialist press has devoted much space—would have been seized upon with avidity as an example of the inability of the crazy reds to get along with each other.

To-day the capitalist journalists have developed a fine eye for color and can now tell yellow from red.

Thus it is that the capitalist press of New York City covers the action of the Rand School with a merciful silence. Capitalism's newest paramour must be protected.

The United Front in America

WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Just what is meant when we speak of a united front?

Do we mean political or industrial unity, or both? Is either possible?

To the writer a united front of labor in the United States means only one thing—unity of labor's forces in the daily struggle against the encroachments of an employing class that is drunk with power, that has a vision of a world at its feet in chains if it can but make impotent and incapable of effective protest its own working-class; unity in the fight against the open shop, the reduction of wages, the lengthening of hours and the abolition of shop and job conditions that are the result of years of ceaseless effort; unity of the class-conscious workers in the trade-unions against the negative—and quite often destructive policies of the trade-union officialdom.

This sort of unity will create a united front on the industrial field and make of the trade unions fighting class instruments; they are now appendages of the capitalist system; this sort of unity will bring results for the simple reason that much good has already been accomplished by the sporadic efforts of the so-called reds in the trade unions even though their activities have been sporadic and no national program has ever been laid down until the advent of the Trade Union Educational League.

Now arises the question of unity on the political or parliamentary field and the writer does not hesitate to say that such unity is impossible at present and probably always will be.

In the first place such a program of unity calls for co-operation during election campaigns with the same trade-union officialdom whose domination of the trade-union movement is reflected in its spineless attitude; in its lack of a fighting policy or indeed of any policy at all except that of a joint attack with the capitalist class on the radicals in the movement. Political unity means co-operation with the same individuals whom we must fight in the unions. This fact alone is enough to confound the theoreticians who make a fetish of unity; it cannot be explained away to the workers in the unions who must risk their membership and their jobs while they carry on the necessary agitation in the unions.

In the second place unity on the parliamentary field is neither necessary nor desirable. The function of a revolutionary party is to clarify issues and not to confuse the minds of the masses; particularly is this its function in a nation like United States where the workers are not yet politically conscious and where the officialdom whose co-operation would be sought is thoroly and entirely capitalistic in outlook.

Such unity would disgust and not attract the class-conscious workers even though it was desirable and we challenge anyone to show how the preliminary work for a united front can be done without the militant elements in and out of the trade-unions.

The oft-used example of the British Labor Party has no application for the United States. In Great Britain the old-line trade-union leaders—with a few exceptions—at least render lip service to the class-struggle and admit the necessity of the abolition of capitalism.

Here the reverse is true and so true that co-operation with the trade-union bureaucracy on the parliamentary field means placing the seal of approval on the capitalist system. It seems to the writer that in the proposals so far put forward for a united front that the tendency has been to overestimate the importance of parliamentary activity in a country where the parliamentary machinery of capitalism is protected by a system of checks and balances unknown in other less democratic countries and where an adverse parliamentary majority does not mean the resignation of the government in power; where by no purely parliamentary means available can the hold of the capitalist class on governmen broken in a nation where cong men are elected for two years, tors for six, the president fo and the supreme court justices federal judges appointed for Control of state government m little—witness North Dakota

About the best that can be pected from parliamentary acti the rolling up of a large pr st that may serve to check ou ght secution and stoppage of all ed tional and organizational activitie

Unity on the indust which, when sufficiently well org ized, becomes the political front well, is therefore the immedia that must go hand in hand wit tical activity carried on by tionists alone.

Larkin's Release Said to Be Certain

Freedom for Larkin Near, Friends Feel

BY HARRY GODFREY

Staff Writer for the Federated Press and The Worker

Pardon, or at least parole, is believed to be in store for James Larkin within a few days. Larkin, Communist, leader of the Irish transport workers and devoted worker for working-class freedom, was sentenced two years ago by a New York court to imprisonment for five to ten years for alleged "criminal anarchy."

If Governor Miller pardons or paroles Larkin, which friends of the latter believe on good authority he will, the action will be accompanied by a characteristic justification on legal and "moral" [illegible]

Larkin's trial in the Spring of [illegible] probably was the worst [illegible] [illegible] an American court. He was prosecuted by Alexander I. Rorke, an assistant district attorney of the shirt-tearing, flag-waving, [illegible]-shrieking kind, who stooped to the lowest tricks of vituperation and slander to make the jury think that James Larkin was an "alien enemy," "an archangel of assassinations," who with "lily-white fingers" would starve all the babies of the United States to death.

He was "tried"—prosecuted would be the more accurate word—by Justice Bartow S. Weeks, who vied with Rorke in insolence and studied effort to prejudice the jury.

And thru the whole trial—as, it may be mentioned, throut all the other "criminal anarchy" trials in New York—not a scrap of evidence was introduced to show that Larkin ever had murdered or intended to murder anybody, or that he had ever incited or tried to incite anybody to such an act, or that he had attempted to "overthrow the government by force."

When Larkin was arrested the police not only had no warrant, but they stole from him papers which would have been important help in his defense. The court made no effort to have these papers returned.

When Frank P. Walsh recently argued the case for Larkin on appeal before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, he charged again and again that Larkin was treated by the court as a guilty man before the verdict was reached, and that Justice Weeks materially assisted in the prosecution. Walsh showed how, after Larkin came to America in November, 1914, to effect a union of Irish and American labor, he tried eleven times to return to his home in Dublin, but was prevented by the British government.

Walsh, in a recent article in an American magazine, declared "it was his (Larkin's) broad vision and unconquerable energy which rescued Irish labor from the depths into which it had been flung and laid the foundation of the Irish labor movement as it now exists."

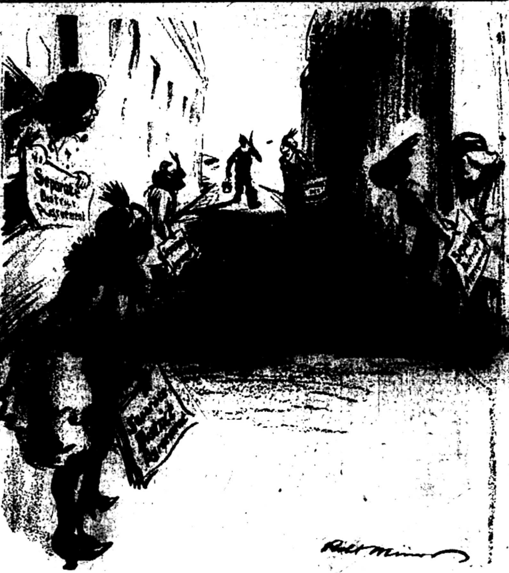
Will the Coal Miner Fall for Mine Owner's Lure, "The Separate Agreement," an Invitation to the "Open Shop"



Bob Minor pictures here an old scene with a modern application. Just as the red-light districts of a capitalistic society spread their poison and disease among the workers denied a normal existence, so does the poison of separate agreements threaten to sap the fighting effectiveness of the coal miners' union. To accept immediate gains at the price of solidarity means destruction for the miners.

Hard Coal Miners and Bosses Meet

While the probability of a nation-wide strike in the soft-coal fields grows greater daily the representatives of the Pennsylvania anthracite miners are meeting the operators' committee — appropriately enough—at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

The miners committee consists of 39 representatives of the national and district organizations of the United Mine Workers of America and speaks for approximately 175,000 men in the anthracite industry.

The general demands of the union are as follows:

1. A two-year blanket contract that will end all individual agreements in the mining of coal.
2. A 20 per cent increase in the contract rates for mining coal and a flat $1 a day increase for day men.
3. Uniformity of rates in the anthracite regions.
4. Extension of the eight-hour day to all classes of work around the mine.

The Call for May Day!

The call for the celebration of International May Day, May 1, 1922, has been sent out by the Workers Party.

The Central Executive Committee of the party, in a special appeal, has ordered that every local organization shall organize May Day Mass Meetings or Demonstrations, in conjunction with all other working-class organizations, industrial and political, that are willing to co-operate on this occasion.

The Workers Party committees will take the initiative by inviting all labor organizations to send delegates to a conference called by the Workers Party for the purpose of organizing a "Joint May Day Committee."

The Workers Party delegates to this conference will propose that the conference organize itself as a Joint May Day Committee to have full charge of the May Day arrangements. They shall propose that the demonstrations shall be held upon the basis of the following program—A UNITED LABOR FRONT:—

(a) Against the open shop and reduction in wages.

(b) Against industrial court laws and injunctions.

(c) Work or compensation at union wages for the unemployed.

(d) Release of class-war prisoners.

(e) Recognition of and trade with Soviet Russia.

The Workers Party delegates may agree to [illegible] or amendments to this program but must insist upon [illegible] issues.

Representation shall be given to all [illegible] on the speakers' list of the May Day [illegible]

Communists and Socialists Try to Agree

A gathering of the representatives of the workingclass movements of all nations, designed to re-unite the revolutionary movement of the whole world for an offensive against Capitalism will be planned at a meeting of executive committees to be held in Berlin, March 25, pursuant to the call for a United Front recently sent out by the Third International.

The executive of the Second International has already agreed to attend and it is believed that the bankruptcy of European capitalism will bring into agreement for a joint congress representatives of all the warring factions.

The chief task of the Berlin Conference will be to arrive at a basis for unity. Bitter as have been the disagreements for the past four and one-half years, the terrible economic pressure upon the workers of Europe is compelling a new alignment.

[illegible] representatives of the Third International will ask that government socialists like Scheidemann and Noske be disowned by their organizations.

In European circles the coming conference is beginning to overshadow the conference of premiers to be held at Genoa. The belief is generally held that if a common program of action is decided upon at Berlin and real unity obtained it matters little what the Genoa conference does.

Celebrate on Anniversary of Commune

Workers in New York City will celebrate the anniversary of the Paris Commune, this Sunday afternoon, March 19th, at a huge demonstration to be held at the Central Opera House, 205 East 67th St.

This will also be the fifth anniversary of the overthrow of the czar in Russia, in March, 1917, which resulted the following November in the Bolshevist victory and the establishment of the Soviet Republic.

Chief among the speakers will be Robert Minor, the world's most famous cartoonist and journalist, who will speak on "The Lessons of the Paris Commune."

Among the speakers will be Moissaye J. Olgin, author of "The Soul of the Russian Revolution;" Oliver Carlson, secretary of the National Organization Committee of the Young Workers League, and J. Louis Engdahl, of the staff of THE WORKER.

This mass meeting will also be the opening of the drive to establish a DAILY WORKER in New York City. It is under the auspices of the Workers Party.

Let all workers turn out and make this event an historic milestone in the advance of the revolutionary workers of the city and nation. Turn out in masses. Come yourself. Bring others with you.

THE WORKERS SHOULD READ [illegible] COPY OF THE WORKER; [illegible] IN CIRCULATION

The Rand Revolt

It will be some time before the exact details of the Rand strike, ending in civil war and slaughter, reach this country.

That a strike of miners has been going on for several months is known, but the dispatches concerning it have been meagre indeed, and the constant boosting of the Smuts government by both the liberal and the capitalist press has served to conceal the extreme unpopularity with which it must be faced in South Africa in order that the revolt of the miners and sympathizers could reach proportions where the entire military forces of the government were needed to put it down.

Jan Smuts, premier of South Africa, is one of the pro-consuls of the British Empire; he is one of those individuals whom Great Britain so successfully buys in each of her dependencies and puts to work subduing their own countrymen.

That Smuts has qualified for his duties is shown by the ruthless methods employed in defeating the strikers.

Their headquarters were bombed from aircraft, and but scant attention seems to have been paid to the safety of the civil population.

The lurid tales of strikers found to be wearing women's clothes, shot while sniping at government troops, are in line with the best traditions of imperialism and serve to convince us, at least, that women have been killed by the imperial forces and the interesting tale cooked up to conceal the fact.

The workers of this country, particularly the miners, on the eve of an industrial conflict themselves, will feel a deep sympathy for the brave fellows who fought a losing battle in far-off South Africa.

They will await detailed accounts of the tragedy, but [illegible] to know that labor has lost another battle because the state power remained in the hands of labor's enemies.

One thing of value comes out of the strike—the unconcealable fact that the great capitalist nation of Europe is faced with the rapid dissolution of her empire. It has begun to break up; bayonets and bombs can no longer save it.

Labor's Spring Cleaning

BY WILLIAM F. DUNNE

More than two months have passed since the textile workers in the Pawtuxet valley struck against a 20 per cent reduction in wages. Their ranks are stronger to-day than they were the day the strike was declared, and there is not the slightest indication that they are not willing to fight all summer.

This one incident effectively refutes the contention of the pessimists who are always telling us that the workers will not fight, that they deserve what they get, etc. Here are thousands of men and women, poorly paid and unable to save, who, when they went on strike, knew that they were cutting off their only source of income; who knew that hunger and want would be their daily portion as long as the strike lasted. Yet they struck and are still striking.

It is not the mass of the workers that is afraid of the conflict. They will fight and starve and die; they have been doing it for uncounted years in order to obtain for themselves and others the few miserable privileges the workers enjoy here and there. The workers will fight. Those who presume to lead the workers, however, are not quite so militant. They can always find excuses for postponing the combat; they are always too ready to preach peace and submission rather than take the field. They have no confidence in the workers because they themselves have done all they can to kill the fighting spirit that actuates the mass when the issues are clearly put before it.

For this they are honored by the press and spokesmen of the rulers. They are called sane and conservative. They are a bulwark against radicalism. They stand for Americanism. They can see both sides of a question; mistaken, at times, they may be, but they really have the interests of our country at heart, you know.

All of these things the conservative officials of the American labor are, but one thing they are not. They are not representative of the workers of this nation even in the daily struggle and their influence is exerted to the same end as that of the press, the schools and the "movies"—to deaden the sense of injustice and to gloss over the glaring inequalities of reward in the present system. They do not glory in a strike of workers against even the most rotten forms of oppression but instead they apologize for it.

Their most characteristic utterance is a whining complaint that the employers have not co-operated with them to prevent a strike.

They want peace. It is only when the workers, in spite of them, decide to resist that they ever go into action. They do not lead. They repress. Instead of arousing the fighting spirit of the workers they do their best to kill it and have always done so.

Every strike in the last three years has been in spite of the officials. Once it occurs they give but lukewarm support and look eagerly for some sort of a compromise that will furnish an excuse to call it off and get the workers back on the job. The result of this policy can be seen everywhere. The workers are now forced to fight but are disorganized. The resistance of labor as a national force is shattered and all but destroyed. In any one of the big strikes, from the coal strike to the strike of packinghouse workers, [illegible] Literature Department [illegible] immediately after the Party convention, in the Party headquarters at 799 Broadway, New York City.

This department of party work, which publishes the Party literature, establishes agencies and book stores in various parts of the country, is now a thriving institution of the first magnitude.

Branches Sell Literature

The Party branches in every state of the Union serve as excellent literature selling agencies. These party branches appreciate the necessity of the Party becoming its own publisher and are lining up splendidly behind a Literature Loan Drive recently launched by the Department. This drive is for $5000 to be raised in loans from the membership, and is to be repaid in literature. Loans from $1 to $25 arrive daily in the National Office, attesting to the popularity of the Drive.

A number of City Central Committees have voted substantial loans from their treasuries. Others have promised such loans, and many party members have subscribed individually.

Since the party convention the Department has published and supplied the Locals with the Party Constitution in pamphlet form. It is also publishing "The A.B.C. of Communism" complete in two volumes. The first volume is now ready for sale. A translation of Lenin's Imperialism, the Last Stage of Capitalism, will be issued soon.

Translation Authentic

This valuable book by the master mind of Communism, will be a distinctive work of the revolutionary movement, dealing as it does with the latest phases of capitalist development. The translation is by Dr. Jacob Whitmer Hartman, Editor of Soviet Russia—a guarantee of correctness and authenticity.

The increasing volume of business done by the Literature Department shows the wholehearted support being rendered it by the party membership. With the live-wire literature agents in every Party local and branch, this business will shew a constant increase and a profit to the party which will be used to further enlarge the propaganda work of the Party.

With the placing of a number of speakers in the field, the meetings held will further augment the literature sales. It is a settled policy of the party that no public meeting nor meeting of the membership shall be held without the offering for sale of the Party's literature.

Literature Under Control

The fact that the Party will not permit the publication of literature by its members unauthorized by the Party, serves to keep the literature which the Party handles up to the highest standard. The Literature Department is making every effort to serve the Party to the fullest extent and thru the co-operation of all units of the Party will succeed in the tasks it has set out to accomplish.

Society attended a prize fight at Madison Square Garden, New York, and it is given first page space. If the workers attended a prize fight in the suburbs it would no doubt be raided by the police and all taken to the nearest lockup. There's a difference, you know.

A cablegram [illegible] Friends of Soviet Russia [illegible] to the effect that the peasants [illegible] wooden toys [illegible] friends.

The peasants in the Volga region are desirous of showing their gratitude toward the American workers, who, when their Russian fellow workers were starving, did their utmost to aid them. Hence this shipment of these highly prized products of the deft Russian fingers.

It is not generally known that the wooden toys made by Russian peasants are noted for their originality and beauty. Yet wherever peasant art is appreciated, wherever handicraft is understood, these wooden toys are regarded as among the choicest in the world.

These wooden toys will be auctioned of at bazaars, and the proceeds returned in food and other necessities to the famine areas of Russia.

Every friend of Soviet Russia must endeavor to procure one of these toys.

Large Shipment of Clothing.

The S. S. Rockaway Park left New York on March 8, for Reval, containing 190 bales of clothing, 10 bags of cereals and flour, and 6 cases of groceries. The approximate weight of this shipment was 80,000 pounds and the value more than $60,000.

A contribution of 2,000 pounds of buckwheat and 930 pounds of beans by a farmer in Ashville, N. Y., arrived too late for this steamer.

What Soviet Russia is Doing.

While appealing for aid to the outside world, the Soviet Government is doing its utmost to collect as much grain within Greater Russia as possible. Thus the provinces with "good" and "poor" harvests, the famine provinces, Siberia, Northern Caucasus, Khirgiz, Turkestan, Crimea and the Ukraine furnished more than 3,000,000 tons of grain up to January 11. More than 700,000 tons have been allocated for seeding purposes.

At the same time, the government is reclaiming considerable of the marsh land and is making an effort to put into use much of the arable land at present untouched. There are more than 20,000,000 acres of land in the south that could be cultivated if irrigated.

In the Moscow province the workers of the mills and factories have organized small farms covering an area of 24,000 acres. Further land is being freed and will be cultivated on a large scale and by modern methods.

Great Need of Motor Vehicles.

Soviet Russia is a vast country. The roads are not very good, as a result of the devastating work of the counter-revolutionaries and of the years of warfare, during which very little constructive or repair work could be done. But in addition, Soviet Russia is in dire need of motor vehicles. Thus the total number of motor vehicles at the present time is only 23,000, and all are not fit for service.

America, the home of the motor car truck, MUST furnish the Russian workers and peasants with sufficient motor implements to ensure a good harvest next fall.

Soviet Russia still clamors for lorries and tractors. American workers must heed the call.

Scouts and Women's Division.

The Friends of Soviet Russia has inaugurated two new sections for extending its work. The children of this country are to be recruited for the great work of relief, especially for the children. The Mothers and working-class women are to be organized to aid their suffering sisters in the Land of Hunger.

ORGANIZERS WANTED

The Friends of Soviet Russia requires the services of several capable men for organizers. If you are qualified, or know some one who is qualified, communicate with the National Office at [illegible] West [illegible] Street, New York. Applicants should have had special training as organizers. In answering, state experience, peculiar qualifications for this work and with what territories you are familiar.

What Labor Faces

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE

For a number of years certain spokesmen of the workingclass of America, some self-appointed and some representative, have occupied themselves and either amused or instructed their audiences by predicting the ultimate downfall and collapse of capitalism, until convinced of the inevitability of the occurrence, large numbers of that same workingclass have been content to await, with a mingled feeling of joy and fear, the coming of the awesome event.

Today we stand face to face with problems brought to our attention, not by the increasing evidences of decay, but by the actual breakdown of the system of production and exchange upon which is based the social form called capitalism.

That the workers in the United States of America are unable at present to cope with these problems can be proved by a thousand instances and they share, with exception of a small minority, the helplessness exhibited by the ruling class confronted by the world-wide collapse of everything it held unchangeable.

In their use of just one resource has the ruling class of the world surprised the optimists who believed that the collapse of capitalism accompanied by education of the workers along economic lines would result in the co-operative commonwealth, and that is in the ability and the willingness of the rulers to resort to the use of armed force to keep in subjection the starving and revolting workers.

So eagerly have the rulers and their hangers-on seized upon this weapon that in Europe today constitutional monarchies and democracies have been transformed into military dictatorships and the remnant of capitalism functions solely by brutally crushing with steel and drowning in blood the mass-movements of the working-class.

The mask is off and capitalism in its new guise of imperialism shows to the workers without attempt at concealment, exactly upon what its rule has always depended—force; to quote our own Woodrow Wilson, "force without stint or limit."

Production is at a standstill. Trade stagnates. In the chaos which has followed the war currency of the European nations no longer serves as a medium of exchange. Millions have starved and millions more will starve this winter while the murderous militarism of the rulers stands guard over imperialism and hurls the bodies of the dead and dying workers into the pit of the damned that is the Europe of today.

In the United States an overwhelming majority of the workers are entirely unaware that they live in a period of revolutionary change.

They still accept capitalism as the last word in social organization and the greater proportion of even the organized workers—themselves a small percentage of the working class—are organized solely for the purpose of making the best possible bargain without in any way changing the system itself.

It is hardly necessary to say that more pointedly than ever, during and since the war, has the fact been emphasized that in this stronghold of political democracy the position of the worker in the capitalist state is no better than in other nations where the empty forms of political freedom are not so apparent.

The lessons of the steel strike, the coal strike at West Virginia, Newport, Ky., and only yesterday of the railway strike, in all of which the workers and their leaders, much to the expressed surprise of the latter, found themselves facing not merely the group of the capitalist class which they believed themselves to be fighting but with the entire force of American capitalism operating thru that very efficient agency of capitalism—the government of the United States of America, the only nation whose rulers came out of a war with increased power over an exploited class.

And so we come to the great delusion. "We cannot fight the government," said the officials of the railway brotherhoods. So said the president of the United Mine Workers and all who believe that this is the same republic which gained its political freedom from a foreign power by force of arms applaud both loud and long.

They are mistaken and the mem- [illegible]

I said [illegible] country that gave birth to the idea of Jeffersonian democracy. Territorially, it has expanded into a nation stretching from ocean to ocean and including Cuba and Haiti on the east and the Philippines to the west.

Economically, it has passed thru the period of individual ownership in capitalist enterprise to the trust and monopoly.

Politically, from the democracy of a pioneer nation to the autocracy of a financial oligarchy, imperialist in tendency and action. The capitalist class of the United States sent their fighting forces to take part in a world war, and the American capitalist class now reaches out to seize whatever may be profitably exploited wherever it may be found.

The need for clear thinking on economic and political matters was never greater than it is to-day, and yet there has never been greater confusion among the workers and those who voice or pretend to voice their aspirations. There are those who believe that at the ballot-box can be solved all the problems of the present and who see in the capture of the parliamentary processes thru the ballot the arrival of the millenium; forgetting apparently that history records no instance of a ruling class voluntarily relinquishing power because the majority has so willed.

There are others who swing to the opposite extreme and declare that the capitalist power of government springs solely from the fact of ownership of natural resources and machinery; that it is but the shadow of the economic system. "Take the land and the factories, you workers," they cry, "and the capitalist state will vanish." They forget that, shadow or substance as you will, the government under capitalism, with its appendages of courts, police, and military, has been set up to protect property and owners from an exploited multitude and that it is there between the worker and the necessities of a fuller and richer life; it is functioning as a reality and calling it names does not alter the fact.

While capitalism lasts the struggle of the masses for its abolition will be political whether that struggle takes place in the factories, on the platform and at the polling places or by the use of weapons of armed warfare which capitalism finds so useful.

How can we tell where the struggle is being waged today?

There is one sure and certain way. Being a struggle of the working masses, that struggle is going on where the workers gather, where they work and play, where they live. It follows then that any party which claims to voice the needs and aims of the workers who are intelligent enough and dissatisfied enough to desire that a speedy end be made of wage-slavery and its attendant ills must be composed of workers and conducting its activities where the workers are found.

It must enter into the daily lives of the working masses. It must be part of them. It must know the shame and the sorrows of the workers.

It must know their joys and miseries so that when it speaks it speaks with the voice of the workers and not with what someone thinks that voice should be.

To accomplish this unity of action is needed—on the part of the workers who are already class-conscious.

This is the only group in the American working class movement able to appreciate the necessity for a united front and courageous enough to work for it at the expense of some personal sacrifice. Consequently, it is to this group that the first call for a united front must be addressed.

LECTURE

"THE INDUSTRIAL WORK OF THE WORKERS PARTY."

BY WILLIAM F. DUNNE

Williamsburg Headquarters

226 Roebling St.

FRIDAY, MARCH 24,

8 p. m.

Drawn by ART YO

Samoa Shown to Be the Haiti of Pacific

The United States Navy has another Haiti in the Pacific according to charges about the treatment of the Samoan Islands published in THE NATION for March 15. Without any proprietary rights in the Samoan Islands, which have been used for many years as a naval coaling station, our navy is said to have destroyed the independence of the natives, by the same autocratic methods which have been described in the case of Haiti and other Caribean republics.

The Fono, or native parliament of about 400 "High Chiefs, Talking Chiefs, and Chiefs," of the Samoan Islands, repeatedly recognized in treaties as the governing body of the islands, was arbitrarily dissolved in 1920 by the commandant of the naval coaling station. The natives protested, and an inquiry was ordered. When the commandant learned that his administration was to be investigated, he committed suicide. The investigation, according to the account in THE NATION, whitewashed the facts, audited the tax records for only two months back, and established the chief officer of the investigating court as "Governor of American Samoa."

The Samoans, by their own statement presented to the United States Government, have to pay taxes to the naval government, and are never told how their money is spent. They need roads, police protection, drainage, adequate schools, development of the resources of the Island, but none of these things, they claim, are provided from the tax receipts. A law of the naval occupation is supposed to protect Samoan girls and women from violation, but this law is not enforced in many cases of violation by naval officers.

After this and other complaints by the Samoans, the commandant enacted a sedition law, under which any criticism of the American government in Samoa can be punished by a $2000 fine and sixteen years' imprisonment. Several chiefs were imprisoned under this law. He also assembled thirty-nine chiefs and obtained their signatures to a letter protesting loyalty to the American occupation. These signatures, the article asserts to have been extorted. In August, 1921, the author of THE NATION's article, an American born in Samoa, who has been active in presenting the Samoan grievances was denied admission at Pago Pago on personal business.

Further treaties and documents on Samoa are announced for early publication by THE NATION.

TEN WORKERS SHOULD READ THIS COPY OF THE WORKER; KEEP IT IN CIRCULATION

"British army costs cut $155,000,000," declares one headline. Another says, "U. S. army bill reported with $86,000,000 cut." John Bull seems to be more broke than Uncle Sam.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is planning to build a $3,000,000 temple to capitalism at Washington, D. C. The "open shop" is a paying institution, for the capitalist.

The troops of the Far Eastern Republic (Soviet Siberia) have just captured a town by the name of Hooverveo in their advance on Vladivostock. The despatch says the town was named after Herbert Hoover but does not state who gave it the name. The fact that it had to be captured by the Russian workers looks suspicious.

"City library needs money for books," says a headline over an article about the lack of funds for the New York public library. But the money will continue to go for battleships, altho Director Edwin H. Anderson declares, "There is a constantly increasing demand by the public for books." First, keep the workers ignorant by putting knowledge beyond their reach. But if any should imbibe a little learning and lead in a movement for emancipation, be ready to crush it. That is capitalism. Against capitalism stands Communism.

What Others Do You Can Do!

What One Branch Has Done.

The English Branch of Cleveland, Ohio, made the boosting of the circulation of "THE WORKER" a special order of business at one of its meetings. The result was that nine members each took over responsibility for the sale of a weekly bundle varying in size from 5 to 25, the total number handled being 100. A bill for these is sent to the branch secretary once a month. The papers are sold at the regular bundle rate of 3½c. per copy and in this way the branch has a revenue of $6.00 per month besides carrying on the best kind of propaganda work.

How about your branch?

H. E. Ungleich, of Syracuse, N. Y. writes: "I've hung back from renewing until convinced that THE WORKER would become a real live periodical filling the needs of the American labor movement. At present "THE WORKER" is the best yet and I'm sending you one of the first $2 earned since Christmas to insure its delivery."

• • •

T. R. Sullivan, is the live and hustling District Organizer of District No. 10. He is pushing the circulation of the paper by getting cigar stores to handle it.

This is not difficult. All the branch members have to do is to suggest to the merchant that they would like to buy this paper from him.

Allowance is made for unsold copies and instead of mailing these back to the office the district organizer collects them and uses them for sample copies in boosting the circulation of the paper in outlying districts.

He gives a receipt to the merchant for the papers returned and these are sent to the office in making settlements.

Nick Petkoff, Cleveland, Ohio, sends in six half-yearly subs and two yearlies, together with a request for a supply of sub cards. Here is what he has to say about our paper:

THE WORKER is just what we need in this dark age of 100 percentism, American Plan, White-Guard Terror, etc. As an educator of the masses in teaching the class struggle "THE WORKER" occupies the leading place and should be in every workingman's home. We will do our best to get subs and some day we will have a "DAILY WORKER"; let's hope that day is not far off. Long live the revolution! Long live class-consciousness!

Grand Rapids, Mich., local of the Workers Party, is the next new organization to get into the line-up, with an order for 25 copies weekly.

Fred Merrick celebrates his advent in the office of District Organiser of District No. 5, by boosting the circulation of "THE WORKER" from 100 to 300 weekly. The Pittsburgh local has worked out a special scheme of distribution direct from local headquarters.

In a little mining town in Illinois there is a Socialist barber, and associated with him is a Socialist bootblack. These comrades wrote in for sample copies and the result of their dispatch was an order for a weekly bundle. The barber has nothing but rebel sheets on his table and the boot-black is building up a good route for the sale of "THE WORKER."

The Jewish Branch, w 100 members, is doing great wo preparing for their new daily pap 'Freedom,' thousands of dollars bei raised in this town. Cleveland w soon be back to the times when, t years ago, a call to the workers May first, was answered by 100,00 men and women workers. Go to th masses, that is the only way to ga power, print in our paper article about the every-day struggle of th workers, and then see that our pre reaches them. Let us know ho many individual subscribers for th "Worker" you have in Cleveland an how many are put out thru bundle agents. It is a letter of this kind that makes us wish we had an endowment fund to keep our loyal supporters on our mailing lists indefinitely during periods when their luck gives out. If all our better fixed members would do their full duty by the paper it could be done, but at present it is impossible. J. M. Eihna, of Philadelphia, writes us:

"I know my subscription expired with December of last year but I am out of work since November, and in January I took sick and went to the hospital. When I got out the end of February, I found at my home 'THE WORKER' instead of 'The Toiler.' I was surprised indeed and very glad over the change, but I had no chance to send in my dollar for my subscription. Knowing that the paper needs money, just as we workers need the paper, I am cutting a dollar out of my poor board, and I will try to get some more subscribers to that indispensable paper."

[illegible] Coal Operators [illegible] Separate Pacts

WASHINGTON.—Secretary of Labor Davis has received new and explicit instructions from President Harding to bring the organized bituminous operators into conference with the United Mine Workers of America, in accordance with their signed agreement of March, 1920.

The strike of 1920 was due to the fact that the operators, even when they came into the conference, refused to negotiate. When confronted with the union's demands, the operators' spokesmen shook their heads and said "Your demands are excessive. We cannot consider them."

"They are negotiable," the miners said. "Give us an offer."

"Your demands are excessive," replied the operators again. And without having further discussed the demands they went out and told the public that the conference had failed. They had taken the utmost care that there should be no negotiations whatever.

President Harding's position as to his duty when the operators repeat this performance is not disclosed. He is familiar with the facts, and he is anxious to avoid the decision between operators and miners, which the beginning of a strike would force upon him. He does not want to force the operators to break their pledge to each other to ignore the union henceforth. But he wishes that they would not make him responsible before the country for a life and death struggle by the miners to maintain their organization.

"Pass the Buck" in Illinois.

CHICAGO.—"Passing the buck" to the Illinois coal miners, the Illinois coal operators have asked for an answer to their proposal to make a separate wage agreement with Illinois unions to take the place of the national agreement which expires on March 31st. The operators in the other districts have violated the agreement by refusing to meet the union's international officials to negotiate a new scale.

IOWA MINERS FOR STRIKE.

ALBIA, Ia.—Iowa miners are overwhelmingly in favor of a strike April 1st, should the operators refuse to renew the agreement with the United Mine Workers according to the vote of the first 29 of the 81 local unions in the state to be received at district headquarters here. There were 3,534 votes for the strike and 257 against it, Secretary John Gay announces. All locals cast a majority in favor of the strike. Between 13,000 and 14,000 miners, all organized, are affected.

Hard Coal Miners and Operators in Conference

5. Continuating of the check-off system of collecting dues.

The details of the wage-scale will be worked out by a special scale committee which will remain in conference with the operators until an agreement is reached at until it is evident a settlement is impossible.

Figures submitted by the miners' committee show that an average of 500 workers lose their lives in the industry in each working year and that 20,000 are injured annually. No casualty figures for mine owners were submitted by their committee.

A late feature of the national situation was the joint demand of Catholic and Protestant religious bodies for a conference between owners and miners. The joint statement indicates that some special virtue is attached to a conference and that after a meeting the coal owners may do as they please safe in the knowledge that the great "public" has not been unduly shocked by a refusal to meet the representatives of the men who dig the coal.

President Farrington of the Illinois district has again notified the national office of his intention to enter into a separate conference with the Illinois operators if a national conference is not arranged with the operators of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Western Pennsylvania—the central competitive field—before March 31st.

Farrington's attitude is foreign to the past policy of the United Mine Workers which has long held to the practice of dealing with these fields as a unit.

It is known that the organization can obtain separate district agreements providing it is willing to abandan its policy of having all agreements expire on the same date.

Insofar as Farrington wishes to enter into a separate agreement for Illinois, his policy is in accord with that of the operators.

Reports from the districts received at Indianapolis show that the membership of the union is overwhelmingly in favor of a strike beginning March 1, if settlement is not reached.

Bernard Shaw's "Candida" which Ellen Van Valkenburg and Maurice Browne are to present as the first bill of their repertoire season at the Greenwich Village Theatre has been postponed from Monday to Wednesday night, March 22.

[illegible]

Oppression breeds resistance. Poison injected into the human body compels it to prepare anti-toxins or die. The subversive policies of labor leaders are preparing the weapon to offset them—the rising consciousness of the workers, the rapidly growing belief that an end must be made of a leadership which stands for capitalism and which will not fight for fear of offending the system to which it looks for favors.

There is going to be a real labor movement in America because no further evidence is needed that the workers will fight and sacrifice when it is necessary. The miners, the packinghouse workers and the textile workers have proved this.

The timid, the crooked and the ignorant leaders must go.

It is spring, and labor is getting ready to clean house. The house of labor is badly cluttered up with a lot of old trash such as obsolete policies, artificial divisions, personal animosities and ambitions, and it will take more than one season to put it in order but—the task will be done.

The militant workers have a new broom this spring—The Trade Union Educational League—and it is going to sweep clean the house of labor. A lot of disinfectant will be needed when it comes to getting rid of some of labor's mis-leaders, but it will be furnished by the thousands of class-conscious workers who for the first time are united on a common program of action.

Feeble-Minded Saviors

One of those little contradictions of the capitalist system which are the cause of much joy to the intelligent worker is exposed in all its ludicrous asininity thru such a respectable medium as the Rotary Club. The club is endeavoring to make business better by the use of bill boards. In its advertisements a dignified appeal is made to the workers to "work hard; spend what you may. Prosperity is just around the corner."

With some six or seven millions of workers compelled to be idle because their labor cannot be used at a profit; with the echoes of the thrift campaigns still lingering in their ears it is little wonder that children of ten and twelve years believe that the only requirement for membership in the Rotary Club is to once have been an inmate of some institution for the feeble-minded.

The Rotary Club is nevertheless said to be composed of the best brains of the various professions and that vaguely defined classification called "businessmen."

If you are tempted to make sarcastic remarks about the state of the nation just remember that to the class represented by the Rotary Club has been entrusted the task of running the country.

We rise to congratulate The Literary Digest. Its "Special British Empire Number," containing a fulsome article on the prosperity and harmony that British imperialism has brought to South Africa, was just nicely distributed when the Rand rebellion occurred.

It is risky to be real positive about rulers and empires in these parlous times.

A collection is being taken up in Hungary for former Emperor Charles who is said to be unable to pay his rent because of prolonged unemployment. This is the kind of unemployment we favor.

Labor Pageant Staged by Defense Committee

Rehearsals of the Labor Pageant to be shown at the International Baazar, The Lyceum, 86th Street and Third Avenue, March 22-25, indicate that it is one of the finest things of its kind ever offered to the public. It will be given by an organization of artists who have donated their services for the occasion and who are well known to New York audiences.

MARY HEATON VORSE, after witnessing a rehearsal, pronounced it a wonderful spectacle and wants to make it the subject of a special article.

ROSE PASTOR STOKES is also very enthusiastic about the pageant and appreciates it not only from the propaganda angle but also as an artistic and colorful production.

The Pageant opens with two symbolic figures—slaves bowed and chained—a dance of grief follows. There is a picture of the Russia of yesterday—prisoners on the road to Siberia. The scene changes and the workers are in power. Then America—the death of the Mingo strikers. "Education" appears and gives a dramatic recital of the workers' struggle.

The workers rebel, grief is replaced with the fever of battle—the chains are broken. The workers of every nation are freed and the national dances of the nations end in a tableau of all nations united in a Workers' World.

Moving pictures of the Pageant will be taken and also of the crowds which see it. The committee in charge of the Bazaar states that, although every cent of the proceeds will go for the defense of class-war prisoners, the pageant and other attractions will return more than value received to the purchasers of tickets in pleasure and educational value.

Reserve the evenings of March 22-25 for the International Bazaar. It will be worth your while and in addition you will be helping the men who are in jail for you.

ST. LOUIS.—The Carpenters District Council [illegible] $1.25 an hour is not more than the amount necessary to maintain an American standard of living.

Carpenters work an average of only 150 to 200 days a year, the statement points out. Statistics from employers' publications are quoted to prove that the major portion of the cost of building does not go to the men who do the work.

The statement challenges the authority of the so-called "citizens' committee" to fix wages and arbitrarily dictate conditions under which men must work, and asserts, "The carpenters' union also is a citizens' committee which feels that it has the right to fix the price of labor in view of the fact that retail dealers fix the prices of commodities which the carpenters must buy."

"In the event the 'citizens' committee' is animated by a righteous purpose to accomplish a reduction in the cost of homebuilding," continues the statement, "rather than the single purpose of hammering down wages, we wish to submit a statement published in the American Contractor of December 3, 1921, showing the relation of labor costs to the entire cost of buildings: Materials, 43.4; labor, 27.1; engineers, fees, 4.8; contractors' overhead, 4.2; contractors' profit, 8.3; insurance, 0.9; freight on materials, 8.3; construction plant rental, 3; total, 100.

"This table is submitted in order to show that wages are a minor factor in the entire cost, and that other elements of cost should be given at least equal consideration, a fact that seems to be generally overlooked by the public as well as other agencies directly concerned.

"There is another factor concerning which a strange silence is maintained by those who are most active in trying to reduce wages, and that is the cost of building sites. A man may purchase a piece of vacant property, hold it for a time, and, with no effort or sacrifice on his part, sell it for a price that nets him a comfortable fortune. This transaction is usually referred to as a 'romance of real estate,' and the gentleman who accomplishes this feat is honored and held in esteem as a benefactor of our city."

Poland and Hungary in Secret Treaty for War

By FRERERICK KUH

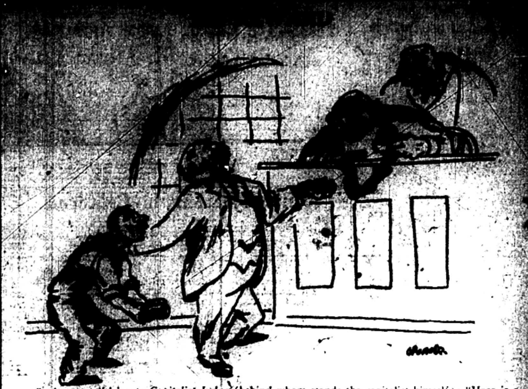
(Fed. Press Staff Correspondent)

VIENNA.—A secret treaty has been concluded between Poland and Hungary and signed at Warsaw. It is of the utmost significance to the whole alignment of political forces in Central Europe. It is now established that Poland has entered a most intimate entente with Hungary. That entente, created behind Prague's back is directed against the Czecho-Slovakians, as well as against the Rusisan regime. Stated compactly the secret Polish-Hungarian alliance is as follows:

1. Since Hungary is not represented at the League of Nations Poland affirms its readiness to advocate the interests of Hungary in the league and elsewhere.
2. Poland pledges itself not to participate in a war waged against Hungary.
3. The Polish government agrees to use all means available (even including armed force) to oppose an eventual annexation of Hungarian territory by Czecho-Slovakia.
4. The Hungarian government makes a similar promise regarding annexation of Polish territory by Szecho-Slovakia.
5. In case Poland should find itself engaged in war against Russia and should Rumania range itself or the side of Poland, Hungary undertakes not to attack Rumania during the Rumano-Polish operations against Soviet Russia.
6. In the event of a conflict between Poland and Czecho-Slovakia, Hungary will adopt an attitude of benevolent neutrality towards Poland and exercise what diplomatic pressure she can on that side.

COLUMBUS.—Coming into the open with their plan to disrupt the United Mine Workers of America, thecoal operators of southern Ohio have announced that they are ready to negotiate a separate agreement in their own district but that they will refuse to meet the national miners' organization even tho the present contract pruvides for such a meeting.

In a statement issued by the southern Ohio operators it is declared that "the operators of southern Ohio cannot participate in such a (antional) conference but they will meet with the representatives of the min workers of this district at any time to discuss a wage scale and working conditions that are fair to the miners and operators of southern Ohio."



Capitalist Politician to Capitalist Judge (behind whom stands the capitalist himself): "Here is a worker who voted for us last year, Judge. I just brought him in to have those nice injunction and anti-strike shackles fitted."

IMPORTANT! May Day Demonstration

To All Locals and Branches of the Workers' Party:—

Dear Comrades:—The Central Executive Committee calls upon every local and branch of the party to at once get to work on their preparations for MAY DAY according to the following instructions. In cities where City Central Committees are organized and functioning the City Central Committee shall, of course, have full charge of all the plans and arrangements. Where there is no City Central Committee the branches must take up the work.

Read these instructions carefully and follow them closely:

1. The Executive Committee of the branch or local, as the case may be, shall at once address letters to each and every labor organization, both industrial and political, in the city, inviting them to send delegates to a conference for the purpose of organizing a "Joint May Day Committee" to arrange a May Day demonstration.

2. The local (or branch) shall elect its delegates to this conference and instruct them to advocate the following program for the May Day demonstration:

A united labor front on the following issues:

(a) Against the open shop and reduction of wages.
(b) Against industrial court laws and injunctions.
(c) Work or compensation at union wages for the unemployed.
(d) Release of class-war prisoners.
(e) Recognition of and trade with Soviet Russia.

3. The Workers Party delegates may agree to alterations or amendments to this program but must insist upon class-struggle issues.

4. The Workers Party delegates to the conference shall be instructed to stand for representation by all co-operating organizations on the speakers' list of the May Day meeting.

5. All locals and branches are called upon to at once order bundles of the special May Day edition of "The Worker" and other party papers.

THIS MAY DAY WILL BE A TEST OF THE WORKERS PARTY, SEE TO IT THAT YOU DO NOT FAIL IN YOUR DUTY.

Jailed Communist is Two Time Candidate

LONDON.—Albert Inkpin, the imprisoned Communist, sentenced to six months on account of a leaflet issued by the party while he was secretary, has been adopted as candidate for the Middlesex county council and also for the London county council. It is unusual that a candidate is nominated for two council elections.

Renewed agitation is beeing set on foot for the release of Guy Aldred, arrested last March and charged with the publication of "seditious" literature. Is trial, much delayed, did not take place until June, when he received the maximum sentence of 12 months imprisonment. Altho he had already been in prison for more than three months on remand, his sentence was made to date, not from the time of his arrest, but from June 21, so that he will actually have served 16 months at the time of his release.

Other political prisoners in this country are: John Maclean, 12 months; W. F. Robertson, four months; P. Clanville, six months; W. Winter, six months; Wilson, nine months, and Gibson, six months.

Omaha Workers Build Fighting Organization

(Special to the Worker.)

South Omaha, Neb., Feb. 15, 1922.

The packinghouse workers here, altho somewhat discouraged at the result of the recent strike, have not done the usual thing and allowed all organization work to stop because of a temporary defeat; instead they have adopted a practical policy designed to build up and strenghten the organization, to organize on strictly industrial lines and to make their union a real fighting instrument.

The District Council has asked that a convention of the international union be called within two months and the following resolution has been sent out for indorsement:

WHEREAS the recent strike has left our organization in a partly demoralized condition, and

Whereas it is necessary that immediate action be taken to safeguard the interests of the membership of our union, and

WHEREAS the policies and the direction of the affairs of our organization must be changed to meet and cope with the conditions now existing, be it therefore

RESOLVED by Local 41, in regular meeting assembled, that a call for an International Convention be submitted to the General Secretary-Treasurer as provided for in the International Constitution, and be it further

RESOLVED, that a copy of this call be sent to all Local Unions and District Councils, asking their approval and co-operation in calling for an International Convention, and be it further

RESOLVED, that Local 41 ask and request the various Local Unions and District Councils to ask that the International Convention be called within two months after the vote is taken and not be delayed the four months as designated by the Constitution, as the need of action is imperative, and the vote be taken as soon as possible, thus avoiding any unnecessary delay.

DISTRICT COUNCIL No. 5
Committee: CARPENTER,
BERGER,
WORZEL.

The official paper of the union, The Workmen's Advocate, has been merged with the Midwest Labor Lews and it is planned to give the publication active support and greatly increase its circulation, the members realizing the value of a fighting labor press.

The employers here are very much disappointed at the turn affairs have taken and it is now believed in labor circles that the strike has been a valuable lesson to the packinghouse workers; that because of it a real industrial organization is now in process of formation which will be of real service to its members.

Omaha is going to take its place on the labor map of the United States.

If the Bolsheviks are causing all the unrest in the various sections of the globe, as the capitalist press claims, they are the most industrious people in the world.

American Ambassadors are so popular abroad, as the recent incident in Bulgaria shows, that the State department is considering the erection of bomb-proof shelters for them.

The enthusiasm with which the Allies agreed to the Americans occupying the Rhineland does not extend to the payment for the same. France and England evidently want to eliminate the pay from occupation.

Income tax returns in Manhattan district have fallen off 45 per cent over last year. Quite a few people evidently forgot to take Schwab's advice to "smile and bring back prosperity."

To Raffle Kisses for Class-War Prisoners

The modesty of the Irish women is proverbial but at the last meeting of the Irish Branch the women decided to raffle off a kiss at the International Bazaar for the benefit of the class-war prisoners, March 22-25.

The decision was reached over the protests of the husbands and sweethearts present and it is expected that a neat sum will be realized from this source alone.

Prospective but doubtful purchasers of raffle tickets on the article will be supplied with samples for a dollar per and the Irish Branch guarantees to protect them from husbands whose sense of proprietorship is stronger than their loyalty to the victims of capitalist persecution. It is to the credit of the Irish Branch that it has but few members of this type.

The lucky individual who holds the winning ticket will be allowed to pick the donor of the priceless gift from the women members of the branch, all of whom are easy to look at.

The slogan for the night of the raffle, originated by the women comrades themselves, will be:

"The price of a kiss prepares the path to freedom!"

LABOR NOT VALUABLE CONSIDERATION

Since a contract between a union and employers "does not call for a valuable consideration," it may be broken with impunity, according to the ruling of Judge Lewis in the Minnesota photo-engravers' case.

The employers broke their contract with the photo-engravers, and the violation was so obvious that the workers were confident that an injunction reinstating the contract could be obtained.

Judge Lewis told the workers, however, that the contract was not a valid one, there being a lack of "mutuality" because a valuable consideration was not called for.

[illegible] "Orphans of the Storm"

By NORMAN BROOKS.

In his latest "stupendous" movie production, David Wark Griffith dishes up a rehash of Kate Claxton's old play, The Two Orphans, calls it Orphans of the Storm, puts a goodly dash of French revolution into it for sauce and then garnishes it with such cut-ins as, "Be satisfied with our own present decent law and order," counting on the fact that most of us don't know how our present decent law and order is working in Pawtucket, Rhode Island, where machine guns are turned on striking textile workers, and in the coal fields of West Virginia, where civil war has raged for two years.

There have been many plays built around this theme of the French revolution, but none so frankly and plainly propaganda against the working class as this one. Thruout the play the parallel is drawn between the French revolution and the present Russian one and a persistent note sounds out the seeming fact that Mr. Griffith fears a revolution in this country.

Artist tho he is supposed to be, Mr. Griffith trips up and turns a somersault when he tells us that the French revolution was born in the hearts of hoodlums and engineered by bums, but shows us brawny toil-developed bodies and serious faces at the head of things when the lazy, gluttonous aristocracy is overthrown by the hungry populace.

It may be that a mad French populace did revel in wine and women in the first days of their freedom but they were only taking turn about and copying for a while their masters. Have we not with us today the set that gives monkey dinners, parties and funerals for dogs and that pelt each other with American beauty roses and cold turkey while little children starve?

One couldn't help thinking of our own Leavenworth prison when Mr. Griffith had the revolutionists open the bastille and free the many innocent prisoners.

Until the workers cease attending plays just because their favorite stars appear in them and thus provide profits for propaganda against them, distortions of revolutionary aspirations like those in Orphans of the Storm will continue to be fed to the public.

A splendid parody could be written on this play by substituting present day conditions—not in far off France or Russia, but right here in America. But in that case, our department of justice, in the name of law and order, would take the place of the extinct czarist regime and raid the parodist's home and put him in jail.

A MASS STRUGGLE FOR A DECENT LIVELIHOOD

In the Pawtuxet Valley of Rhode Island, where there has never before been a strike and never much of a union, 8,000 men and women are in the third month of their strike

Against a 20 Per Cent Reduction of Wages

The average wage, under this cut, would be $17 for a week of 54 hours. Sanitary and social conditions in the Pawtuxet Valley are the most unhealthful and depressing in the United States. "Rhode Island is run by the textile manufacturers to suit their own purposes," says the New York World. (Feb. 25.) "The textile industry is in possession of the machinery of government."

The cotton manufacturers contend they can not continue to operate without reducing wages, but they have refused to submit their books to investigation, so that the truth about manufacturing costs may be discovered. They have rejected arbitration. "The public be damned," is their attitude. "Ours is a private business," is what they actually say.

Eight Thousand Strikers Say It Is THEIR Business and the Public's.

Will you help the strikers to make their idea the dominant one? Only HUNGER can defeat these aroused men and women. HUNGER is the ally of economic despotism.

Union Smashing in California

California is at present the storm-center of the struggle between the workers and the Better America Federation, a nation-wide organization which is carrying on a bitter campaign against organized labor under the camouflage of Americanization. In a recent interview one of the leaders of the movement made the following illuminating statement:

"While we are heartily in accord with the open shop, yet we have not concentrated on that matter . . . We have been too busy dealing with the so-called radical leaders of the labor movement. THE WAGE EARNERS THAT BELONG TO THE UNIONS ARE NOT ALL BAD, but their leaders are the ones to watch. WE HAVE MANY EARNERS WITHIN OUR ORGANIZATION, such as office workers, clerks in department stores, etc., who pay $1 per month for dues, and then there are others who contribute monthly toward our educational work."

Truly an inspiring portrait of the "good" worker! The purposes of the Better America Federation are given in eloquent terms in the constitution of the organization: "To oppose the development of class consciousness and the class domination of government, business or society. To demonstrate that the interests of employers and employees are mutual, and that the prosperity of both depends upon each accepting and adhering to the Golden Rule."

This is a very polite way of describing the peculiarly vicious type of open shop drive that the B. A. F. is carrying on. A variety of tactics are being employed in the campaign, for the B. A. F. believes in doing things thoroly. In addition to their attempt to smash the organizations of the workers, they are trying to develop a slave and scab psychology in the school children of the state, and here is some of the high-sounding bunk they are circulating in the public schools under the name of "educational work," with the help of the monthly dollar of the white-collar slaves:

"A determined, systematic effort, with lots of money back of it, is being made to break down our American system of government and to substitute for it a government something like Mr. Trotzky's in Russia.

"You have learned in school that our government in the United States is the best on earth. It is—but it is in danger. You students can help in the great fight that is being made against Communism, State Socialism, and all the other 'isms' of the agitators. If any one—man, woman, boy or girl—asks you to read radical books or magazines, IF THEY TELL YOU THAT THE HONEST ACQUIREMENT OF WEALTH IS A CRIME, IF THEY ENDEAVOR TO POISON YOUR MIND WITH CLASS HATRED, REPUDIATE THEM WITH ALL THE COURAGE OF A TRUE AMERICAN!"
